CONTROVERSY OVER SWIMMING STROKES

British Expert Condemns Trudgeon-Crawl—Alex Meffert Defends It.

T. F. Meynell, one of Great Britain's leading swimming experts, is the author of a recently published article in which he expresses skepticism regarding the value of the American developed trudgeon-crawl stroke, and attempts to prove its weak points. A controversy has sprung from the attack.

Mr. Meynell begins by criticising the style of his own countryman, J. H. Hatfield, who has adopted the new stroke and broken many records with it, including the world's record for one mile. Then he goes on:

"I want now to say a few words about the added crawl kick, which changes the leg drive of the trudgeon, with its well known scissor, into the advocated trudgeon-crawl action.

"It is admitted by Americans that the secret of success in any form of prolonged physical effort, such as distance swimming, is constant relaxation of the muscles between applications of power. In the plain trudgeon the legs are idle during the glide which follows the pull of the top arm, and a good chance is then afforded to relax and rest. If, however, the swimmer puts in at this moment a crawl kick, which requires energy, he cannot get the benefit of relaxation. That is why I am so dubious of the virtues of the trudgeon-crawl, though I acknowledge the pre-eminence of the true crawl for the short sprint."

These views were offered for comment to Alex Meffert, Manager of the Woolworth Bath, who was the all around national swimming champion in the late eighties, and has for twenty years been one of our most successful coaches.

"Meynell argues against himself," Meffert said yesterday, "when he tells of Hatfield's faults of action. If a certain stroke enables a swimmer to break world's records in spite of poor form, it is obviously superior to any other.

"Apart from the practical demonstrations we have had of the efficiency of the trudgeon-crawl in distance swimming, however, it may be pointed out that Meynell is absolutely wrong when he claims that the added crawl thrash affords no chance to relax. The first half of both upward and downward sweeps of the legs should be made with energy, the second half of both slowly, without muscular tension. In other words, there is ample opportunity to relax after each individual application of power.

"When all is said, it seems rather illogical to attempt to prove that the trudgeon-crawl is not available for distance swimming, in view of the fact that its exponents are using it successfully over Marathon courses."

RESTA LAUDS BAY TRACK.

Daring Italian Pronounces It Fastest Automobile Course in World.

Although he has not been permitted to test the course at high speed, Dario Resta, the daring Italian driver of racing automobiles, has pronounced the new wooden track of the Sheepshead Bay Motordrome the fastest in the world. Resta was allowed to take a spin on the track during the past week, but in view of the order issued by Manager Thompson prohibiting speed tests the Italian did not have a chance to climb the steep banks and throw open the speed clutch as he desired.

"Even with the trifling try-out I was permitted to make," declared Resta after his spin, "I am convinced that the Sheepshead Bay Speedway is the fastest motor race track in the world, and I am familiar with the Brooklands and Chicago courses. In fact, I do not believe that any racing cars in existence today are capable of approaching its full speed possibilities. I will go even further and say that new cars will have to be built before high enough speed can be attained to put to use the upper edge of the high, curved banking."

The entire two miles of smooth wooden surface of the track are now practically completed, and only a few stretches of steel framework on the outer edge remain uncovered by planking.

Manager Thompson is firm in his determination to prevent high-speed tests of the curved bank track until it is thrown open on Sept. 18 to the entrants in the 350-mile race on Oct. 2, and no one is permitted to enter the track without a pass. Those who are allowed on the course with machines are forbidden to indulge in anything faster than mere touring speed.

Since Barney Oldfield and Bob Burman made 110 miles an hour in practice at Chicago, automobile experts have figured that a speed of about two miles a minute should be attained at Sheepshead Bay in the elimination trials on Sept. 24, 25, and 26, and that the winner will have to maintain an average speed of more than 100 miles an hour for the 350-mile contest.

The progress in the construction of the grandstand has kept pace with that of the course itself. The steel framework of the double-deck grand stand has been erected for close to a thousand feet along the home stretch. The structure now towers high in air and is visible for a long distance. Even the spectators in the first tier of seats will be elevated so high that they will have an unbroken view of the race at every point and of the people in the great field below them. At the same time, directly before them will be the pits, presenting a lively spectacle of tire changing and fuel replenishing.

Preparations for the motor car parade to the speedway as a feature of the start of formal practice at the course are well under way. At a special meeting of the Motor Club of New York Directors this plan of showing the appreciation of automobile row of the building of the speedway was formally approved. President Toback appointed W. C. Poertner, E. C. J. McShane, and George Robertson as the club's committee in charge.

C. A. Major Connecticut Champion.

NORFOLK, Conn., Aug. 7.—C. A. Major of New York won the Connecticut tennis championship in singles by defeating A. J. Veysey of Hoosic Falls, N. Y., in straight sets on the courts of the Norfolk Country Club today. He also won a leg on the new Bridgman Cup, offered by Mrs. H. H. Bridgman. As F. C. Inman of New York, last year's winner, did not defend the title this year, having taken possession of the silver loving cup trophy last year, Major takes the title for a year and has one leg on the new trophy. In the contest, played after the courts had been dried out by the use of forty gallons of gasoline, Major found Veysey to be an easy opponent. The scores were 6—2, 6—3, 6—3.

YANKEES DEFEATED, THEN TIE BROWNS—GIANTS BEAT REDS—NEW AUTO RACING RECORD

YANKEES MUSS UP OUR NATIONAL GAME

Blunders and Indifference on Bases Prevent Them Winning Second Game.

The week-end festivities between the Yankees and the Browns at the Polo Grounds revealed the shocking state of affairs that the Yanks can play just as poorly and even worse than Branch Rickey's troupe. New York lost the first game 6 to 1, while the second contest was ended by darkness at the end of the tenth inning, with the score tewed up at 4 to 4.

In the second tilt the Yankees tossed away many rosy chances. Third base seemed hopelessly blocked like a subway tie-up, because when the Yanks reached third they were riveted to the bag. In the second inning Doc Cook fell into a deep slumber and missed a fine chance to score. Warhop did the same thing in the third inning. Carroll Brown was coaching at third, but he was also enjoying a nap.

Bill Donovan started to pitch the first game in the third inning, after the Browns had hammered Bob Shawkey hard. Donovan's fast ball was almost stationary. He didn't attempt to spring a slow ball on the enemy. The batting sensation of the afternoon was Jimmy Austin, who got five hits out of five times up in the first game, including a home run and a triple. He also got three hits in the second game.

Young George Sisler, Rickey's find from the University of Michigan, showed his versatility yesterday when he left first base for a while to go in to pitch. Sisler has all the earmarks of a smart ball player. He only pitched while another college "phenom" was warming up.

This young lefthander immediately won a nickname for himself when, with two men on the bases, he wound up and permitted them to steal standing up. His last name is Koob and he hails from a normal college in Kalamazoo. When he flourished his wind-up with men on the bases it was unanimously voted that Koob's first name was probably "Boob."

The Browns got a running start on Shawkey in the first game. With one down, Austin singled and Sisler was safe on Pipp's error. Pratt's rap sent Austin home and Pratt counted on Walker's triple. Howard's infield hit scored Walker. Severeid's single, Hamilton's sacrifice, and Austin's single gave the Browns another run in the second.

With Donovan pitching in the sixth, Shotton walked, stole second, and went to third on Alexander's error. Austin punched a home run to deep right centre for two more runs.

The Yankees could make no impression on Earl Hamilton's pitching. Earl was at his best and permitted no liberties whatever until the ninth. Then with one gone, Cree singled and scored on Dan Boone's double.

St. Louis scored in the first inning of the second game. Shotton doubled and Austin singled. Sisler's single scored Shotton, and after Pratt had sacrificed Austin scored on Walker's sacrifice fly. The Yankees began to creep up in the second. Pipp walked, and went to third on Cook's double. Barney's single scored Pipp. Cook went to third on James's error, but there he stayed, and absolutely refused to go homeward while two infield outs were being made.

A run in the sixth tied the score. Pipp walked, and was forced by Cook. Barney singled, and when Boone was batting, James tore the flesh on one of his fingers and had to retire. While Koob was warming up, Sisler pitched to Boone and Dan got a single, scoring Cook.

Barney made himself unusually conspicuous at this point by attempting to steal third base, when it was occupied. Barney was wrong if he thought that he was doing something new, for this very same thing was done once by John Anderson. It made Anderson famous.

With a whoop and a bang the Yanks grabbed two runs in the seventh and forged to the front. High got a pass and went to second on a wild pitch. Peck flied to Lavan, and Maisel died at first base. Pipp walked and stole second. Doc Cook came across with a blow to right centre, and High and Pipp scored.

St. Louis tied the score in the ninth. Lavan singled, and so did Agnew. Koob popped to Pipp, who threw wild to first base to try to get Agnew. The ball went to right field, while Lavan raced around the bases. Cook made another wild throw to second in returning the ball, and Lavan registered. The scores:

Tigers Take Two from Mackmen.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Aug. 7.—Detroit won two games from Philadelphia here today, the first, 4 to 1, and the second, 3 to 2, in ten innings. The visitors obtained their victory in the opening event by hard hitting and Coveleskie's good twirling. In the second game Dubuc and Wyckoff had a battle until the tenth inning, then, with one out, Dubuc singled and Vitt doubled, the former being run out on Bush's grounder, but Vitt reaching third and Bush second. On the squeeze play Cobb beat out a bunt and Vitt scored the deciding tally. The scores:

Indians Helpless at Boston.

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—Twice today the Red Sox defeated Cleveland, the scores being 2 to 0 and 6 to 2. Wood should have had a no-hit record in the first game, Cleveland's only safe rap being a scratch hit made possible by Janvrin's slow fielding. After the first inning of the second game Leonard did not allow a Cleveland runner to get to second base. Hits after passes accounted for most of the Red Sox runs in both games. Cady and O'Neil retired from the first contest with injuries. The scores:

MATTY SHOWS BEST FORM AGAINST REDS

"Big Six" Allows Five Hits, While Giants Bat Two Pitchers Out.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 7.—"Big Six" exercised his famous hoodoo over the Reds today. He beat Herzog's team 5 to 4, making it three out of four for McGraw's men in the series. Matty allowed the Reds only five hits, something unusual. Formerly he was always in the habit of kidding the Redleg aggregation along by allowing them to peck his offerings for a goodly number of safe drives, only to defeat them in the end.

With Mathewson back in his old-time form the Giants were full of confidence. They caused two Red hurlers to take to the cooling showers long before the contest was well under way. The third hurler to be brought forth from the Red stable stuck it through to the finish without allowing a Giant runner to dent the rubber. But the damage had been done and the Giants once more put themselves within hailing distance of the league-leading Philadelphias, who were blanked twice by the Pirates.

Herzog depended upon Pete Schneider to bring victory to the home folks, but Hersog picked the wrong man. Schneider was ineffective. Before he had been relieved the Giants had the game safely tucked away. Rube Benton, who does not seem to care whether he pitches in the National League or some bush aggregation, came to the mound in the fourth inning, and after giving an exhibition of as weird hurling as has ever been seen here, was withdrawn in favor of Lear, the latter holding the Giants in check until the end.

The Giants got off to a flying start, batting Schneider's delivery for three hits which, with a base on balls and an out, gave them three runs in the first inning. Burns greeted Schneider with a single. Snodgrass walked. Doyle sent a one-baser to right and Burns counted. Snodgrass taking third. Fletcher grounded out and Snodgrass scored. Merkle singled to centre and Doyle came across with the third run. Lobert popped to Groh and Merkle was caught napping at first base.

The Reds came back in their share of the same round and evened up the proceedings, getting three runs on one hit, a sacrifice, an error and a base on balls, the only pass issued by Matty during the afternoon. Groh walked as a starter. Herzog doubled to right, scoring Groh. Williams sacrificed. Meyers got the ball and threw wild to first, Herzog scoring and Williams going to third. Killifer struck out. Fletcher threw out Griffith, Williams coming across. Fletcher took care of Wingo.

A hit, a base on balls, an infield out and a sacrifice fly gave the Giants two runs and the game in the third inning. Snodgrass opened the third with a walk. Doyle doubled down the right foul line, Snodgrass stopping at third. Fletcher grounded to Herzog, Snodgrass scoring, and Doyle taking third. Doyle scored the run that won the game when Merkle flied to Williams. Lobert went out to Groh.

The fourth inning saw Rube Benton's exhibition of his famous style of hurling. He pitched to just three men and then gave way to King Lear, the former Princeton star. Benton started by walking Brainerd. Then he hit Chief Meyers. On Mathewson's sacrifice, Benton threw wild to third and the bases wert full with none out. It looked as if the Giants were in for a round of pleasure. But Herzog could stand the agony no longer. He withdrew Benton and sent in Lear. The change proved effective, for Burns forced Brainerd at the plate, and Snodgrass hit to Groh for a force out of Meyers and being thrown out at first.

The Reds scored their last tally in the ninth, when after Griffith was disposed of, Wingo reached second when Snodgrass muffed his fly, and scored on Wagner's single. The score:

Cubs Sweep Braves' Series.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—A timely triple by Cy Williams broke up the final game of the series here today, Chicago making a clean sweep of the series, 3 to 2, and winning their fifth straight game. With the score 2 to 0 against them in the last half of the ninth, Zimmerman singled to centre, Murray lined one at Tyler's shins which went for a single, and Williams followed with his triple to right, tying the score. Hughes supplanted Tyler and Archer fanned. McLarry was purposely passed, and on Standridge's perfect squeeze play Williams scored the winning run. Captain Evers, who was reinstated after his three-day suspension, scored both of the runs for the visitors. He walked in the first inning and scored later on a single by Magee. In the fifth Evers sacrificed and Connolly and Magee followed with hits. The score:

VARIOUS newspapers throughout the United States have reported that The Autocar Company's large increase in business since the beginning of the war is the result of war orders.

This is not true.

DODGERS BAT HARD, BUT CARDINALS DEFEAT THEM BY AN OLD TRICKY PLAY—TURF

WESTERN ATHLETES WIN A. A. U. MEET

Irish-American Team Lands Second Place in American Championships.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 7.—Athletes of the Olympic Club, San Francisco, won the senior A. A. U. track and field championship at the Panama-Pacific Exposition today. They scored 80 points, six more than the Irish-American Athletic Club of New York. The Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago was third with 21 points; the Chicago Athletic Association had 17; Kansas City A. C., 13; University of Wisconsin, 11; Los Angeles A. C., 10; Multnomah A. C., 10; New York A. C., 9, and University of Chicago, 7.

A huge crowd saw what was considered by track meet followers to be some of the most exciting finishes ever witnessed on a cinder path. With but few execptions the events were contested right up to the tape.

Both field and track men with the aid of a brisk wind, played fast and loose with world's records. Two were bettered and three equaled, while seven senior national A. A. U. figures were either equaled or shattered. None of the new marks will be allowed, however, because of the aid afforded by the wind.

The most sensational race of the day was the five-mile run, which was won by H. Kolehmainen of the Irish-American A. C. of New York, by less than a foot from Oliver Millard of the Olympic Club of this city. The summary:

220-Yard Hurdles.—Won by F. Murray, San Francisco Olympic Club; second, F. W. Kelly, Los Angeles A. C.; third, J. Loomis, Chicago A. C. Time—0:23 3-5. Equals world's record; not allowed; wind.

Phillies Shut Out Twice.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 7.—The Philadelphia Nationals suffered a setback today, being shut out by Pitsburgh in both games of a double-header, 9 to 0 and 6 to 0. FEDS PLAY FAST BALL.

Brooklyn and Chicago Break Even at Washington Park.

There was more interest in baseball at Washington Park yesterday afternoon than has been evidenced there in a long time. Some bright light in the Federal League discovered that the long-drawn-out game was far from being a blessing to the outlaw organization, and yesterday the Chicago and Brooklyn players conspired to hurry baseball along and have it keep pace with a consistent clock. It took just one hour and twenty minutes for the Brookfeds to trounce Chicago in the first game of a double-header by a score of 6 to 2, and in the second game Chicago forced things to a speedy conclusion, winning by a total of 4 to 2 in an hour and thirty-seven minutes. Umpire Arouses Newark Fans.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 7.—A sensational pitchers' battle between Packard and Reulbach ended in a near-riot today when Newark came from behind in the thirteenth inning, overcoming a two-run lead scored by the Packers in their half of the inning. Laporte forced Scheer at second base, and Goodwin claimed interference on the part of the baserunner, preventing a double play. Roush scored while Goodwin held the ball. Easterly attempted to strike Umpire Johnston, and the fans surged into the field, but hostilities ended there. Huhn's error, Shaw's single, Bradley's double, and Kruger's sacrifice scored the two Kansas City runs in the thirteenth. For Newark, McKechnie singled, Esmond doubled, and errors by Goodwin and Shaw, with Roush's daring baserunning, did the rest. Reulbach had thirteen assists. Perfect throws by Chadbourne and Scheer cut off runs at the plate early in the game. The score:

BALTIMORE, Aug. 7.—Baltimore won from St. Louis here today, 5 to 3, after having lost nine straight games. Chief Bender was hit hard at the start, but held the visitors safely after his team gave him a lead in the fifth. Owens's drive over the left field fence was the batting feature. Score:

Good Boxing at Broadway S. C.

Some interesting boxing was witnessed last night in the three ten-round bouts at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn. The main contest was between Terry Mitchell and Johnny Dohan. Brooklyn boxers, and at the final bell the former was entitled to the honors by a shade.

In the last ten-round contest Willie Brown, a featherweight boxer of the United States Navy, outpointed Young Monday of this city. The navy boxer did not extend himself to his limit until near the end of the contest, but in the ninth and tenth rounds he had Monday almost knocked out. Young Ketchel was substituted for Joe Goodney in the opening ten-round number—the latter failing to put in an appearance—and he was easily outpointed by Willie Jackson of Harlem.

COLT DISQUALIFIED AFTER EASY VICTORY

Saratoga Racegoers Blamed Another, but Trial by Jury's Jockey Is Suspended.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Delightful Summer weather, a high class card and materially improved track conditions contributed to the enjoyment of a very large and fashionable race going crowd here today. The sport was very seriously marred, though, by what was considered an unfortunate disqualification by the Stewards in connection with the running of a venerable classic, the Travers Stakes, which has more than half a century of turf history.

This race, which is at a mile and a quarter, was won in a gallop by Captain Cassatt's chestnut colt Trial by Jury, but to the utter astonishment of the big crowd present a protest was lodged against the winner and he was disqualified, Lady Rotha, which finished second, got the race, while Saratoga, the colt whose rider, Turner, was thought by many to be responsible for the mix-up, was moved up to second place. There had been some crowding right in front of the stand when the horses were racing through the first quarter, but it was generally thought that Trial by Jury, which was in very close quarters in the middle of the closely packed horses, was not in any way responsible for the jostling, while Saratoga, which was on the outside, had his neck bent like a crescent as Turner was pulling him over against the other horses. In the crush, Trial by Jury was forced over against Lady Rotha, which was bumped out of her stride while the Cassatt colt shot out of the crowd.

Trial by Jury then raced clear of the others and won by ten lengths, Lady Rotha finishing second a length before Saratoga, which in turn beat Iron Duke and Pan Maid. The Stewards also punished little Davies, who rode Trial by Jury, with a suspension of ten days.

The Sanford Memorial Stakes was won by the Western colt Bulse, which ran an impressive race, although carrying top weight, 127 pounds. Another Western colt, Marse Henry, finished second, and the filly Jacoba ran a close third. The North American Steeplechase Handicap was won by Weldship, with Compliment, an added starter from the stable of Joseph E. Widener, second and Knight of Merci, bearing the silks of F. Ambrose Clark, third. The other races were overnight events, and each brought about an interesting contest.

The summary:

FIRST RACE.—For three-year-olds and upward; selling; purse, $400; six furlongs. Time—1:17.

Dinah Do, J. O. Talbott's blk. f., by Burgomaster-Black Venus, 100 pounds, 13 to 10, 1 to 2, and out, (Garner.)....1
Forecast, 93, 9 to 2, 3 to 2, and 3 to 5, (Warscher.)....2
Brian Boru, 103, 12 to 1, 4 to 1, and 2 to 1, (Turner.)....3
Santo, Gallop, Blackthorn, and Saturnus also ran. Sarsenet scratched.

SECOND RACE.—North American Steeplechase; handicap; purse, $1,500; for three-year-olds and upward; about two miles. Time—4:22.

Parkway Driving Club Matinee.

Six of the eight races at the weekly matinee of the Parkway Driving Club at Parkway Track yesterday were decided in straight heats. Arawanna, the bay mare owned by W. H. Strang, Jr., of Brooklyn, won the third race—Class B trot—in 2:20¼, the fastest trotting time made on the track this season. She had no difficulty in winning straight heats. Her time for the second was 2:21½. The closest race was the Class A pace. Buster Brown won from Countess Kohl by a nose. The time for this first heat was 2:15¾, the fastest of the afternoon. May Tard, a post eqtry, won the Class D trot. The bay mare finished second in the first heat, but in the next two she won from Silver Forbes by a length. The fifth race—Class A trot—had no entries and was scratched.

Welling "Shades" Wolgast.

DULUTH, Aug. 7.—Joe Welling of Chicago earned a shade over Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, in a ten-round no-decision bout here last night. Welling was aggressive all the way through and closed Wolgast's eye in the sixth round.

BOYS PLAY 1 TO 0 GAME.

No-Hit-No-Run Contest Played in Public Playground League.

"There is nothing the matter with baseball" among the little fellows who find ther recreation in the public parks of the city. Just at present they are not thinking so much of Boston or Philadelphia or Pittsburgh as they are of the possible winner of the tournament of the Public Park Playgrounds League. When the tournament first started, early in the season, there were about 1,000 teams entered, but that total has been cut down now to seventy-five, playing in five sections of the city. In these sections there are five parks, and each has three teams, rated according to weight, 85, 105, and 120 pounds. When this series is over the final struggle for the championship will begin, and the last game in each of the classes will be played at Astor Field, 150th Street and Eighth Avenue.

The boys are playing good baseball, too, with low scores and frequent shutouts. In the matter of shutouts the 105-pound class leads. In a game in this class Krasick of West Fifty-ninth Street shut out Forty-fourth Street, 1 to 0, and allowed his opponents only two hits. But even that record gives way to the one that Santer of Central made when he pitched a no-hit-no-run game against the Yorkville Playground team, which Central won by a score of 1 to 0. In the 120-pound class, Morgan of East Sixty-seventh Street shut out the East Seventeenth Street Playground, allowing only one hit.

There are amusing incidents for the spectators, too. One happened a few days ago, when Teddy Carney, one of the best of the 85-pound players, hit out a home run and was called out for not batting in turn.

JERSEY CYCLIST LEADS.

Hamilton Rides 32 Miles in 30 Minutes, Winning Motordrome's Feature Race.

Before the biggest crowd of the season at the Brighton Beach Motordrome last night George Hamilton of Montclair captured the thirty-minute race, the feature of a long and interesting program. The daring New Jersey cyclist journeyed 32 miles and 2 laps in the half hour, winning by almost a third of a mile from Stephano Quaccinelli of Italy, with George Sperl of Brooklyn third to cross the finish line.

More than ten thousand persons saw Hamilton divide the honors of the meeting with Arthur Chappie, the kingpin of them all, and George Mercier of Brooklyn, who celebrated his return to the local track by winning two events. Chappie won two straight heats of a match race with Bill Brown of Newark. The first heat was cut from four miles to three because of the slippery condition of the track. The finish of the race was close. The second heat went but two miles, and it was only in the last ten yards that Chappie's machine showed in front. The time for the first heat was 2:04 and the second 1:27.

Mercier's first victory was recorded in a match race with Sam Henderson of New York, which he won in straight heats. His second came in the three-mile professional race, scored by the French point system. Mercier showed in front in the first and third heats, giving him a total of 10 points. Hamilton also had 10 points to his credit, but the honors went to Mercier because of his two first places. Quaccinelli was third and Sperl fourth.

$10,000 RACE EASILY WON.

Peter Scott Romps Away with Big Stake in Grand Circuit Event.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Aug. 7.—Peter Scott, driven by Murphy, romped away with the $10,000 Paper Mill Stake, which was the principal event of the Grand Circuit race meeting here today. Worthy Prince was unable to match his speed with that of Murphy's horse in the classic 2:08 trot, and it was decided in straight heats. The other events, however, furnished plenty of excitement.

In the Burdick Hotel 2:09 pace it was necessary for the contestants to go five heats before Geers won out with Russell Boy over Hal Boy, the even-up favorite. Russell Boy took the first two heats, but broke in the third and fourth. The fifth was a neck-and-neck affair to within fifty feet of the wire.

The 2:06 pace for the Park-American Hotel purse went five heats. Single G. won over Major Ong. The Indiana horse, which was a favorite, took the first two heats in driving finishes and broke on the back stretch in the third. He finished behind Major Ong in the fourth, but won out by half a length in the final heat. Bondella, the favorite, won the 2:21 trot in straight heats, with Todd McGregor second.

CANADIAN OARSMEN TRIUMPH

Capture Final Races at Royal Henley Regatta.

ST. CATHERINES, Ont., Aug. 7.—The Royal Canadian Henley Regatta was brought to a close today and the Argonaut and Don Rowing Clubs of Toronto, winners of yesterday's races, captured every race on the final day's program. Showers again kept down the attendance, but the spectators who did attend, saw the Canadians triumph over Vivian Nickalls's crew from the Undine Barge Club of Philadelphia, by a big margin in the senior eights.

Bob Dibble of the Don Rowing Club, champion single oarsman of the last two Henleys, easily won in the senior singles and retained his title. Butler of the Argonauts and Sheehan of the Celtic Club of Buffalo attempted to wrest the title from Dibble. Butler caught the water first, but he was nervous and his rowing splashed, while Dibble settled into a steady, even stroke that soon put him in front. Dibble won easily. Butler and Sheehan were on even terms at the half-way mark, but Sheehan had trouble in turning a buoy and dropped back, finishing five lengths back of Butler.

The Executive Committee in charge of the regatta has decided to give all the proceeds to the Red Cross Society.

Wells Outpoints Schaeffer.

A large crowd of boxing enthusiasts were at the Fairmont Athletic Club in the Bronx last night to witness the performance of Matt Wells, former holder of the lightweight championship of England, against Willie Schaeffer of the Bronx, in the main ten-round contest, and they were treated to an interesting exhibition. The English boxer displayed wonderful cleverness and at times made his opponent appear awkward, so that at the end of the tenth round he had a comfortable advantage. Schaeffer, however, was always willing and untiring in his efforts to land an effective blow, but Wells easily evaded the Bronx boxer's attempts.

Sailor Tommy Robinson and Johnny "Kid" Alberts, a middleweight boxer of Elizabeth, N. J., were the principals in the semi-final ten-round contest, and honors were about even at the finish. Alberts was the aggressor throughout, but Robinson evened the score by his cleverness.

OLD-TIME TRICK DEFEATS DODGERS

Appleton Tosses Ball to Huggins in Coacher's Box and Winning Run Scores.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 7.—A trick which was obsolete when Father Time was a boy, and resurrected by "Diamond Jack" O'Connor years ago and then forgotten again, enabled the Cardinals to defeat Brooklyn this afternoon, 6 to 4.

"Rabbit" Huggins, who recently read of the play in dust-covered baseball literature, was the man who put it into execution. Appleton, on the rubber for Brooklyn, took the tragical part of the "goat." He deserves sympathy rather than censure. Anyone so unschooled in baseball tactics as to fall for the ancient trick is to be pitied.

It all happened in the seventh. The score was tied, 4 to 4, the bases were full for St. Louis, and Appleton was just glancing around preparatory to winding up. Little Huggins had a sudden hunch.

"Let me see the ball," he seemed to say to Appleton, as he beckoned to him.

Always obliging, Appleton made the toss and Huggins stepped to one side, letting the ball roll to the grandstand. Miller scored on the pitch, and each of the other base-runners moved up a bag.

"Wheezer" Dell started in for Brooklyn, but was withdrawn at the end of the second after the Cardinals landed on him for three runs. Two were on bases when "Ham" Hyatt poled a long hit over the right field fence and brought in three runs. In the fifth inning Hyatt put another one over right field fence, but this time it was foul by a yard.

The Cardinals used up Robinson, Meadows, and Sallee in their effort to win. Every time Brooklyn began batting a pitcher, he would be relieved, a system that proved effective.

The Superbas started scoring in the second when Cutshaw singled, Stengel did likewise and Getz made it three straight. On Dolan's error, Cutshaw scored, Stengel reaching third. O. Miller's fly to Long scored Stengel.

Another run came in the fourth when Cutshaw started his second personally conducted rally with a single. Stengel doubled, scoring Cutshaw, and Meadows went in the box for St. Louis.

In the sixth Stengel singled, Getz flied to Long and O. Miller tripled, scoring Stengel. It will be noticed that

USEFUL HINTS FOR GOLFERS—MARSTON TAKES MOHAWK TITLE FROM TIFFANY—LAWN TENNIS

GOLF ANALYZED AND SIMPLIFIED

The following three articles on golf are part of a series which began in last Sunday's TIMES. The object of these articles is to explain in simple, easily understood form from advice by such experts as Vardon, Travers, Braid, Taylor, Ouimet, Ray and Duncan the very points which every golfer, young or old, should know.

Articles 1 and 2 dealt with the grip as exemplified by Harry Vardon. The following articles on "the stance" include 3, 4, and 5 of the series:

Nos. 3, 4, and 5—The Stance.

Having established a connection between player and club, the next fundamental is to establish a correct relation between the player, club, and ball. This is done by standing in a way which will permit the delivering of the most powerful stroke possible, and at the same time keep the club head in the right track to make the ball travel in the direction we want it to go.

This is called the 'stance," a Scotch word meaning stand, one of the many Scotch words which have become recognized golfing terms.

To illustrate the correct stance for the swing which will be described, photographs of Vardon and Braid have been used, showing them "addressing" the ball preparatory to driving.

The lines on the ground were placed after they had assumed the stance, the one across and in front of the feet indicating the line of play, i. e., the flight of the ball; the one from the ball, passing between the feet and crossing the first at an exact angle, shows how much the ball is to the right and left of the feet.

These lines show the exact relation of the feet to the line of play and the ball—very important elements to what follows.

The terms "open stance," "square stance," &c., will not be used.

The right toe touches the line across the feet and the left toe is about three inches back of it. The right foot is almost at a right angle to the line, slightly back of an exact right angle. The left toe is pointing toward the hole at an angle of about 45 degrees. It is not a matter of extreme importance, as it will vary with the height of the player and the length of the club shaft, but the distance from the line across the feet to the ball, in the case of Braid, Vardon, and Taylor, is about thirty inches, maybe slightly more or less, but not much.

To show how the position of the feet, as illustrated in the previous two articles, starts the "body twist" in the golf stroke, it is well to explain a curious fact, one which does not seem to have occurred to any one else.

While the ball does not appear to be in front of the centre of the body and midway between the feet, and is not, so far as the line of play is concerned, it is in fact almost in front of the centre of the body and midway between the feet.

To understand this point—and it is quite important to realize the reason for a thing in order to practice it with faith and confidence—place a ball and the lines as shown in the stance photographs. Without moving the feet in the slightest degree, stand up straight, and, wholly disregarding the line of play, face as you would ordinarily, with the feet in this position. You will discover two very curious facts; first, your feet are in a perfectly natural position, both toes turned out as you would ordinarily stand and you are facing to the left of the position you assumed in addressing the ball. Second, the ball is now opposite the centre of the body and midway between the feet.

To assume the position shown, place lines as in the photograph, place the feet in the position shown, standing perfectly straight, with the weight equally disposed on the feet. Place the club head back of the ball, with the face at right angles to the line of play, bending from the waist only; bend the head slightly forward of the angle of inclination of the body (this will prevent stiffness of the neck and assist in keeping the head still during the swing), relax the knees slightly, but do not stoop or crouch.

The weight is not allowed to go forward on to the forepart of the feet, but is kept evenly on them.

The arms are not held stiffly, but slightly relaxed at the elbows; no stiffness or restraint must be felt in any part of the body; all must be supple and ready to respond to every motion made in swinging the club.

Do not try to get the weight on the right foot or the left. Let them carry the weight as it will naturally adjust itself. You will then find yourself in the position illustrated, with the right shoulder lower than the left, due to the right hand being lower on the shaft than the left, just so much and no more.

There will be no effort to get the right shoulder down, nor will there be any crouching. Everything will be natural and easy, as is every part of the golf stroke, as analyzed.

It is the naturalness of the way these men approach the matter which gives them their ability to apply power to the stroke and do everything in its natural order, without conscious effort—automatically, so far as the body is concerned.

The hands will be slightly to the left of the centre of the body, to allow the face of the club to be held at right angles to the line of play.

There is sound reason, in fact two principal reasons, for placing the feet in this position and not square to the line across the feet, with both toes touching it and with the ball midway between.

First, it minimizes the necessary departure of the club head from the line of flight in going back and around the body, but more especially it induces, in fact starts, the "body twist" without which very little power can be put into the stroke. All the great players insist on this twist of the body, lay great stress on it, and say the player "must do it."

To more fully show this, and it is considered of the very utmost importance, the accompanying diagram is shown. This diagram was carefully prepared, by taking the stance used by Vardon and Braid, and a driver with a forty-two and a half-inch shaft. The left toe was three inches back of the line, showing the direction of the play, the right toe touched it.

The left heel was three inches to the left of the line from the ball and the right fourteen inches to the right of this line. The feet were placed at the angles which have been explained.

A diagram showing the position of Braid's and Vardon's feet at the address and their relation to the ball and line of play.

The ball was thirty-one inches in front of the line across the feet.

Without moving the feet in the slightest, the lines were shifted, as indicated by the dotted lines in the diagram, the line from the ball again crossing the other at an exact right angle, passed almost exactly under the centre of the body and midway between the feet. This would seem to conclusively prove this contention.

While this diagram is submitted as a matter of interest and importance, it is not to be understood as even suggesting any measurements in taking a stance to drive a golf ball, or in making any mathematical calculations in regard to it.

It is shown for the purpose of proving that the great golfers, consciously or unconsciously, are mathematically correct in their stance, and thus get the greatest "leverage" into their strokes. They have, most probably, found this stance by a process of elimination, experimenting until a position of greatest power was found. But it is interesting to know why it is so.

Golfers Play for Dr. Butler Prizes.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 7.—The largest list of players ever entered in a single tournament at the Newport Golf Club was playing in the handicap against bogey for the prizes offered by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler this afternoon. There were forty-eight men and thirty-three women on the course. The prize for the men was won by I. Townsend Burden, who had the score of 1 up against bogey. The woman's prize was not awarded because of a tie between Mrs. W. Earl Dodge and Mrs. Weldgil Blagden of New York, guest of Mrs. August Belmont. They had scores of 4 down, and the tie will be played off later. On Wednesday there is to be a mixed foursome handicap against bogey for prizes offered by Ogden Mills. George I. Scott, who goes to the military camp at Plattsburg, has appointed Paulding Foedick his successor as Chairman of the Greens Committee during his absence.

Golf for Women at Fox Hills.

The Tournament Committee of the Fox Hills Golf Club has set aside Tuesday, Oct. 19, as a date for a one-day tournament for the members of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association. This will be the second women's tournament ever held at Fox Hills. The first, held a number of years ago, was won by Mrs. Charles T. Stout. There will be a number of competitions this year and a large array of prizes. The feature event, of course, will be the eighteen-hole handicap, for which there will be a prize for the low gross and two low net prizes. There will also be a prize for the member of the Fox Hills Club making the low net score, as well as one for the member with the low gross. In addition, there will be a prize for the golfer breaking the women's record of the course. It is also intended to have an approaching and putting contest. No player will be permitted to win more than one prize.

Boyd of New York, 2 up and 1 to play. The medal scores differed by one stroke, Mrs. Fredenburg obtaining 113 and Mrs. Boyd 114. Mrs. Henry Nevins of Brooklyn, headed the second eight, as a result of a victory over Miss [illegible] of Winchester. The score was 6 and 5.

MAX MARSTON TAKES MOHAWK TOURNEY

Baltusrol Golfer Defeats Tiffany, One Up, in Final at Schenectady Club.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Playing poor golf over a heavy course, Maxwell R. Marston of Baltusrol defeated Gilman P. Tiffany of Mohawk 1 up this afternoon in the final 36-hole match of the Mohawk Golf Club's tournament. With 73 as par, the best card either returned during the day's play was 80. Tiffany showed his best form during the last nine holes, when with 3 down and 6 to go, he won three successive holes with strokes of par for two and one less than par for the other. Marston led Tiffany 2 up on the first half of the match. But for a technical penalty of a stroke, through Tiffany's caddie stepping on his ball, Tiffany would have been but 1 down.

Tiffany lost the first hole when he drove into a trap. Marston hooked his drive, but laid his second on the green. The second was halved, Tiffany laying his approach dead. Marston had a short putt for a 4 at the third, but missed it, so it was halved in 5. The fourth was a poor half in 5. Marston doubtless would have won it, but mud on his ball upset his putt. Laying himself a stymie cost Tiffany the fifth hole.

Tiffany won the sixth by a fine approach, while Marston was trapped on his second shot. The seventh was the same thing over, except that Marston's difficulty was in the road. The players were all square on the eighth, which was halved. Tiffany won the ninth 4 and 6, although he drove into a pit. Marston was in trouble on his next, but in escaping he lofted into a thicket beyond the green. Tiffany was 1 up on first nine. Tiffany lost the tenth by missing a short putt and squared the match. He also lost the eleventh, when he got into a bunker.

The twelfth was halved and the thirteenth would also have been halved but for the penalty on the caddie. The fourteenth was another good half, Tiffany's ball dropping in after hesitating on the cup. Marston lost the fifteenth when he took two shots to escape from a deep pocket, just over the green. Tiffany was in the next pocket but escaped in one. A mussed putt cost Marston the sixteenth hole and the match was again squared. Poor direction, followed by a poor putt, cost Tiffany the seventeenth, while at the home green he slipped up on a short putt. Marston took the nineteenth, which made him three up on the start of the second eighteen holes.

On the next four holes, Tiffany played equal to par and squared matters. The best Marston could do was to halve the twenty-second hole. In the next four holes Marston's playing improved and he took three holes with strokes equal to par, thus giving him three up at the start of the last nine holes. Tiffany began a rally on the thirty-first green, netting him the next three holes and squaring the match. Marston showed signs of fatigue, his customary long drives lacking the former snap. Tiffany lost the thirty-fourth, when Marston found the cup on two drives and two putts, while he was taking three strokes to reach the green. The next two were halved, giving Marston the match, 1 up. The scores:

WOMEN'S NATIONAL GOLF.

Championship Matches Begin Sept. 6 in Chicago—Many to Play.

The officials of the United States Golf Association yesterday announced the program for the women's national championship to be held in Chicago, and while it is rather premature to forecast the size and quality of the field, all predictions point to plenty of class.

Miss Vera Ramsay, the Englishwoman who won the Massachusetts tournament early in the year, is one who has announced her intention of trying for the more important title. It may be that her decision to compete will scare off some other women, although at the United States Golf Association's headquarters the belief is entertained that the Eastern States will be well represented. However, unless precedent is disregarded, more than nine-tenths of the field will be made up of Western players.

The winner of the approaching competition will gain possession of the Robert Cox Cup, to be held for one year, and also of a gold medal. The runner-up will receive a silver medal, while the other semi-finalists will be awarded bronze medals.

ON NEAR-BY GOLF COURSES.

Play for Officers' Cups at Deal—Qualifiers at Montclair.

J. C. Lyons won the Vice President's Cup on the links of the Deal Golf and Country Club yesterday, defeating W. F. Albertson, 2 up and 1 to play, in the final round. In the decisive test for the Treasurer's trophy F. F. Widener, Jr., defeated C. A. Whalen by a 4 and 3 margin. The handicap against par was won by R. A. Proal, who finished 2 down. That was in Class A, the contest in the B division resulting in a tie between F. M. Widener, Jr., and R. F. Porter, both of whom finished 3 down. A number of first-round matches for the Shanley Memorial Cup were also decided.

The summary follows:

Class A Handicap Against Par.—P. A. Proal, 82, 8, 2 down; J. P. Gillespie, 89, 9, 4 down; J. Stanley Griffiths, 88, 8, 3 down; E. W. Cone, 95, 14, 7 down; Paul E. Heller, 95, 12, 7 down.

Close finishes were in order in an eighteen-hole sweepstakes over the links of the Country Club of Glen Ridge yesterday. No attempt was made to divide the field into classes, and when the last card had been handed in it was found that Frank Connell, with 87, 14—73, had won the major portion of the sweep. Lacrosse Sticks in War.

"Lacrosse players will be interested to learn that some of the Canadian troops at the front use lacrosse sticks for throwing hand grenades into the German trenches, and are able in this way to throw them further, more accurately, and with less risk than otherwise," according to The London Daily Chronicle. "This constitutes a strong tribute to the practical value of a game which has out-distanced all others in Canada," the paper continues. "It originated among the American Indians, and the first printed description of a lacrosse match occurs in Major R. M. Pike's 'Account of Expeditions to the Sources of the Mississippi,' published 1810. The contesting teams were drawn from the Sioux tribe and the Fuxx tribe, some thousands of dollars being wagered on the game. 'When a player finds himself too closely pursued,' writes Pike, 'he hurls the ball with great force and dexterity to an amazing distance.'"

BJURSTEDT-BUNDY MATCH IS PROPOSED

Present and Past Holders of Women's National Tennis Title May Play.

Eastern tennis enthusiasts are very much interested over the probability of a match between Mrs. Thomas C. Bundy, formerly May Sutton, ex-champion, and Miss Molla Bjurstedt of Norway, present title holder. If the match can be arranged it will be played either just before or subsequent to the national championships, which begin Aug. 30 at Forest Hills. Thomas C. Bundy, joint holder of the national doubles title, with Maurice E. McLoughlin is expected East shortly to begin final preparation to defend his title. It is understood that Mrs. Bundy will accompany her husband, in which event she may enter an Eastern tournament for women or take part in an invitation affair in order to test her skill against the young Norwegian expert.

The retirement of Mrs. Bundy from active competition was regretted by all tennis players and the phenomenal rise of Miss Bjurstedt, the new tennis star, has created a desire to see these two great exponents in opposite courts. Miss Bjurstedt holds both the national indoor and outdoor championships, and an exhibition between the pair would probably attract a bigger gallery than the final round of the men's championship.

The return to active competition of Mrs. Bundy, who enjoyed an international reputation before her marriage to Thomas C. Bundy of California, has aroused keen interest in tennis circles. In her first public appearance since her marriage she won the championship of Southern California, defeating, among others, Mrs. R. L. Williams of California and Miss Mary Browne, former champion, who sustained her first defeat in three years. Mrs. Bundy followed this victory by beating her sister, Florence, for the title. All these victories were in straight sets. Mrs. Bundy has decided to enter all tournaments this season, in the effort to regain the championship, now held by the Norwegian girl.

Mrs. Bundy won her first national championship at Philadelphia in 1904, and in 1905 and 1907 the world's championship in England. In 1912 she married "Tom" Bundy, and shortly after this interesting event announced her permanent retirement from tennis. Miss Browne was the next champion, but she failed to defend her title this year. A few months ago Mrs. Bundy's friends induced her to again enter the lists.

HALL DEFEATS MAN.

Seventh Regiment Tennis Star Wins Place in Edgemere Club Final.

Walter Merrill Hall, the Seventh Regiment star, reached the final round of the men's singles tennis tournament of the Edgemere Club yesterday on the clay courts at Edgemere, L. I. Hall defeated Alrick H. Man, Jr., formerly of Yale, in straight sets, at 6—1, 6—3, and will play the winner of the Vanderbilt B. Ward-H. Tallant match this afternoon.

The struggle in the upper brackets of the semi-final round was a lively one, despite the fact that Hall relatively outclassed his plucky adversary. The military player made good use of his lengthy drives, and surprised the big gallery with his cleverness. He was aggressive, and his success after the first set emboldened him to take all sorts of desperate chances at the net. Hall's game was steady rather than brilliant, but he did not let up in his attack from the start.

Man played far below his form. At times his speedy drives skimmed the top of the net, but Hall took them on the full volley and placed them accurately in the openings in his opponent's court. The former Yale star failed to follow his service to the net. He found himself bungling the returns at critical times, which he found to be expensive in the end. He made a much better showing in the second set, but even with his improvement he was no match for Hall. The summary:

Edgemere Challenge Cup.—Men's Singles, Semi-Final Round—Walter Merrill Hall defeated Alrick H. Man, Jr., 6—1, 6—3.

Record at Cricket.

A record for the smallest score by eleven players was recently made at Eastbourne, England, where an interdivisional league cricket game was played between convalescent soldiers at Summerdown Camp. E division batted first, declaring their innings closed after scoring 172 runs for 8 wickets, due principally to a fine not-out innings of 72 by a player named Smith. All B division could do in response was to total 1 run, Smith again being very much in evidence by capturing 7 wickets for the only run scored.

PUBLIC PARKS TENNIS.

Russell Brown of Central Park Singles Champion—Doubles Today.

Russell Brown won the singles championship of the Public Parks Lawn Tennis Association yesterday, and the silver cup offered by The World.

In the final match of the singles tournament with its thousand competitors, the Central Park title holder defeated Louis Oshman, Crotona Park champion, 6—1, 6—2, 5—7, 6—4. It was a well-fought contest, the games tally standing 23 to 14, with the points 133 to 106.

Before the singles finalists played Oshman defeated H. R. Dulberger, the McComb's Dam Park champion, in the third round; 6—2, 6—2. Brown defeated Francis W. Hopkins, Jr., Van Cortlandt Park champion, 6—0, 6—0. Oshman took his semi-final by the default of Jesse C. Fishel, Prospect Park winner.

By moving quickly to the net to intercept the reply to service, Brown took the first game at love. By steady volleying, varied by an occasional smash and drive, the Central Park player moved through the first set easily, Oshman scoring only in the fourth game. Surpassed at driving, Oshman attempted a toss in the second set, thus winning first game. Then Brown outlobbed his rival in the next four games.

In the third set the Crotona champion mixed up lobbing and smashing. He had his opponent on the defensive in this set, finally winning after Brown had led at 5—4. He tried the same tactics in the fourth set. Brown played his backhanders into action, and by keeping Oshman on the run, tired him out. Brown split the lines in this set, placing with accuracy. He timed his strokes well, Oshman losing the final point by lobbing out of court after bringing off a sensational recovery.

Roy Kriss and Edward Gordon won the fifth set of their unfinished match from Jack and Louis Joffre for the Central Park honors, the score standing 6—6, 6—1, 5—7, 6—3, 6—4. A wait of two hours for a missing player caused Jesse C. Fishel, to default in the singles. Paired with Joseph Rooney, he won the Prospect Park doubles title, defeating L. A. Sheridan and M. Rubenstein, 6—3, 6—4. Following up this victory, the Prospect Park champions met Leon Berman and Eli Gottlieb, the Bronx Park winners, for the place in the semi-final, winning at 6—3, 6—4.

In the semi-finals in doubles Kriss and Gordon defeated I. Enklewitz and H. Berkowitz, Claremont Park champions, 6—3, 4—6, 6—2. C. Montrose and E. Beisel, Sunset Park winners, came through to the other bracket in the same round by defeating Jack Mulligan and Charles Bazzoni of Van Cortlandt, 10—8, 9—7.

The clash of the Central Park champions and the Sunset Park pair in the semi-final was a succession of brilliantly fought rallies. The perfect teamwork of Kriss and Gordon was the deciding factor. They won at 6—2, 6—2, and will play for the Parks Association titles this afternoon.

Jesse C. Fishel and Joseph Rooney, Prospect Park champions, will play Louis Oshman and Max Rettig of Crotona Park in Central Park at 10:30 this morning for the right to meet Roy Kriss and Edward Gordon of Central Park in the finals.

TENNIS CHAMPION AT 60.

Silas Lottridge Beats Rutgers College Summer Students in Match.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Aug. 6.—Silas Lottridge of East Orange, 60 years "young" and one of the spryest students in the Rutgers College Summer School, won the tennis championship of the session today by defeating Lansing Shield of Highland Park, one of Rutgers College's champion players, in three straight sets in the final round of the championship tournament. The scores were 6—1, 6—3, 6—4.

Lottridge displayed some of the finest tennis that has been seen here in a long time, and Shield never had a chance with the old gentleman. The champion relied mostly on long shots from the back of the court and won most of his points by placing the ball out of his opponent's reach, but the latter was quick to seize any advantage that was offered him and played a fast, smashing net game when occasion offered.

The speed shown by Lottridge in the early part of the game had his opponent bewildered at first, as he had not shown anything of the sort in the previous matches of the tournament. It was this ability to change his pace at a moment's notice that gave Lottridge a big advantage.

Lottridge has shown remarkable ability throughout the tournament. He defeated Richardson, captain of the Rutgers College tennis team, in the preliminary round of the tournament, 6—4, 6—3, and also defeated Childs and Wells of the Rutgers team. He considers his age a pretty strong argument against the Osler chloroform theory.

POSTPONE WESTERN TENNIS

Rainstorm Stops Final Round for Doubles Championship.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Rain caused a postponement until Monday of the final match for the Western Tennis Association championship in men's doubles. Earlier in the day Heath Byford and Alex Squair won their way into the final round by defeating Hal Gifford and M. G. Ketchum, 6—3, 9—7, 6—1, in the semi-finals, and Walter Hayes and Ralph Burdick earned the right to play Byford and Squair by defeating Jerry Weber and Al Green, 6—2, 4—6, 6—2, 8—6.

The final round was just about to start when a heavy storm broke, forcing the postponement of the match and numerous others. The summaries:

Men's Singles.—Fifth Round—Joseph J. Armstrong, St. Paul, defaulted to Walter Hayes, Chicago; G. M. Church, Tenafly, N. J., defeated John C. Neely, Chicago, 6—1, 6—0.

Men's Doubles.—Semi-final Round—Heath Byford and Alex Squair, Chicago, defeated H. G. Gifford and M. G. Ketchum, Chicago, 6—3, 9—7, 6—1; Walter T. Hayes and Ralph Burdick, Chicago, defeated Al Green and Jerry Weber, Chicago, 6—2, 4—6, 6—2, 8—6.

Walkers on Hike to Buffalo.

Three members of the American Walkers' Association started from Times Square at a minute past 12 last night on a hike to Buffalo. They are Frank Gage, Gilbert Swartz, and William Probst, and they will be accompanied for the first twelve hours by P. J. Hughes and H. Haisser, two Pastime A. C. walkers.

The walkers expect to make the trip in nine days and, with favorable weather conditions, they may be able to make it in eight days, they believe. The distance is 444 miles. Edward Payson Weston's time for the same distance is thirteen days, twelve hours. The first stop of this morning was to be at Ossining.

TWO HUNDRED ENTER NATIONAL TOURNEY

Tennis Followers Hope Williams and McLoughlin Will Again Play for Title.

With the completion of the Longwood singles tournament at Brookline, near Boston, the leading tennis players of the country will enter on the final three weeks of high-class tournament competition in preparation for the national championships, which will be held at the West Side Tennis Club, Forest Hills, Aug. 30. Three invitation tournaments act as preliminaries to the blue ribbon event, the first taking place this week at Seabright, N. J., the second at Newport, R. I., next week and the third at the Meadow Club, Southampton, L. I., during the week of Aug. 23.

On the result of these tournaments the final ranking of the players largely depends, for the Ranking Committee will not consider a player, who has not competed in two or more of the important tournaments in addition to the national event. The three preliminaries should supply a fairly accurate basis of comparison for selecting the leading contenders for the United States title.

The Achelis cup will bring out the best efforts of the season's stars this week on the courts of the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club. National Champion R. Norris Williams, 2d, expects to defend the trophy, but is likely to have a desperate

RESOLUTE FIRST IN MARBLEHEAD RACE

Cup Racer Gets Revenge for Defeat by Vanitie—Yachts Navigate New Canal.

Special to The New York Times.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., Aug. 7.—Resolute got revenge for her defeat by Vanitie on Friday in today's run to this port over a course of about thirty-two miles from Rocky Point, near Plymouth, to Half Way Rock at the entrance to Marblehead Harbor. Resolute's victory today was by 20 minutes 18 seconds, finishing the run in 5 hours 56 minutes 10 seconds, corrected time. Vanitie required 6 hours 16 minutes 38 seconds for the run.

When the race started there was a north by east wind, so very light that the yachts could make but little headway against it. They had, therefore, a beat to windward for the early stages of the race. Both carried baby jib topsails and got away on the port tack, which took them off shore to woo what little breeze there was.

The start was made at 11:10, the boats racing for the Commodore Baker Cups getting under way at five-minute intervals thereafter. All threescore of competitors were on the starboard tack, with the exception of Carolina and Iroquois of the fifty-foot class of sloops, which were headed off shore. They moved even more slowly than the two defenders. Resolute footed a trifle faster than Vanitie in the light, puffy wind prevailing, and at the end of a half hour had secured a lead which Vanitie was never able to overcome.

After a tantalizing run of about two-thirds of the distance, a freshening southeast wind set in and the prospect of finishing the run before sunset brightened perceptibly. Ten minutes later the wind had set in so strong that the racers were able to break out their spinnakers for a run before the wind to the finish line. That finish made a charming marine picture for the flotilla of 100 sailing yachts and some 95 steam yachts which were in the harbor to welcome the visiting squadron, even though Vanitie was so far behind.

In the race for the Commodore's Cup W. Earl Dodge's Samuri won the cup for sloops, the time of the several contestants being: Samuri, 6:21:23; Grayling, 6:22:35; Carolina, 6:26:02; Ventura, 6:28:39; Spartan, 6:28:47; Iroquis, 6:35:12, and Barbara, 6:35:47. Samuri, by winning today both the Commodore's Cup and that for the division, annexed six cups since the cruise started, and her owner is tonight quite the most envied man in the fleet.

E. Walter Charles's Irolita won the Commodore's Cup in the class for the big schooners, the corrected time for those finishing being: Irolita, 5:26:18; Vagrant, 5:51:34; Katrina, 5:55:36, and Enchantress, 5:57:11.

The winner of the Commodore's Cup in the second division of sloops was Ogden M. Reid's thirty-footer Lena. She defeated the Silhouette by 6 minutes 20 seconds. The winner in the schooner class, second division, was Mendon Chubb's Queen Mab. She defeated the Hopewell by 14 minutes 2 seconds.

Marblehead is in gala dress tonight, there being nearly 200 yachts in the harbor, and all are illuminated. The hills surrounding the sides of the harbor are crowded with people. On one of these hills there is a brilliant display of fireworks, and on another a band concert is in progress. Altogether it has been the pleasantest and most picturesque finish of any one of the days' runs.

For the first time since the squadron of the New York Yacht Club assembled at the rendezvous at New London on Tuesday last the sailors saw the sunshine yesterday afternoon and today for the first time had a taste of real Summer weather. When the signals sounded for the harbor start of the trip through Cape Cod Canal this morning, Buzzards Bay, where the fleet was at anchor, was shrouded in fog. Every one was stirring before 5 o'clock, the start being set for 5:45 for the first trip of a fleet of pleasure vessels through the eight-mile-long ditch which connects the waters of Vineyard Sound with those of Massachusetts Bay.

Commander Jacob W. Miller, General Manager of the canal, was in a launch off the Administration building to extend greetings and welcome to Commodore George F. Baker, Jr., and the other flag officers of the fleet.

The honor of being first through the canal was extended to the Cup defender Vanitie, now under charge of ex-Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt. The big single sticker was in tow of the canal tug Juno. She was followed by the tug Orion, which had the Resolute and her tender, Queen, in tow. Next came Commodore G. F. Baker, Jr.'s, steamer Viking, which was towing the sloops Ventura, Iroquois, and Grayling of the class of fifties. Vice Commodore J. P. Morgan followed with Corsair, which had the schooners Elena and Enchantress in tow.

Ex-Commodore Bourne was next in line, his big steamer Alberta, towing the schooners Endymion and Vagrant, the latter carrying the signal of Rear Commodore Harold S. Vanderbilt. The Oneida of ex-Commodore E. C. Benedict was without a tow. Her owner was on the bridge, however, as were the owners of all the steamers. After these followed steam and sailing craft of various sizes, all the latter in tow, the squadron numbering some seventy-five, besides the small motor craft and tugs.

In spite of fog and penetrating drizzle, the high banks on either side of the canal were lined with people out to see the unusual sight and trying to get snapshots of the cup defenders and the Corsair, the three vessels in the fleet best known to the cranberry boggers of the Cape, and their Summer visitors. The passage was made without accident or incident of note, as none of the craft had trouble in making the trip. It was floodtide, which was the reason for selecting the early hour for the passage. All the fleet was through at 8 A. M., the sailing craft continuing in tow until the point selected for the start of the day's races was reached.

CUT IN YACHT FLEET.

Only Forty-eight Craft in Huguenot Regatta—Forty-seven Finish.

There were not so many yachts in the annual regatta of the Huguenot Yacht Club yesterday as there have been in similar events of other clubs on Long Island Sound this season. Of forty-eight yachts starting all but one had finished a few minutes after 5 o'clock.

A twelve-knot breeze from the southwest blew nearly true all afternoon, and as the course ran from the starting line off the easterly end of Huckleberry Island along the Westchester shore, thence diagonally across the Sound to Prospect Point on the Long Island side, and thence home, all the yachts had a spinnaker run, then windward work, and finally a reach. That is just what all amateur sailors wish.

Since most of the large yachts usually racing on Long Island Sound are in the cruising fleet of the New York Yacht Club, the largest boats at the starting line in the Huguenot event yesterday were Hope, a lone thirty-foot class yacht that went over the course for credit for starting in the championship records, and Amoret, of Class P, alone of her class, but enrolled in the first division of the handicap class and therefore entitled to start with the yachts of the cruising division, conceding a "differential" allowance of about 6 per cent. to the scratch boat.

There were ten yachts of the second, third and fourth divisions, of the handicap class, seven of the Larchmont inter-club class, nine of the Star class, five of the Gloucester class, two of Class R, the Glen Cove jewel class, the New Rochelle one design class, and the Orienta one design class, four of Class R special, including three of the older boats of Class R, and a Seawanhaka knockabout, and two boats in a match race.

The courses sailed were: For the first and second divisions of the Handicap Class, 16½ miles; for Class R, the Larchmont Interclub Class, Class R Special, the Jewel Class, and the third and fourth divisions of the Handicap Class, 10½ miles; for the Star Class, 8¼ miles, and for all other small classes, 5½ miles.

The start of the Star Class was one of the best of the day, as eight of the nine boats were closely bunched. The start of the Larchmont Interclub Class was exciting, for three skippers misjudged their speed in a favorable tide and got across the line ahead of the gun. One of these three, Whiff, made such good time of it that she not only led her fleet at the end of the first round, but was first at the finish, winning from third by twenty-four seconds. The finishes in the other classes were not close.

Sandy Hook Y. C. Regatta.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Aug. 7.—The first regatta of the Sandy Hook Yacht Club was held today on Raritan Bay. The first event was for sailboats from the Rumson Country Club. The second race was an event for open sailboats, while the third was open for motor boats of all classes.

The races were held over a ten-mile course fro ma stake opposite the Sandy Hook club house. Peggy, owned by Timothy Maxson of the Locust Point Yacht Club, captured the motor boat event. Thistle, owned by Andrew Robertson of the same club and driven by Miss Anne Robertson, finished second, in 1:04. James Simms's Peter of the Sandy Hook Club finished third in 1:06.

In the class for boats from the Rumson Country Club, Samuel Riker's Frances finished first with 13-year-old Vereka Stout, son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Stout of the Rumson Road at the helm. Trouble, owned by Byard Dominingk, finished second.

In the open class for sailing yachts William M. Friedlander's Wanderer finished first. J. M. Curtis's Elsie of the Raritan Yacht Club was second.

Seawanhaka's Small Fleet.

With many of the members of the Seawanhake-Corinthian Yacht Club away on the cruise of the New York Yacht Club there was only a small fleet of starters in the week-end race of the former organization off Centre Island yesterday. Two of the fifteen-footers started, Tamale beating Locust over the inside course of the club.

Six of the Nut boats raced in the second race of the second series. The winner was Cocoanut. Only two of the others were timed. Araca was disabled, Pecan was capsized, and Beechnut was disqualified for fouling a mark. The summary:

INSPECT YONKERS COURSE.

President of Grand Circuit Believes Stables Safe for Racers.

H. K. Devereux, President of the Grand Circuit Racing Association, is arranging for the Grand Circuit meeting at Empire City Park, near Yonkers. He came from Cleveland to investigate the sanitary conditions, for it was reported in the West that stabling of horses to be shipped to Europe had contaminated the buildings.

Accompanied by Leslie Sutherland, President of the National Fair and Exposition Association, Mr. Devereux examined the stables and buildings. He believes that the stables are safe for the horses of the Grand Circuit, for the other horses had not been kept in the racing stables, but were confined in pens in another corner of the grounds. The horse dealers who have been using the Empire Track have completed their contract and will hereafter ship from the West direct to the French Government's new Remount depot at Quebec.

Following Mr. Devereux's approval of the track, the Directors of the association announced twelve additional races for the Grand Circuit meeting, beginning Aug. 28. The purses are $1,000, and the classes are 2:05, 2:10, 2:15, 2:17, and 2:20 trotters and 2:03, 2:07, 2:11, 2:16, and 2:18 pacers. Besides these late closing races, there are three stakes aggregating $9,000. A special free-for-all race for trotters and another for pacers, as well as a handicap, have been proposed.

PEKINGESE POPULAR AT ATLANTIC CITY

Mrs. Thomas Hastings's Entries Take Many Ribbons at Seashore Show.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 7.—New York fanciers fared particularly well today at the annual dog show of the Atlantic City Kennel Club, taking a number of winner's ribbons with their comparatively small number of nominations. Mrs. Thomas Hastings's entries were particularly successful, both her Bagatelle Chin Chin and Bagatelle Wang Tai taking awards in the Pekingese class. Her Chin Chin won in the puppy and novice division, and Wang Tai took blue ribbons in the American bred and under six pound classifications.

Guy Croft Salex, the pretty fox terrier owned by Mrs. Roy A. Rainey, of Huntington, L. I., received the President's Cup as the best dog in the show. Mrs. Rainey's dog is a new entrant in competition. The strong points could not help but draw attention and no dissension accompanied the decision over such other entries as the Butcher Boy and like old-time favorites. In the opposite sex, Deirdre Lismore, an Irish setter from the Lismore Kennels of Brooklyn, was awarded the trophy.

O. C. Harriman of Bedford Hills, N. Y., took the winner's ribbon in the Great Dane class with Lawton Rex. The main ribbon in the pointer's set went to Wattlands Wisdom, owned by Frank H. Addyman of Ardsley, who was also successful in several minor classes. R. Walter Creuzbaur of Bay Ridge took the winner's ribbon in Irish setters with Shando. In the opposite sex Bob White Red Storm, owned by E. B. Chase of Radnor, was the winner. Braewood Temperance, Effingham Lawrence's entry, of Cold Spring Harbor, L. I., won highest award in the Sealyham terrier class.

J. A. Stillman of New York had his Delhi Ooran barely nosed out for the winner's award in the class for Airedale terriers by Abrecorn Gold Edge, owned by Andrew McCrea of Philadelphia. There were twenty-six in this competition—the largest group in the show. Fully 100 dogs were exhibited.

"LOWER BAY" YACHTING.

Joy Wins in Handicap Class Despite New Penalty Scheme.

In a glorious breeze from the southwest that kept hauling to the south as the afternoon advanced, the racing contingent of the lower bay had one of the best races of the season, under the auspices of the Bensonhurst Yacht Club, yesterday. The start and the finish were off the Atlantic Yacht Club at Sea Gate.

As the wind came, all the divisions had a reach on the starboard tack from the starting line to a mark off Bensonhurst. Here the boats jibed for another reach to Fort Hamilton. Once around the mark off the Fort, it was a beat to the Sea Gate mark and a short reach home. The wind held steadily throughout. During the first round it freshened considerably and indications pointed to a squall. However, the clouds blew away without doing any damage.

With the Q boats still not racing, the most interesting class was the second division of the handicap yachts. The official handicapper had announced a new innovation. Joy, the property of LeSauvage and Davis, has been winning so consistently from scratch that she was penalized plus 12 per cent. It was the first time that a yacht ever raced with such a handicap. Notwithstanding the allowance, Joy managed to win.

In the third division of the same class, the winner on both actual and corrected time was Wahkan II. The knockabouts had a spirited race and again Mouse was a winner. The little yacht is being splendidly handled this year by R. F. Supper and George Reiners, Jr., sons of well-known racing yachtsmen of the lower bay. Among the stars the first yacht home was Shadow, the property

Race Week at Atlantic Y. C.

The annual race week of the Atlantic Yacht Club will be held beginning Aug. 22. On that day the Atlantic Yacht Club will tow the Long Island Sound craft from City Island to Sea Gate. On Monday afternoon there will be races for women and in the evening a vaudeville show and dance. Series racing will start Tuesday afternoon, and at night there will be a mess dinner to the visiting yachtsmen. The second series race will be sailed Wednesday, and the annual masquerade ball will be held at night. Thursday afternoon the last series race will be sailed and a minstrel show will provide the evening entertainment. The race for the Childs perpetual challenge trophy will be sailed Friday afternoon, and an informal dance is on the program for the evening.

The Atlantic Yacht Club will on Saturday tow the visiting yachts back to City Island in time to allow their owners to take part in the weekly regatta on the Sound. At night there will be a dinner and dance at Sea Gate. The Atlantic Yacht Club will take the remaining yachts back to the Sound Sunday. All visiting Corinthians will be extended the club privileges during the week.

NO FOOTBALL SALARIES.

English Soccer Clubs Abandon Pay for Players During the War.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—The English Football Association has decided to abandon the three principal soccer competitions, Leagues I and II and Southern league, until the war is over. This decision was the result of a conference between representatives of every club in the country. During the continuation of the war, no salaries will be paid to players, the game being continued solely as a recreation for the workers in the various Government factories. All agreements with players for service after April 30, 1915, are suspended until further notice.

The big Midland clubs, Aston Villa, West Bromwich Albion, Wolverhampton Wanderers and Birmingham have decided not to play competitive football until the war is ended. They have arranged a series of friendly games, the proceeds of which will be devoted to charity or war funds.

Two groups of clubs in the north of England have been formed for playing competitive games. Group I, Sheffield Wednesday, Sheffield United, Bradford, Bradford City, Notts County, Notts Forest, Derby County, Leeds City, Huddersfield Town, Barnsley, Hall City, Grimsby Town, Lincoln City and Leicester Fosse. Group 2, Manchester City, Manchester United, Liverpool, Everton, Bolton Wanderers, Bury, Burnley, Stockport County, Oldham Athletic, Blackpool, Preston North End, with two or three others.

The Southern and London professional clubs are arranging a competition which should produce some of the best football seen in years, as the rivalry between local clubs is very great.

TEMPLE WHERE MOSES WORSHIPED FOUND

Find at Ancient City of Memphis Proves Herodotus Truthful

Columns which led to the discovery of the temple

Head of red sandstone

ANOTHER epoch-making step in antiquarian research has been made by Clarence S. Fisher, head of the Eckley B. Coxe, Jr., expedition which was sent to Egypt last Fall by the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania. Through the discovery of one of the greatest temples of Memphis, home of the ancient Pharaohs, the way has been paved for gaining a wide knowledge of nations that now are merely names and for the study of civilization in the making.

It is the most fascinating period of Egyptian history that is being revealed in Memphis. Moses probably frequented the temple that is being uncovered. For enough has already been learned of it to show that it was built either by Seti I. or Merneptah, son of Rameses II., the Napoleon of his time.

The nation of the Nile reached the height of its power and glory under Rameses about 1325 B. C. Two generations after him came Moses, more than Father Abraham the father of the Hebrew race—the colonizer, conqueror, and lawmaker who led the Children of Israel from Egypt and formed them into a nation whose people have kept their identity down to the present day. And not the least of the possibilities of the inscriptions now being freed from the mud of the Nile is that they will shed new light on Biblical history.

The possibilities, indeed, are unlimited. Memphis was founded about 5,600 years before the time of Christ, according to the latest estimates of Professor Flinders Petrie, dean of Egyptologists. When Menes, first King of Egypt, made it his capital, it already was a large and flourishing city. Possibly it had been in existence thousands of years before the dawn of recorded history, because the subjects of Menes were far from barbarians. Races of which no traces remain may have founded it. And it is the possibility of learning something of these races that lends such intense interest to the present discoveries.

Among other things, the Egyptians were historians. Their priests corresponded, in a measure, to both the clergy and our professional men. Priests were the doctors, surgeons, astronomers, lawgivers, and scientists, as well as the voices of the gods. They were the historians, too, and it is known that in the libraries of Memphis were all the records of their learning. These records, in their own day, were known as "the mysteries," only to be imparted to the elect. When Pythagoras the Greek visited Egypt, his renown as scholar and philosopher was sufficient to cause the priests to open their "mysteries" to him. But that was less than six centuries before Christ, and more than seven centuries before the temple of Seti I. or Merneptah was built.

In view of all these possibilities, the question naturally arises: "Why has this most promising field been neglected?"

The answer is simple. The expense of making excavation has, heretofore, been prohibitive. The present expedition, which was dispatched by G. B. Gordon, Sc. D., Director of the University Museum, was forced to build a railway and install a pumping station before it could proceed with its work. A glance at the situation of Memphis will show why this is necessary. It is across the river from Cairo, and when its power declined, after the Roman occupation, it quickly was covered by the overflow of the Nile and the sands of the desert. And it is not unlikely that, if the excavations can be carried far enough, it will be found, like Troy, to be a seven-story city, with one civilization literally building on its predecessor.

Speculation aside, it is known that in the time of Seti I. the world's foremost city was Memphis. It was not only the home of the Egyptian Kings, but it was the centre of the globe's commerce. For eight miles it stretched along the Nile and for four miles it extended inland. Fed by the Nile, its commerce extended to the Mediterranean, and it tapped the Babylonian territory with its caravans. For a time, after the conquest of Alexander, its prestige was eclipsed by Thebes. At other times, as during the dynasty of the shepherd Kings, it was overshadowed by cities nearer Ethiopia. But, as a whole, Memphis is Egypt, as much as London is England or Paris is France.

By the time of the Roman occupation, however, Memphis had begun its permanent decline in favor of such newer cities as Alexandria. And the Moslem conquest completed its ruin. Of recent years it has degenerated into a stone quarry. Being so close to Cairo, it has suffered severely from such depredations.

Naturally, Memphis was a promising field for Mr. Fisher when he arrived in Egypt on Dec. 16, 1914, the day Egypt became a protectorate of the British Government. For the first few months he devoted his attention to the burial grounds of the old Egyptian Kings near the pyramids of Ghizeh. Then he conceived the idea of finding the palace of the Kings of Memphis. The time was ripe for such an ambitious undertaking. Because of the war the British Government had canceled the concessions of the Austrian and German excavators. This left large numbers of skilled workers unemployed, and he had no difficulty in securing the requisite number of men. Eventually he employed 180.

The Government readily granted him a concession at Memphis, and he went to work first on a test trench at an old Roman wall. The site of his operations resembled a sand dune backed by a grove of palm trees. Some years previously Professor Petrie had been over the territory, but he had, literally, merely scratched the surface. His trenches were everywhere to be seen, but they afforded little indication of what might be beneath them.

Before long it was evident that the spot for a beginning had been well chosen. Mr. Fisher, an architect by profession, came across a wall of such proportions that he conceived it to be a part of the palace which he was seeking. Also, he had noted, near the old Roman work, two projecting columns, which had been uncovered by Professor Petrie. They were of sufficient size to indicate that they belonged to a large building, so he set his men to uncovering them. The result was not the discovery of the royal palace which he was seeking, but of the temple of Seti I. or Merneptah.

As he went below the surface a few feet the difficulties of his work multiplied. He had to build a railroad to haul away the dirt he was taking out. Then the seepage from the Nile was encountered. That required the installation of a pumping system to drain the chambers formed by his excavators. In spite of all difficulties, he persevered until he had uncovered a large part of the temple. From March through June he worked, and then discontinued operations until the Fall, as it is virtually impossible to keep the Egyptian laborers at their tasks in the Summer season.

When the excavations were temporarily discontinued, no less than 4,000 articles had been discovered. These are mostly small, such as scarabs, amulets, stone jars, and the like, but there were occasional finds of greater importance. Among the larger objects recovered are a number of sandstone statues, which are representative of the best productions of Egyptian sculptors. Indeed, in their hands, sandstone seemed to possess a peculiar pliability, lacking the harshness and hardness of marble and granite. In this respect the temple promises finds of the first magnitude when excavations are resumed next Fall.

Not less interesting was the discovery of a manufacturing plant within the temple. Molds for making amulets and the like indicated that the priests were quite alive to the profits to be derived from sales to visitors.

In ethnological interest nothing in the result of this work exceeds the discovery of 100 heads of various sizes, mostly in terra cotta. These indicate that Memphis was inhabited by representatives of many races. The types range from pure Egyptian to Ethiopian. Of them, the most prized is a sandstone head, almost life size, of the purest and best Egyptian in both character and workmanship. Presumably it is the portrait of a King, as a projection on top of the head indicates that originally a tall headdress, characteristic of royalty, was fitted to it. Although the nose is mutilated, the sculpture is of such a high order that it is considered one of the finds of the season.

And as to the temple itself, it is another step in the rehabilitation of the character of Herodotus. Of late years the tendency has been to discredit his chronicles because he seemed entirely too good a story teller to be a trustworthy historian. Whoever built the temple, however, unwittingly contributed to the posthumous honors of the historian, for the section so far uncovered fills his specifications exactly.

And before it can be told with certainty who was the builder, much painstaking work in deciphering and translation must be done. All the old pillars, walls, and even doorways, have their story to tell of the men who made them. But the stories, just now, are inches deep in Nile mud. Furthermore, the surface inscriptions are not always to be relied upon. The old Egyptian Kings were such unblushing plagiarists that the surface paint does not invariably tell who performed the deeds of valor recorded. There seems to have been a feeling among the old royalties that they not only fell heirs to their thrones, but to the brave deeds of their predecessors. Certainly they had no hesitation whatever in painting out the names of those who went before and substituting their own. So it is very often necessary to scrape away several coats of paint before the real hero is discovered.

With this fact in mind, Mr. Fisher, discoverer of the temple at Memphis, preserves an entirely neutral attitude as to its builder. While his workmen are taking their long Egyptian vacations he and his assistants will be busy deciphering the inscriptions on the columns, doorways, and other fragments rescued from the wreck of the past. One fortunate thing about the situation is that, while the surface of the stone uncovered is soft and friable at first, it soon hardens when exposed to the air, and the mud with which it is incrusted can readily be peeled off.

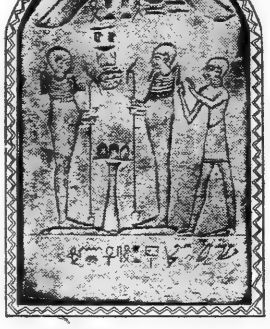
Much work is to be done, also, in classifying the 4,000 small articles recovered. They range all the way from the Roman occupation to the time of Moses, and from scarabs, amulets, and little gods to gold jewelry, stone vases, and pomade boxes. From an archaeologist's viewpoint it is fortunate that no money has been discovered in the lower strata. Whenever coins appear an excavator knows that he is dealing with comparatively modern periods, like the Alexandrian era or the Cleopatra epoch. While there was much international trade from 3,300 to 8,000 years ago, it was conducted entirely by barter—in other words, in accordance with the theories of modern financial experts, who contend that too great a balance in favor of any one nation tends to restrict the trade of that nation, and that, in the last analysis, commerce must always thrive best on a barter basis.

However this may be, the excavator was not slow to note his satisfaction in his diary when he got below the monetary level. Coins were beginning to come into use when Cambyses conquered Egypt, about six centuries before Christ. But the Persian conquest was further away from the temple that has just been unearthed than the discovery of America is from us today.

To use another illustration, this tremendous temple, with its walls of 12-foot thickness, was five centuries ahead of the Homeric era of Greece, which is usually placed about eight centuries before Christ. The corresponding epoch ahead of us was that of the Merry Monarch in England, when riding to hounds was being popularized by the happy-go-lucky Charles, and the English thoroughbred was having his first try-outs at Newmarket.

Some idea may thus be gained of the joy of Egyptologists at the discovery of this temple. It may be regarded, indeed, as the first chapter of all the history that has been lost in the ages. Its inscriptions and others to come after it promise revelations of Biblical tribes. Enough has already been discovered, for instance, of the Amorites and the Hittites to show that they played large parts in the dead ages. These, and others altogether lost, may live again when this temple, the palace of the Kings, and other architectural triumphs of the Pharaohs are once again laid bare.

There are merely bare hints of this, however, in the diary of the excavator. In accordance with a regulation of the Egyptian Government, he has kept this diary religiously, cataloguing his finds from day to day, in order that the home Government may keep track of the treasures and know what it cares to reserve for its museums. For it has the first choice of everything dug up. The following extracts from the diary have been culled from the daily record of discoveries.



Votive Stele to Ptah in Limestone.

On March 13 the leader of the expedition writes:

Began work today. * * * A few were placed on an old bench where a corner of the hall shows. Probably Petrie's work. All over Memphis are small and large pits dug by him, but except for a temple near the village, which he partly cleared, there is no sign of any systematic work done on this site. The site is a large and important one, and judging from the numerous large statues now visible, and Petrie's own success, it would repay complete and scientific excavation.

The excavator noted a strip of a Roman wall, of which he says:

As there is a wide break here in Roman walls, the masses to be removed are less here than elsewhere. Ultimately we will have to remove the greater portion of the upper walls in order to get at the plan of the older and more important buildings beneath, but as a test trench, to find out what our problem will be, this offers less work than any other place.

From this date until March 21, Mr. Fisher was ill, and Reis Mahmud directed the excavation. When Mr. Fisher recovered, several rooms had been reached, one showing the remains of two pavements, one below the other.

In the debris were found a large number of unfinished and damaged scarabs of gray steatite, with fragments of steatite. It suggests a workman's rubbish and discard. There were also some coins and pottery.

In the area to the south, further suggesting an old workshop, was found a thin slab of white limestone, on which are drawn incised squares. These were to be the guide in cutting a relief in the block.

Mr. Fisher notes also a practice which has ruined many fine old buildings. He says:

Ever since we have been working here a considerable number of men from the village have been engaged in digging out sebbakh. This is the débris from the walls which they use to spread over their fields. It is very rich soil, and the Government gives these people ruksehs or permits to dig this out of neighboring mounds. However, I feel that our own permission to dig for science should give us the right to prevent all such diggings while we hold the site. Many walls are overthrown and lost in this way, and our own records are impaired.

This seems to be a new way in which one civilization builds upon another.

Another interesting discovery was of an unfinished limestone statuette of the Ptolemaic period, typically Egyptian in character, in spite of the foreign influences of its time. He writes:

The face is beautifully modeled, and the headdress folding down back of the ears is painted with red stripes. The most interesting feature, however, is on the back of the head, which is flat. On this are the scratched lines used as a guide for the sculpture. The main divisions of spacing of nose, eyes, mouth and chin, which were always according to fixed rules, are shown, as well as the minor horizontal and vertical divisions.

It may here be remarked that the priestly laws used to preserve the purity of art resulted in the decline of Egyptian painting and sculpture. Everything had to be in accordance with proportions rigidly prescribed—as it should be, instead of as it was.

All advances, of whatever nature, had to be circumspectly announced. As an example, when a priest-physician made what he considered a discovery, he would announce it as a recently discovered writing of a god—usually the ibis-headed Thoth.

Another discovery was a curious conduit. We read:

It was composed of a series of red ware pots, each with holes on opposite sides. Across these lay a conduit composed of specially made sections of pottery. Several jars projected above this gutter—others were completely below, so that it is difficult to ascertain the original method of construction. Ten pots are placed quite close together; in the length found there are five of these in 2.90 meters. Three of them were placed above the conduit and two below.

Later the excavator notes:

The pots acted as subsided basins or collectors of solid matters, while the liquids passed on through the straight conduit. But this arrangement, together with the smallness of the horizontal section of conduit, makes its use as a water conduit rather absurd. One recalls the rock cut olive oil presses at Samaria, where the channels had at intervals deep cups in which the sediment from the oil collected, while the clear liquid passed on through. I believe we have here some such arrangement, probably not for olive oil, but for some oil manufacture indigenous to the country.

Next came Mr. Fisher's description of his discovery of the temple. He says:

In walking over the mounds today (March 25) I took a course near the southern limit. I saw what seemed to be an inscribed column projecting from the débris. Further examination disclosed that it was a column with the name of Merneptah on it, and near it was a similar column with part of a papyrus capital. A better capital, but much weathered, lay in the débris beside the other column. The place looks so interesting that I intend placing some of the men to work here clearing out around the column, in an attempt to trace the limits of the room. If this is one of the rooms of the palace we would have something to start from, working in all directions to develop the plan of the building.

By May 8 a pavement was exposed, about 2.5 wide and 4 meters long. It is composed of slabs of limestone and bricks. This was a somewhat unusual use for bricks 3,300 years ago.

Everything tended to show that the temple being unearthed was of massive construction. On May 24 Mr. Fisher noted that one of his foremen had found masses of mud brick so placed as to indicate that walls around the columns were very massive. They were about 3.75 meters, or 12 feet thick.

The discovery of a cement floor was noted on June 27. Of it Mr. Fisher says:

This is composed of small limestone chips mixed with cement and laid on a bed of small stones. It is the sort of floor one would hope to find painted, but, being below the water level and covered with mud, it is almost hopeless to expect to obtain any design there might have been.

Little was discovered after this, and Mr. Fisher closed his work until the Fall season.

A PROTEST AGAINST PROHIBITIONS

Dr. Mary Keyt Isham Tells of the Psychic Harm Suffered by Victims of Too Much "Mrs. Grundy"

Dr. Mary Keyt Isham, author of the novel and interesting article printed below, turned to the study of medicine after graduating from Wellesley, where she had specialized in psychology. After finishing a course in medicine at the University of Cincinnati, she was for six years on the staff of the Columbus, Ohio, State Hospital. She received a fellowship in psychology from Bryn Mawr, and for a time lectured on psychology at the Laura Memorial College in Cincinnati which has virtually become a part of the medical department of the University of Cincinnati, being the first lecturer on that subject at a medical college.

Dr. Isham is now making special studies here in New York.

By Mary Keyt Isham, M. A., M. D.

THE amount of energy expended on self-suppression as inculcated by the prevailing ideas of what constitutes culture would, if used otherwise, lengthen the life of an individual many years.

Being true to one's self and thoroughly respectful to, and unashamed of, the powers with which the Creator has endowed us involves a much more unhampered use of ourselves than we are apt to think expedient.

On all sides we are crowded near to suffocation with the heavy standards of former ages. The neurotic type, to which most drug habitués belong, is unusually sensitive, before the mind becomes markedly affected, to other people's opinions. If the poor neurotic were conscious of being surrounded by a charitable public who would not consider that his every little harmless expression of nervous activity an unpardonable digression from the usual, that is, from "propriety," he would be saved from injurious habits.

We can all think of numerous health-giving, joyous and perfectly harmless impulses in ourselves which must be constantly controlled for fear of unpleasant fanciful interpretations that might be placed upon them. If a person takes pleasure, for instance, while waiting for a car, in sitting on a stone wall near by, swinging his feet, and watching the scenery, is any one hurt? If a person goes out in a pouring rain with his head bare and gets soaked, or likes to wade in the mud, or to lie on the grass on a warm Summer's night and watch the stars, who is harmed?

And yet very few inhabitants of a city would dare to do these things. I feel convinced, however, that not only neuropathic individuals, but others, would be much healthier and happier if they felt free to follow out their simple impulses without fear of criticism.

Public sentiment is beginning to soften toward those who show deviation from the conventional and admits that this deviation is not always a sign of hopeless badness and uselessness, but may be, on the contrary, a signal of some remarkable energy, hitherto concealed and misunderstood. Perhaps no one but a psychiatrist can appreciate how very large an amount of mental trouble results from forcing people to live contrary to their true and original natures. But it is hard, of course, to draw the line between a rational self-control which respects the tastes and preferences of others, and a cowardly submission to the will of another, which converts one into a puppet. We are all more or less cowardly. We refuse to be ourselves because we are afraid.

I have taken the above paragraphs from a paper which I wrote in 1911 on "Drug Fiends." It contained conclusions from my practical experience with drug habitués at a State hospital, and was published in a medical journal. So many unsolicited comments and letters of an approving nature have come to me, both from physicians and laymen, that I feel moved to elaborate a small portion of the article in the light of what I have learned since writing it.

At the time of its publication I had begun to read Freud's works, but was taking merely a casual interest in his theories; and, although I thought they might be the gateway to a realm of fruitful disclosures about mental processes, I was not trying to apply them on patients or studying them very seriously. What I wrote about drug fiends had no intentional reference to the principles of psychanalysis. But a deeper study of Freud's productions has convinced me that it is impossible to get outside his vast wisdom in the matter of individual psychology, and that no one who analyzes human conduct can afford to overlook them.

It is now quite widely known that according to Freud's theory all psychoneurotic disturbances are caused primarily by "repressions"—that is, by emotional experiences to which adequate reaction has not been made. A part of the emotion has been forced back into the "psyche" and has gradually sunk into the unconscious, there to continue reactions according to laws of its own. Trying to free these "repressions" later causes "resistances," and the more efficiently the "psychic censor," who resides on the boundary between conscious and unconscious, exercises his prerogative, the harder does he resist the emergence of the repressed matter into the conscious. Some repressions, in other words, lie at deeper levels than others. A conflict arises when a requirement of the conscious life is hindered from easy accomplishment because of connection with a repressed something which acts in a contrary direction. Conflicts are the essence of psycho-neurotic troubles.

Suppose we move this whole Freudian cast of psychic forces so far toward the surface of the psyche that they are all operating on a conscious level. Such a conception, of course, destroys the purely Freudian sense of the terms and changes the term "repression" into that of "self-suppression," used in my other paper. In ordinary usage the two words are interchangeable. They refer to the consciously repressed act, not to the repressed emotion. The act is consciously repressed because the social censor, under the various forms of "Mrs. Grundy," the "social conscience," family pride, "the spirit of the community," the conventions of good society, do not allow its performance before the eyes of the world. Such acts must be consciously suppressed because "good form" resists them. On this borderland, where the social censor presides, many disputes and discussions arise in matters of dress, recreation, occupation, and manners.

It is very probable that, as the knowledge of Freudian literature extends, and the meanings of our little nervous acts of expression in gesture, phraseology, and general behavior take hold of the public intelligence, an effect opposite to that intended as the result of psychanalysis may be produced. Instead of being analyzed and dissipated they will be repressed, and a new layer of repressions will begin to be exacted by cultured communities.

Repression is the price of culture, and for this reason cultured peoples are more prone than the uncultured to nervous troubles. Freud says: "A progressive renouncement of constitutional impulses, the activity of which affords the ego primary pleasure, seems to be one of the basic principles of human culture." The finding of something which releases and adequately replaces the repression is a "sublimating" process. A failure to find a satisfactory substitute is a failure in sublimation, and the awkward compromise results in nervous symptoms.

Civilization, while supplying more physical comforts and more varied methods of sublimation, and thus offering greater individual freedom in a certain sense, also demands deeper repression. It invents increasingly stricter prohibitions against the natural man. It develops more inhibitions within the individual. One layer having been thrust down subconsciously, pressure begins to be executed against the next layer. The opportunities for more refined sublimation also mean possibilities of deeper repression with inadequate sublimation.

There are two extremes in this process as in every other. If an individual is unmoral, he does not try to repress himself and satisfies his desires in a way which makes him noxious to the community. If he is moral, he attempts a replacement of his lawlessness and makes himself a desirable member of the community. When convention demands repressions which are unendurable, aggressive individuals with clear insight cry out with conscious appeal against the demands. Psychoneurotics increase their mental and nervous symptoms. The insane, who are truly the waste products of the refining process, multiply. Then convention must change its decrees.

Parenthetically, I do not wish it to be inferred that I childishly believe the conventions to be "imposed." Every student of history and sociology knows that they have gradually grown up for the protection and convenience of society. Convention is the great social conscience which makes short-cut decisions for us.

But as a nation moves along in imaginative thought and invention, the fiats of society must change correspondingly. If they do not, the social body becomes sluggish, creeps along with the hardened shell of outworn ages, and does not seek to let "each new temple, nobler than the last, shut" it "from heaven with a dome more vast." It is this lack of elasticity of which Arthur Christopher Benson writes:

> There is little doubt that one of the most oppressive, injurious, detestable forces in the world is the force of conventionality, that instinct which makes men judge a character and an action, not by its beauty or its merits, but by comparing it with the standard of how the normal man would regard it. This vast and intolerable medium of dullness, which penetrates our lives like a thick, dark mist, allowing us only to see the object in range of an immediate vision, hostile to all originality, crushingly respectable, that dictates our homes, our occupations, our amusements, our emotions, our religion, is the most ruthless and tyrannical thing in the world.

But it is not my purpose to discuss those repressions which become converted into pronounced nervous symptoms, or those which can be adequately sublimated, but rather the little inhibitions which the social censor unreasonably imposes to the exclusion of a sane, joyous expression of love and life, and so makes people irritable, restless, and unhappy. A discussion of sex inhibitions would therefore naturally be expected, and is no doubt very pertinent to this subject, but I do not care now to sound a source so profound and limitless. There is ample material in more remote regions.

The fact that one age lifts prohibitions which a former age has enjoined shows that there is no absolute, eternal, unchangeable law of civilization as manifested by outer forms. Any one who has lived into a second generation can feel and see clearly a difference in standards. There is quite a number of injurious social prohibitions that have been lifted within the last generation.

Age limits that were formerly so fixed in the matter of style of dress, entertainments, occupations, and civil condition have been almost obliterated. People are acting consistently with their feelings, irrespective of age. Probably, however, it is because they really feel younger now. Maybe not. Perhaps those preceding us in time appreciated, too, that "the tragedy of growing old is the remaining young." At the age of 35, our great grandmothers donned black lace caps as an indication that they had reached a time of life when they must quietly watch the passing show instead of taking part in it. Our grandmothers were severely criticised when they would not accept with docility the occupation considered suitable for their age, and settle down in a quiet corner with reading or sewing and behave in the old-lady-like style of grandmothers in the picture books of a former age.

Now our mothers absolutely refuse to be left out of any diversions, even at the age of 65, and we no longer meet the gloomy or saintly elderly person, awaiting death with resignation. As for us who are middle-aged, we are by no means deemed ultra-modern when we enjoy with zest all those youthful things which, though according to a by-gone generation ill befitting our time of life, well befit our feelings. Does any one now see a woman of 40 acting and dressing with the standardized decorum of the woman of 40 of the last generation?

One of the causes which create distinct age barriers is the teaching of absolutism and unchangeableness in the social and natural sciences. The pupil is inculcated with dogmatic and rigid ideas about all phenomena of life. His formal education usually holds out fairly well until he is about 35 or 40. Then the system of pedagogic methods suffers a pronounced change, and the pupil in question finds himself unaccustomed to the new ideas and lags behind. His age itself is not a limit to his plasticity of thought, but the cut-and-dried, inelastic principles of his academic years have run out.

Now, however, the educative ideal is that of constant adaptation, continual change, unfixed convention, developing thought, rapidly changing fashions. The world's pupil consults his own desires and tastes more, on the one hand, and is open to a larger toleration of others, on the other. He is self-centred, and gets more facile and appreciative. This state of mind is bound to throw down age barriers and keep people young. We are slowly realizing one of the old desires of mankind—to be eternally young. We are averting the tragedy of growing old.

The harm of viewing prevailing opinions as fixed and final is shown clearly in the history of neurotic individuals. They experience a great amount of mental suffering in conscientious attempts at living up to certain formulae or recommendations which impressive writers of the pedagogic type have given to the world from time to time. The suggestible, sensitive person, with a passion for morality, strenously tries to fashion his life upon these pieces of advice.

Neurotics have a passion for testing things. This, added to a querulous disposition, plunges them into trouble. They finally detect the inconsistencies of their various counselors. They have used an almost superhuman force in repressing their natural inclinations, in doing what was inconvenient and disciplinary, and then find that the exact opposite was right!

The discovery only increases doubt and querulousness. But they are obstinate in sticking to a line of action which they have begun, no matter if they do sense their error on the way. It seems that they have an idea, which has been sedulously taught to many of us, that there is only one long ladder by which we can "rise from the lowly earth to the vaulted skies," and that when once we have started in a certain direction we must continue to traverse in the same straight line the long, airy, upward stretch between the earth and its infinitely far vault of the heavens.

To the idea that each of us possesses a convenient little portable ladder of his own, and can place it wherever there is a secure support, can take it up and go to an entirely different region if he does not like the aspect as seen from its summit, room is not given in their scheme of life. A belief in the infallibility of eminent authorities and in the rigidity, the immutability, of natural and spiritual phenomena is a great mischief-maker.

The lifting of age limitations in regard to purely conventional matters has released many aging repressions. There are other useless and psychically destructive barriers upon which we are working and still have much to accomplish. Among them is the matter of Sunday observance, much of which is done, not from inclination or belief, but in fear of breaking some obsolescent conventions and exciting criticism.

Reflect on the old hymn-singing, not-looking-out-of-the-window, catechizing, headachy Sundays of Puritan days, and compare them with the way respectable citizens spend Sunday now. Most of us can see a vast change of attitude even in our own life.

I remember distinctly a barren, blistering Sunday afternoon on an island in Lake George, when my hostess suggested that we go in bathing. I would not, because it was Sunday. I wish I had that chance again this minute! She said her beach was private, and that if my only excuse was, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth," it would not hold in this case, as there was no brother to offend on the premises. I could not go against my previous training. Long dull Sunday afternoons were badges of membership in a God-fearing community.

A friend of mine tells me that she always had a great temptation to fill up those dull hours with sewing, not a rushing employment in order to get something done—against which behavior the observance of the Sabbath was blessedly instituted—but a soothing, quiet time of sewing on what she liked. Her eyes were tired of reading, her ears fatigued with listening to droning, serious talk, and Sunday walking was considered unpardonable. She had tried teaching an afternoon class in a mission Sunday school, and although she doggedly stuck to this occupation for years, she always felt out of place. She might as well have been teaching the heathen in foreign lands, for there was no occupation more foreign to her.

But once in a spirit of desperate bravado she worked on some embroidery on the difficult afternoon. She says that she never experienced a more thorough feeling of rightness and fitness in what she was doing, and although a proud, worthy, and well-disciplined offspring of stern and melancholy Calvinists on both sides of the family, she finds that such an occupation is more spiritually refreshing to her than any other form of Sunday worship.

The fact that many readers will accuse me of discussing questions which have been settled long ago shows how these particular repressions have been well-nigh universally lifted. The habit of the present generation in church-going has also been much discussed, and I can pass it over.

It is a pleasure to note how our contemporaries are reacting against psychic inhibitions imposed by the unwilling payment of what are called social obligations—making calls and visits against one's inclination, and receiving them from people one cares less than nothing about. One by one we are dropping this whole time-wasting, temper-trying business of debit and credit intercourse.

Another set of prohibitions, injurious and unnecessary, under which we are still laboring, are those in regard to food. A large number of persons who desire to live hygienically and scientifically are most solicitously careful about the nutritive value of every ingredient of their food. Every physician knows only too well the numberless questions asked by patients about what will agree with them and why; and he also knows what slight practical knowledge we have about assimilation.

Since Pavlow, however, has performed certain convincing experiments on the digestive juice of dogs and has discovered that the preliminary "appetite juice" is a most important aid to digestion, we feel more scientifically supported when we advise people, as common sense dictates, to eat what they like.

One can't help admiring the blunt old Dr. Abernathy who told his fastidious gastric patients to eat anything except such substances as the poker and the tongs. Of course, he assumed that his patients were prudent enough not to eat what invariably caused them indigestion and were not going to starve themselves like fanatics, or guzzle like imbeciles and dements.

The problem of digestion, however, is as often a problem of with whom one eats as what one eats, a fact of which Solomon was aware when he wrote "Better is a morsel and quietness therewith than a house full of feasting with strife." A wise physician of my acquaintance once brought a very healthy looking patient to a private hospital where I happened to be serving as an interne. He said he had examined this patient thoroughly and could find nothing the matter with him except cranky ideas about his diet, and told me to make out a diet for him which sounded up-to-date and upon which I could furnish enough scientific explanation to satisfy him. It really made no difference, he said, what I included. Luckily the dietary which I constructed on lines of expediency was perfectly satisfactory to this physically healthy man. What he really needed was a psychanalysis, but we did not know the technique of this valuable therapeutic agent at that time.

Our wants in regard to food, as to all other matters, are valuable signals of what is good for us. Fundamentally, the universal desires of man are reliable indicators of what he ought to do and can do. Vague desire, increasingly clear imagining of the thing desired, an attempt to create it, is the history of discovery and invention.

We can find the first traces of discoveries and inventions in myths, fairy tales, poetry, and dreams. Men sail away to blissful isles far, far away beyond the horizon; they listen to conversation from great distances; they can live in the sea and mount up in the air. And now a new combination of discovery and invention is staring us straight in the face and can be predicted from a universal want.

At the time of Christopher Columbus there was a general notion that if you sailed far enough from land you would come to the ocean's limit at some very precipitous ledge, where you would surely be rushed off to destruction. We have similar ideas about the air. We think that if we go high enough we shall finally reach a height where breathing is impossible. This is probably in a way an erroneous idea, because from time unrecorded men have wished to reach the moon. They will surely reach it, and the airship suggests a way.

This may sound nonsensical, but it is the essence of the new sort of reasoning of which psychanalysis is the precursor. It is reasoning founded upon a psychical rather than a material basis. It is the real foundation for a science of psychology, and through it startling discoveries will be made concerning the human soul and how it can achieve its desires.

The fact that a thing is desired shows that it can be obtained. This is a most fruitful suggestion and puts a vital significance into the wish for eternal youth, freedom from pain, the freedom of love—which need not mean "free love"—and immortality. So many age-old desires of mankind have come true that one is justified in looking for more realizations. And as each one materializes gradually, the repressions which its non-realization has necessitated may be progressively released.

There are eternal entities which convention cannot touch, but it seizes hold and places its fiat upon everything else within reach, and often refuses to lift prohibitions and demands concerning matters which have long since changed their form and value. At the basis of every repression is a desire or wish, Freud teaches us. When the wish is realized, the repression is no longer necessary. We may therefore conclude that, when society is realizing a universal wish, convention must issue a fiat that repressions concerning it are no longer necessary. If it does not, the false inhibitions or pretenses upon which it insists generate psychic cruelties, hidden shames, and even suicides and murders.

It is a most absorbing employment to watch repressions in a process of release either through fulfillment of the original repressed desire or through sublimation. At present the manifold, diverse, and bizarre fashions in women's dresses, shoes, and bathing suits suggest that a vast multitude are trying to express individual tastes, even though many are mere imitators. The same restless surging exhibited toward freedom in fashion speaks in lesser degree in amusements and occupations and opinions. When the great war has ceased, we may expect realizations hitherto only dreamed by poets and philosophers.

When the malicious, revengeful, and jealous factors which lie at the roots of criticism become sublimated into a high-minded, sympathetic understanding of the motives which originate acts, we may freely abolish the time-wasters and energy-consumers in convention, for many tabooed things which we wish to do are perfectly harmless and are merely signs of a healthy joy in life. In that delightful era, if a person thinks it pleasant and beneficial to sit or walk naked in the sunshine of his garden, he may do so without being condemned as eccentric, indecent, or immoral. We can run and skip through the forests with the agility and freedom granted to favored woodland beings by poets' dreams, and play in the sea with no more hindrances to easy and wholesome motion than are imposed on fish. Each one can be decent in whatever dress, occupation, or manner best suits him.

We may lie in the grass, walk out in the rain bareheaded, wade through the mud, sit on walls and swing our legs, and feel in perfectly good form the whole world around. There is no question but that we are growing slowly to this rational freedom, and when an individual is seen doing something new and strange, but entirely harmless, he will not be forced to run the gauntlet of silent, damning criticism by his slavishly conventional contemporaries, but feel secure in the harmlessness of his motive and the sympathy of his equally enlightened fellows.

GERMAN WAR BREAD CARD ARRIVES HERE

THE authentic bread card, partly used, of which an illustration is here reproduced, was inclosed in a letter from a young business man of Berlin not yet drafted for the front, but at the disposal of the military authorities for service in the Landwehr Artillery. The letter is dated May 23 and reads, in part, as follows:

What remains of my bread card of a few weeks ago will show you how liberal an allowance of bread the Government grants to each individual. These cards, issued every Monday morning, have small coupons calling for 25, 50, and 100 grams of bread, making a total of 1,950 grams, or nearly two kilos—about 4½ pounds of English weight—per week per individual.

Now, I have the normal appetite of a full-grown man, and, as you will see from the inclosed card, I used only 550 grams of my allowance without stinting myself in the least. Even the most hard-working laborer could not consume more bread than the Government permits him to obtain.

At first, when the new regulation for the distribution of bread and flour came into effect, on Feb. 15, there was a general grumbling of dissatisfaction in Berlin. The war has not quelled in us Berliners the atavistic inclination to kick about anything at any time. It is a condition of our mental and physical comfort. But the kicking did not last long. We soon realized the superior wisdom of the Government in regulating Germany's bread supply and preventing a number of scare-headed women from hoarding up enormous stores, to the detriment of the rest of the community. We also found that the new system runs smoothly and is not at all vexatious to the individual.

If you keep house, each member of the household has his or her bread card, and upon supplying bread, rolls, and flour the baker clips corresponding coupons from these cards.

If you are a bachelor, like myself, and take your meals at restaurants, you tell the waiter what sort and how much bread you wish, and he does the clipping. The cards are not transferable. Thus, when you are a guest at the table of some friend, either you bring your bread with you or, if you arrive early enough, you deliver your card into the hands of your friend's servant, who takes it to the baker and returns with the bread. It is all very simple, and no one thinks any more about it, now that thirteen weeks of quiet working have accustomed us to the little formality.

When you call for your new card, the old one has to be returned, with the unused coupons, to the authorities. I am really risking six months' imprisonment, or 1,500 marks' fine, by sending you this one, for all infringements of the regulations of Jan. 25, 1915, are punishable to that extent, as the letter-press on the back of the card will tell you.

What would you pay in New York at a decent restaurant for a meal consisting of soup, fish, or entrée, roast with vegetables and potatoes, and dessert? Now, as before the war, I pay 80 pfennigs (or 20 cents) for such a meal at my usual restaurant! Nor have the portions been reduced in size. With 10 pfennigs' worth of beer, in addition, and a 10-pfennig tip for my old waiter, I consider myself most comfortably cared for.

England may try her best to starve us out; she is failing completely. In fact, it will soon become known officially that the Government's husbanding of foodstuffs has been so efficient that Germany has now a surplus of supplies and will not need to begin using the new harvest until the end of September.

A German Bread Card.

From Many Lands

THERE is one place in the world which has probably not yet heard of the war. This is the British island of Tristan da Cunha, in the South Atlantic, the Secretary to the British Postmaster General recently stating that the island has not received a mail since the outbreak of hostilities. The island is dependent on chance communications from the Cape of Good Hope, 1,500 miles away. The inhabitants number about eighty, and are mainly descendants of shipwrecked sailors. They are of mixed origin—English, Scotch, Irish, American, Dutch, Italian, Asiatic, and negro.

New York City has eight pension funds. They are the Public School Teachers' Retirement Fund, the Police Pension Fund, the Fire Department Relief Fund, the Department of Health Fund, the College of the City of New York Fund, the Supreme Court Appellate Division Fund, the Street Cleaning Department Fund, and the City of New York Employes' Retirement Fund.

All the steam railways in New Zealand are owned and operated by the Government. There are about 2,966 miles of road in operation, and new lines are under construction.

Recent figures of the Japanese Foreign Office show that 258,000 Japanese subjects are living abroad. In the United States are 80,000; Hawaii, 70,000; Philippine Islands 5,000; China, 115,000; Australia, 6,000; Canada, 12,000; France, 122; Great Britain, 475, and Germany, 424.

War Stamps

THE first set of postage stamps issued by any of the European countries, containing war scenes, has just arrived in this country. They have been issued by Austria. While available for postage, they are really charity stamps, as they are sold at a price slightly higher than the prevailing postal rate.

There are five stamps in the set, their respective values being three, five, ten, twenty, and thirty-five heller, the heller of Austria being equal to the German pfennig, about one-quarter of a cent. The stamps are oblong in shape, very neatly engraved, with the war scene in an oval surrounded by the words, "Kaiserliche Königliche Osterreichische Post"—"The Imperial and Royal Austrian Post."

The three-heller stamp is purplish in color, with a view showing fighting in the trenches. The five-heller stamp is green with a cavalry scene. The ten-heller stamp is red, showing one of the big howitzer guns being prepared for firing. The twenty-heller stamp is a dull blue green with a war vessel of the dreadnought type, and the thirty-five-heller stamp is ultramarine in color with a beautifully engraved view of an aeroplane in flight.

The values are in figures in the corners at the bottom of these stamps, with the additional charity tax value in the centre. THE MAGIC TOWN OF ANCHORAGE

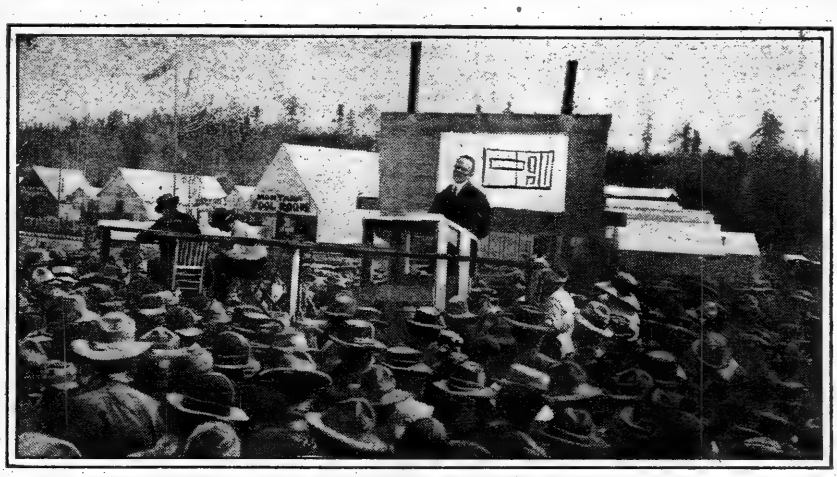
New Government Railway in Alaska Creates Modern City, Where Lots Sell at Record-Breaking Prices



Auction Sale of Lots by the United States Government at Anchorage, Alaska.

IN August, 1914, the Government commenced survey work on the east side of Knik Arm, a tributary of Cook Inlet, in Alaska. In April, 1915, the place had developed into a great city of tents. And now, in August, 1915, it has become the flourishing town of Anchorage, with broad streets, tall buildings, and provisions for every modern improvement.

Thus during a year when hundreds of European towns were wiped away by war an American waste became, as if by white magic, a prosperous and busy town. Not even the records of Colorado and California when the soil first revealed its precious ore furnish any complete parallel to this amazing development. For Anchorage came suddenly into being, not because of the deceptive lure of gold, but as a result of that sure herald of commerce and civilization, the Government railway.

Anchorage is the first townsite to be thrown open by the Government, along the line of the new proposed Government railway, as provided by Congress. During the Summer of 1914 the Alaska Engineering Commission commenced survey work from this point, and at that time notices were posted warning people not to locate on any of this ground.

When the commission left Anchorage last Fall there were very few people in the place, but during the Winter hundreds came and erected tents and temporary frame buildings. When the commission returned this Spring they found a very large city of tents. The tent city sprung up on the north side of Ship Creek, which flows into Knik Arm, the very spot where the commission had made plans to construct their yards.

The Land Department then was called upon to survey and arrange for a new townsite on a plateau on the south side of Ship Creek, overlooking Knik Arm. The townsite is in every respect the ideal location for a city of several thousand people. The town of Anchorage has 121 blocks and over 1,400 lots, which are 50 by 140 feet. The streets are sixty feet wide and the alleys are twenty feet wide.

That the people have full confidence in Anchorage's future is shown by the amazing prices paid for building lots. These prices broke all sales records in the United States Land Offices.

On the afternoon of July 10, the new townsite lots were placed on sale. The first lot was appraised at $400, and was sold to the highest bidder for $825. The highest price lot went for $1,175. The sale of lots for the first two days brought over $96,000. Up to date the sales have reached over $150,000. Naturally, all of the Government officials are highly pleased at the rapidity with which the lots were sold and at the prices they brought.

In the town of Anchorage the commission has already set aside a block for Federal Reserve, Municipal Reserve, School Reserve, and Recreation Parks, in different parts of the city, and for city wharves in different parts of the city which are on the water. The commission has partially cleared the greater portion of the city by cutting and burning the trees. The streets have been cleared, the commission having placed an assessment of $10 on each lot within the cleared area in order to cover the expenses of this work. The commission is also clearing the Federal Reserve block and will erect thereon a building to be used by the Post Office. A temporary water supply is being put in, and many improvements are well under way.

The appraised value of the lots ran from $25 to $400. The lots are paid for according to this ingenious and generous plan. If a lot is sold for $25 the purchase price must be paid in full; if a lot is sold for less than $70, then $25 must be paid and the remainder is allowed to run for a period of five years.

If a lot is sold for more than $70, one-third of the purchase price is paid at once, and the balance paid in five annual installments. That is, if a lot is sold for $300, then $100 is to be paid at once, and $40 a year for five years, with no interest.

Chairman Edes and Mr. Mears of the commission, together with Superintendent of Sale Christensen and Superintendent of Construction O'Reilly, made a trip up the Matanuska on the 13th of July to look over some of the railroad line and the new townsite at the junction. On their return they made the announcement that there would be no more townsites surveyed this year or offered for sale.

The Alaska Engineering Commission has constructed a temporary dock near the beach to take care of its freight. When the commission first arrived at Anchorage it was seriously handicapped by the lack of sufficient lighters to handle the freight from the steamers. The steamers anchor about one-quarter of a mile from the temporary dock, which measures 60 by 200 feet.

It is the intention of the commission to dredge a channel from the point at which Ship Creek flows into Knik Arm to a depth sufficient to make it possible for the largest steamers to dock at the Government docks. Pilings have been driven along the proposed channel and a drill will be used to ascertain the character of the ground to be dredged.

To date the commission has constructed about three-quarters of a mile of road, and the work is by no means completed. A large number of the station men have not as yet completed their work, which was to have been finished by the first of July. From present indications it will not be completed before the 15th of August or later. The right-of-way has been cleared for about fifty miles toward the Matanuska coal fields.

The labor question at the present time is very serious. Hundreds of Alaskans as well as hundreds of men from elsewhere came, thinking they could secure work on the road, but many of them have been disappointed. A number of white men have taken contracts for some of the station work, but have been unable to make a living wage out of their contracts. Some of them have made as little as from $1.27 a day to 60 cents.

The Government is paying for common labor at the rate of 37½ cents an hour, and carpenters get from 40 to 50 cents. Teamsters are paid $60 per month and board. Most of the station work given out thus far has been let to the "bohunks," as the laborers from Greece and Montenegro are called. The common wages in this part of Alaska have been $3.50 per day and board or $4.50 without board. By the time a workman pays for board and room he has from $1.40 to $1.60 left. A large number of Alaskans have gone to the commission and tried to get contracts, but were turned down, and the contracts were let to "bohunks."

Undoubtedly there is some cause for complaint in a large number of cases. But, on the other hand, there are many unfavorable reports which have no foundation.

One set of men took some station work, and after the work was completed they had to wait eleven days for their checks from the Government. They kept after the commission, and after spending about three weeks they were paid for their work and lost time. Superintendent of Construction O'Reilly admitted that they were entitled to this pay because the engineers were slow in making their report.

In another case a teamster had been employed for $60 per month. He notified them when he started that he was going to board at home with his wife, and this was shown on the books. When he had worked a month a check for $60 was given him and the commissioners refused to give the matter any further consideration and told the man that he was out that much because the board was there and he did not take it, and for that reason it was his fault. After trying for three weeks, in every way possible, he finally secured what was due him. This was not done until he placed the matter in the hands of a lawyer.

The commission is making a charge of $2.50 a ton for lighterage; that is, for landing the freight from the steamers to the dock. The Knik and Susitna Transportation Company is making a charge of $2 per ton and lands the freight on the bank of Ship Creek. The drayage from the dock to the town is $1.50 a ton from the Government dock and $2 a ton from the beach, which makes the charges the same. The commission states that they are handling the freight at cost. The nearest to cost is about $2.25 per ton. The transportation company pays $1,000 a year license and pays its longshoremen 50 cents an hour, against the Government's 37½ cents an hour.

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF OF THE DRAMA

Augustus Thomas's New Duties in Organization That Will Perpetuate Work of Charles Frohman

WHEN in early May the cable brought the news that Charles Frohman had gone down with the Lusitania, there was wide speculation as to the future of the ambitious and far-flung enterprise that bore his name. What would become of it!

It was not merely a question as to whether the phrase, "Charles Frohman Presents," would, as before, make its appearance season after season on the programs of this country and England. It was not merely a question as to whether all the playwrights from Barrie to the youngest of them would continue to provide material or whether all the stars from Maude Adams to Marie Doro would remain loyally in the fold. Who would take Frohman's place in the house he built! That was the question. Who would do the work he used to do! And then, when July was half gone and the new season was just around the corner, it was announced that there had been created in the Frohman administration a new office—that of art director—and that the post had been accepted by Augustus Thomas.

It was easy enough to see why the post had been offered to Mr. Thomas, but there may have been some who wondered why he accepted. When any man who has prospered and made big his reputation in one field turns after many years to another, it is always interesting to know why. Obviously, no necessity compelled the author of "Arizona," "The Witching Hour," and many other plays to accept the new post at Frohman's. Why did it tempt him?

Quite as obviously, the person of whom to make the inquiry was Mr. Thomas himself. So one afternoon last week he was sought out in his new quarters and the question was put to him.

And, from what he had to say, it was clear that he had accepted because it was a task after his own heart and because he felt there was work there to be done in the interest of the American theatre, of player, playwright, and playgoer alike. It was clear, too, that Mr. Thomas, who is President of the Association of American Dramatists, regarded his office in the Frohman court, as, in a sense, the embassy of the American playwrights.

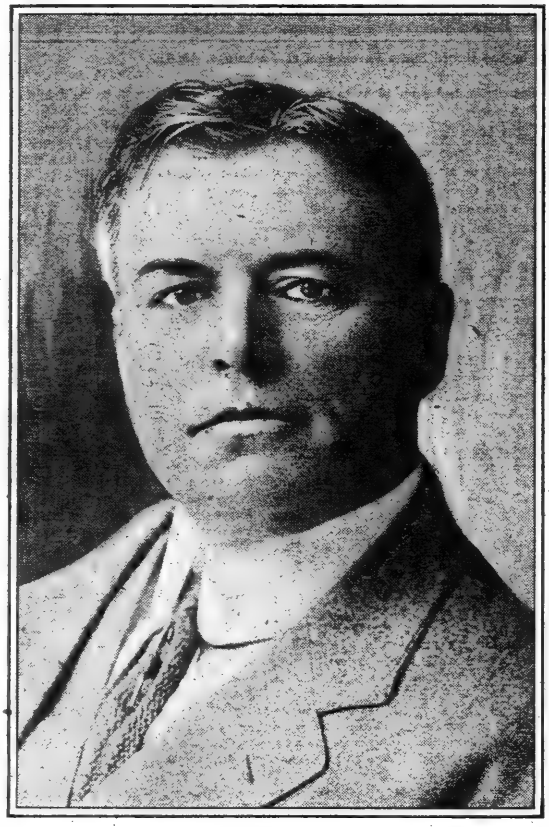
"This is a pretty big institution," he said, "and it seemed to all of us it would be an infinite pity if the name of Charles Frohman should be suffered to become a mere stencil. Granted he had the ability, a man who had at heart the interest of the American theatre could give bigger service right here, it seems to me, than in any way I can think of, except, perhaps, through an endowed theatre. Surely it was up to whichever one of us was summoned to try to fill the vacancy as best he could.

"Charles Frohman was a great loss. The theatre was fortunate for years in having in his place one of such artistic sensitiveness, one who, from first to last, was a producer for the love of it. That this was true of him I never had any doubt. I knew. Once, I remember, I went to him on behalf of a firmly established star who had become dissatisfied with his former management and wanted to be enrolled under the Frohman banner. He was exceedingly popular, and his season just closed had meant a profit of $100,000. He was a treasure. But Frohman would have none of him. 'Why,' he said, 'this man's a finished star. I want to make my stars. I want some one I can help. Your man's all right, but he doesn't need me.'

"That was Frohman's way. He was the actor's friend, and, for all the reams that have been written about his importations from England, he was also a good friend to the American dramatist. He had so many stars to equip that he had to go abroad for much of his material, but he was always hospitable to American playwrights, always urging them to write for him, always cheerful when, as sometimes happened, he lost many a dollar on their works."

So now Augustus Thomas is installed in one of the offices that may be reached from the lobby of the Empire. And his desk is piled high with letters of congratulation from fellow playwrights, some felicitating him, some felicitating the Frohman office, but all seemingly much pleased. One of these letters contained a comment most suggestive of the work Mr. Thomas has already set out to do. It marks him, if you will, as the editor in chief of the big Frohman publication.

"I have often wondered," said, in effect, the writer of the letter, "why it was that the theatres did not have in them some one corresponding to the editor of a newspaper. Why, for years it has been with us as it would be with the newspapers if they were edited by the publishers."



Augustus Thomas.

Indeed, much of the work Mr. Thomas has set out to do is editorial in nature. It would seem as though it were a distinct advantage to have an expert craftsman holding high office in a producing house. Often your producing manager in these parts is obliged to take a play or leave it. He may feel that something is wrong with the manuscript without knowing where the trouble lies. Sometimes he must undergo the harrowing experience of seeing a play he has rejected subsequently whipped into shape at some other office and thereafter produced with puzzling success at the house next door. Your producer, who is also a playwright, might suggest a change here and another there, counsel the strengthening of this curtain with the stern omission of that scene, and so, by conference, arrive at the moment for auspicious rehearsal.

And the editor at Frohman's is already making his assignments. For example, Mr. Thomas has been struck with the dramatic possibilities of an English book from which, in the course of several days, he prepared a scenario. He has sent for an American dramatist, turned over the scenario and some suggestions to boot, and asked her to write the play. We shall be seeing that play one of these days. And so the work goes on.

"Of course, one reason I'm here is because I like the producing end of the game," said Mr. Thomas, back after a fleeting visit to another room where a new scenery model had just arrived for inspection. "I've always been something of a producer. For my own plays, all of them, I have selected the casts, designed the scenery, conducted the rehearsals, and rung up the curtain. You can't do much more than that, can you?

"Yes," he went on in answer to an inevitable question, "such knowledge of the theatre as enables one to do that much is a valuable part of the playwright's equipment. It is hardly so essential that the lack of it disqualifies, but it is one of the tools that are very useful. It gives the play itself a better chance, for it is a matter of interpretation, and after all, no one knows better than the playwright just what he means by what he has written. If he can produce it himself, his work has an advantage akin to the one it has if he gets a chance to read his play aloud. I suppose," he added reflectively, "there is many a good play unproduced that would have been produced had the author found the opportunity to read it to the manager who rejected it."

So Augustus Thomas has not just turned producer. His first flights at production were made years ago at St. Louis. He was a railroad employe something more than thirty-five years ago, and on the side he would write and present plays for the delectation of conductors' organizations and the like. Later he was general producer for a rather elaborate amateur society that drew its casts from some of the best St. Louis homes and would spend as much as $1,000 on each of a half dozen productions every year. After that came barnstorming experiences, a flier now and then into newspaper work, and the eventual production in New York of "Editha's Burglar" in the days when Elsie Leslie was an infant phenomenon.

It was when he was called to Palmer's to take the desk of "Dramatist Extraordinary" left vacant by Boucicault that Mr. Thomas puzzled out for himself a way to be systematically a dramatist—a method of procedure for one who, as actor, railroad man, and newspaper writer, had seen a bit of the country in his day. So came an idea of studying the attitude toward women as it varied in different parts of the country. In "Alabama" she was the object of a sentimental, chivalrous deference. "In Mizzoura" she was co-worker and pal. In "Arizona" she was so rare that she was the greater treasure and, as such, forgiven much.

"I was trying to dramatize American womanhood," he said with a smile, "but they thought I was dramatizing the geography, and there followed forthwith so many dreadful plays named after the various Commonwealths of our long-suffering Union that I gave it up in discouragement.

"Well, I produced all these plays myself, nor is this my first opportunity to produce the plays of other authors. All told, I suppose, I have put on about ten such, but my name has not appeared, and no one has been the wiser."

And Mr. Thomas looked at the ceiling and smiled reminiscently for all the world as though the last time such an evidence of critical discernment had been written into the record was just after the alert critic in question had accidentally seen him sneaking into the theatre during the throes of rehearsal.

About this time it seemed as though the new art director at Frohman's ought to give some advice for the benefit of those who have not yet written plays, but firmly intend to.

"If you can catch your would-be dramatist young," said Mr. Thomas with conviction, "put him into newspaper work. I know no better freshman course for dramatists. If you want proof, read the roster of your graduates."

So much for advice. But no theatrical interview—sense of character or no sense of character—is complete without its Barrymore anecdote. Unless you are talking with some of the youngsters of the stage like Ernest Glendinning, say, or the author of "On Trial," you are sure to be rewarded with something that came long ago from the quick tongue of Maurice Barrymore.

It seems he played the burglar in "The Burglar" when Mr. Thomas, as a fledgling dramatist, submitted that effort to Boston. That night they sat up for the morning newspapers. Mr. Thomas swears he has never done it since. That first experience was exceedingly painful. Only one of the several reviewers could see any excuse at all for the continued existence of "The Burglar." The young playwright was very low in his mind.

"But what does it matter what they say," cried Barrymore with maginificent contempt. "Why, what are they but a tribe of Malvolios!"

Whereat a sympathetic comedian wanted to say he was too old a hand at first nights to be bothered by what cometh in the morning.

"I've been at too many first nights"—

"Entirely too many," agreed Barrymore, gloomily, and the meeting adjourned in laughter.

That word adjourned was suggestive. Some more scenery models had arrived, a playwright was waiting on the telephone with a half dozen ideas, and an actor was pacing the next room, bent on discussing a new rôle. The interviewer, cheered as any American would be, with the knowledge that he was attending the right school for playwrights, went his way.

MORE DICKENS, LESS BERGSON

That Is What the Modern Mother Chiefly Needs, Says Mrs. Josephine Dodge Daskam Bacon

By Joyce Kilmer.

JOSEPHINE DODGE DASKAM BACON has an apoplectic cow. This is not merely a "tongue twister" like "Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers." It is the serious statement of a significant fact.

For when I went to see Mrs. Bacon at her great pleasant home on Beech Hill the other day, I found that she would break off a discussion of Bergson or the Imagistes to go out and consult the veterinary, resume the talk as if nothing had happened, and casually pause in her criticism of the Spoon River Anthology to tell a servant to give the sick cow a drink of nitroglycerine or something of the sort.

Now, Greenwich Village has its hundreds of authors who understand the care of Sphinxes. But a cow—and especially a cow with apoplexy—that is a problem with which few contemporary novelists could cope.

But Mrs. Bacon is very much a housewife as well as very much an author. She has written twenty-two books, she is the mother of four children, she personally superintends all the affairs of the Bacon estate. So she does not let a sick cow keep her from discussing literature or literature keep her from taking care of the cow.

I told Mrs. Bacon of the remark of another woman novelist—Gertrude Atherton—to the effect that Dickens and Thackeray were no longer read in England.

Mrs. Bacon smiled. "That's unfortunate," she said. "Very unfortunate—if it is true. Personally, I can't think of the English language without Dickens and the Bible.

"If I wanted to make people understand just what the Anglo-Saxon race is, do you know what I'd do? I'd tell them to read the novels of Charles Dickens. When any other writer of English can put into his pages so much sanity, humor, and humanity as Dickens put into his, when any other writer of English can create a golden glow of atmosphere like that which Dickens created—then, and not before then, it will be time to say that Dickens is out of date.

"I read all Dickens's novels over again every three or four years, and Thackeray's I read, too, but not quite so frequently. I enjoy re-reading Charles Reade and Anthony Trollope, but I can comfortably go for a longer time without reading their novels than without reading those of Dickens and Thackeray.

"If I went for a long time without reading Dickens and Thackeray, I am afraid to think what might happen to me. I know I'd become a decadent—I might even become symbolistic!

"If the English people don't read Dickens, perhaps it's because they live Dickens. They seem almost to be creations of Dickens. But I think they read his novels in England, as they do over here.

"Once a college professor asked me what novel was read more than any other by foreigners in the United States. It was one of those rhetorical questions which college professors love to ask. I was supposed to say, 'I don't know. What is it?' and be amazed by the answer.

"But I promptly said, 'David Copperfield'—much to the professor's annoyance, for that was the right answer. Then he asked me what I thought was the novel next in popularity with foreigners in the United States. I said, 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' That, too, was right; so the professor gave me up in disgust.

"If the women of America read more Dickens and less Bergson, it would be a fine thing for them. Dickens is better for them than Bergson. If they read Dickens it would be a good thing for them and for everything that is theirs; a good thing for their children, a good thing for their livers—a good thing for their cows!

"One trouble with the modern American woman is that she will read only the authors about whom she can hear at conferences. And nobody gives conferences or lectures about Dickens.

"The modern woman is ready to follow the line of least resistance in her reading. She likes to have some one tell her what she ought to read and what she ought to think about it. She won't read anything that she hasn't heard about at the rate of $5 an hour.

"I don't think that any one who doesn't know the old forms of art has any right to talk about the new. Yet I find women who never read Swinburne reading the Imagistes—or, at any rate, talking as if they had read them.

"That seems to be what the modern American woman requires of literature—something about which she can talk. At my own college—Smith—they actually have a course in the works of Sir James Matthew Barrie!

"I asked a young friend of mine about this Barrie course, and she said it was a very fine course indeed. The girls, she said, heard about Barrie's plays in the classroom, and then they could talk about them at home! When some one at dinner mentioned 'Peter Pan' or 'The Admirable Crichton,' they could plunge right into the conversation!

"Well, even if the modern woman won't read Dickens, she is in his books all the same. Mrs. Jellaby is alive and flourishing in New York today. I see her often. She is better dressed than of old, but her house and her children are in the same state of disorder that they were in when Dickens lived. Mrs. Jellaby clasps her hands and rolls her eyes and says: 'My dear, I simply can't think for a single moment about anything but those poor Belgians! It's simply frightful! Something must be done for them!'

"Now, Heaven knows that the Belgians need to have something done for them, and it's being done. But I don't think Mrs. Jellaby's aid is of any particular value."

In spite of the popularity of "Margarita's Soul" and "Open Market," there will always be some people to whom Josephine Bacon is, first and last, the author of "The Madness of Philip" and "Memoirs of a Baby." And the writer of these entertaining chronicles of childhood ought, I thought, to have decided opinions on the subject of the care of children. She has opinions, thoroughly practical, if the evidence of her four children be accepted—and these opinions are utterly at variance with most of the educational fads of the day.

"Once upon a time," she said, "America was notorious for its spoiled children. Well, the children aren't 'spoiled' nowadays, in the old sense of the term; they aren't especially mischievous and impudent. But they are spoiled in another sense of the word; they are overtrained, overdieted, overMontessoried.

"The modern American child is appallingly lacking in initiative. These modern American children can't do the simplest things for themselves. They can't think for themselves; they haven't the slightest idea of amusing themselves. Everything is done for them by nurses, governesses, tutors, and scout masters, and as a result they become absolutely incapable of independent thought or action."

"There's that Montessori system," said Mrs. Bacon, throwing a hickory log into the open fire with a vigor that emphasized her words. "What pathetic rot that is! Of course, it may have done wonders for the children in the slums of Rome. But why can't women understand that such a system as that is meant for groups, that it is ridiculous to take it into the home?

"You see, the children of the very poor are let alone too much. But the children of the rich are not let alone enough. I am told that the children of the slums stand around listlessly and need to be told what to do to amuse themselves. Organized play may be all right for them. But it's all wrong for intelligent children of well-to-do families.

"These supervised playgrounds with young men and women watching and directing the children all the time do more harm than good. A normal child can make up his own games, and it is better for him to do so.

"Many modern theorists believe that a child's mind is an empty space which they must constantly strive to fill. What dangerous nonsense that is! Any child whose mind is an empty space is useful only as fertilizer!

"This constant prying into a child's mind is a ruinous thing. A child has his rights, he should be allowed his own individuality.

"The modern American woman has a fatal fondness for analogy—that is why she is so fond of Maeterlinck. Some one tells her that a child's mind is like a garden in which she must plant beautiful flowers, and she seizes the idea with tremendous enthusiasm. If one of my children had a mind like a garden I wouldn't let it come any nearer me than the laundry!

"I haven't the remotest idea what my children do with a great deal of their time. They go away somewhere and yell. They have a perfect right to do so, just as grown-up people have a perfect right to play bridge or read Robert Chambers's novels.

"My husband wastes two golden hours every day playing bridge on the train. I think that he'd object strongly if any one tried to fill his mind with great thoughts during that time!

"I'm willing to do the important things with my children, but they must do the unimportant things for themselves. I'll read them the Bible and Greek plays and Pilgrim's Progress, but I won't read Louise Alcott to them. They can read her books if they want to, but they can do it alone.

"I'll play tennis with my children, and ride and swim with them. But I won't jump up and down and yell with them—although I have not the slightest objection to their indulgence in that diversion.

"The modern child is too much of a laboratory product. He is studied and supervised and directed until he can't call his soul his own."

Although her children show extraordinarily advanced tastes in literature, Mrs. Bacon has no use for those precocious youngsters who were formerly called "infant phenomena."

"One amusing thing about that Boris Sidis youth," she said, "is that to prove his wonderful education what he did was to lecture on the fourth dimension—a subject about which nobody knows anything at all. He could say what he liked about the fourth dimension, you see, and nobody could get anything on him. Now, it would have been a fairer test for him to lecture on something other people knew about. He might have lectured about an apoplectic cow, for instance.

"That Stoner child, and other children of the sort, who are constantly put through their paces, I don't know what they'll be when they grow up! How can they ever have time to think?"

The last report from the cow stable was that the patient was able to stand up and eat a little bran-mash, with an ice-pack on her head. And the Bacon children wanted their mother to read them some "Don Quixote." So I came away.

TEN AMERICAN ARTISTS HONORED

Each One Has a Special Room for an Individual Exhibition at the Pan-American Exposition

Childe Hassam. Girl with Plate of Peaches.

By Clara T. MacChesney.

IN the American section of the Fine Arts Palace at the San Francisco Exposition ten artists are honored by each having a room for his individual exhibit. They are William Chase, Gari Melchers, John Sargent, Childe Hassam, William Keith, Edward Tarbell, Frank Duveneck, John Twachtman, Edward Redfield, and James McN. Whistler.

It was a surprise to find that of the two greatest men, Whistler and Sargent, the former is inadequately shown in a side room, and the latter is meagerly represented. William Keith, the only Californian, is relegated to one of the small dark rooms.

As to the number of pictures these ten show, it is not only my opinion, but that of others, that it is too large. In some cases there is little variety of subject, and in too many, repetitions. One-half the number of canvases would have sufficed in at least eight of the exhibits, and been as representative.

As I was taking notes in one of the rooms a little old lady, who had been silently studying the pictures for some time, said timidly: "Why do they paint so many pictures?" That summed the whole situation in a nutshell.

The number in these ten exhibits ranges from eleven pictures by Sargent to forty-three (thirteen being etchings) by Duveneck.

Chase not only rehung his pictures, but had stuff especially dyed for the walls and floor—a deep blue. Velours of the same shade drapes the doorways, there are blue cushions on the seats, and a blue canopy is spread overhead to soften the light. The room is vastly improved, and, needless to say, the others suffer by comparison.

I had the pleasure of finding Mr. Chase the morning after the changes had been made, and of congratulating him.

"It is so much better to have a carpet, isn't it?" he replied. "It is so difficult—isn't it?—to look at pictures when there is a terrible noise of tramping feet?"

I agreed with him, and went on to say that I was glad to see some old friends again, especially his portrait of Whistler.

"It was away back in 1885," he said, "that we arranged to paint each other, and not to exchange, but to present them to some museum. We had a correspondence row, which often happened, you know, and where his is of me, whether he destroyed it or if it is among his effects, I do not know. I am to have my wish, for I have just sold it to a gentleman who has promised to will it to the Metropolitan Museum."

His lovely "Woman with a White Shawl," lent by the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, gazed down at me from the centre of the main wall. She always gives one, with her high-bred, gentle air, a sense of distinction, of separateness. Of all Chase's portraits this has the most charm and spirituality.

Pointing to a fine sketch of his own head, Chase said: "I am commissioned by my native town, Richmond, Ind., to paint a large self-portrait. I did this to get my hand in."

Again we see Lydia Emmet looking at us over her shoulder, and Steichen smiling at us from the wall beside her. Chase shows five of his superb still-life. The "Just Onions" never looked better than here against the blue background.

"I thought I'd paint something besides large fish," he said, pointing to a loaf of bread, a plate with two small herrings, and a knife, called the "Poor Man's Meal." "I do think I have quality in that, don't you?"

We here exchanged views on the painting of still-life, spoke of the master of that art, Vollon, and here Chase aptly said: "The greatest art is to take an ugly thing and make it beautiful."

"That is just what Vollon did," I said.

An early portrait of Frank Currier, painted during the Munich days, (as were two others of him in the exposition, one by Frank Duveneck, the third a self-portrait,) hangs near one door. An early portrait of Mrs. Chase is loaned by the Carnegie Institute; near by hangs a recent portrait of R. U. Johnson, which is to go to the Academy of Arts and Letters. "Helen," holding her white skirts, dances by the other door, and half a dozen charming little Venetian scenes complete this representative exhibit.

I was also fortunate in finding Duveneck in his room, completing the restretching of the burlap and the rehanging of his pictures. The carpet, wall covering, and cushions here are a dull green. He was questioning the size of the canopy overhead, which was found to be too small.

"I tried to make my collection entirely retrospective," he said, beaming at me through his spectacles. "These all date between 1871 and 1880, and with the exception of twelve are loaned by the Cincinnati Art Museum."

A very lifelike portrait of him, also loaned by the Cincinnati Art Museum, is the work of his pupil, Joseph De Camp. Directly under this is placed the replica of the memorial to Mrs. Duveneck, from the same museum, the bronze being in Florence, where Mr. Duveneck modeled it in 1891, and where she died and was buried. The marble is in the Boston Art Museum.

It represents a reclining female figure with her hands crossed on her breast, the drapery artistically arranged and carefully modeled, on which is laid a victory palm. Masses of hair are coiled around her head, and the lovely face smiles as if asleep. It attracts the general public, being the only memorial of the kind in any of the galleries.

The paintings are mostly heads, being done in the bitumen method so prevalent in Munich in the eighties. Magnificent is the modeling of both head and hands in a "Woman with Forget-Me-Nots," it being higher in key than the others, and having no black shadows to disfigure the face. It is a canvas which shows great knowledge of technique.

"The Turkish Page," loaned by the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, is a large canvas, badly cracked, showing a boy in Turkish costume, shrinking from a white cockatoo which is perched on a brass dish of fruit in the boy's lap. "The Woman with a Fan," in the method of Ribot, is an excellent canvas. Near by hangs an early portrait of John Alexander, also an old pupil of Duveneck.

Opposite are placed thirteen etchings of scenes in Venice, executed the same year as Whistler's famous series, and about which there was a tempest in a teapot in London in 1881. At the right of these is a fine landscape of beech-woods in Bavaria, done in a broad, free manner.

At the time of writing it has just been announced that a gold medal has been awarded to Duveneck for his work in building up a love and knowledge of art in this country, especially in his home city, Cincinnati. If this Special Committee of Award had been just, it would have given another to Chase, for no artist on the Eastern coast has so generously given his time and his criticism to the student, or so raised the art standard.

I shall never forget the old Tenth Street studio days, when the raw student and the art lover were so freely admitted to his studio. Here one found his superb copies of the old masters, many photographs of celebrated paintings, as well as his own work, all of which many learned there to appreciate and to enjoy.

It is indeed a jump from brown and black shadows and backgrounds to the lightness and whiteness of the Twachtman room. Here the wall covering is white cheesecloth, and there is no canopy to soften the light from above, which is a glare on sunny days.

This is a most comprehensive collection of both Twachtman's early and of his late work, one-half being his poetic snow scenes. They are twenty-six in number, all oils, a third being loaned from public and private collections.

"Meadow-flowers," the golden rod and aster, a most exquisite spiritualization of these common flowers, is loaned by the Brooklyn Museum. "River in Winter," belonging to the Carnegie Institute, is the essence of simplicity, and has great breadth in the handling of the snow. One's mind wanders to other well-known snow pictures, Walter Palmer's and several by noted Swedish artists in the present exhibition. How different they are in character!

One of his inimitable Niagara scenes is loaned by W. J. Johnson. No other artist has ever been as successful in putting on canvas that great volume of water. An early work shows a Dutch landscape with the familiar windmill and stream. Here is a premonition of the high key of Twachtman's later paintings. The only figure picture is of a mother in black holding a baby, both reflected in a mirror. This has his usual breadth of treatment, but lacks the charm of his Winter impressions.

This is a room in which to linger long and dream, so full is it of poetic creations, but one little understood by the sightseers.

Sargent is buried in a small, dark, arsenic-green room. Several of his artist friends redecorated and rehung it, "as he would have done it," said Chase. Unfortunately they chose white cheesecloth, which they tacked over the green walls, and put up a white canopy—not at all suited to the key of Sargent's pictures.

His eleven canvases are of both early and late work. Dominating all the other paintings, but almost impossible to see in the poor light, is that magnificent canvas of Henry James, and exhibited, if I am not mistaken, for the first time in America. This is the result of breaking his rule never to paint another portrait. If he can always achieve such a success, may he often break that rule!

A companion to this is that great portrait of Pulitzer, which one regrets is not shown here. Also missing are the portrait of Miss Thomas, Dean of Bryn Mawr College, whose hands are such a work of art, and the lovely child's portrait of little Beatrice Goelet, the embodiment of innocence.

But why go on wishing how the contents of this room might have been raised to a representative level and by works right here in America!

It is generally known that the James was injured last Summer as it hung in the Royal Academy by the axe of a misguided suffragette. I am sorry to say that it rouses more curiosity than admiration, and after the carefully restored cuts are pointed out few linger to study the merits of the painting.

At its right hangs an early example—a life-sized nude of a young Italian girl. It is badly cracked, is hard and tight in its modeling. Beside this hangs the portrait of John Hay, lent by his son, Clarence Hay; not one of Sargent's best examples.

On the opposite wall hangs an early canvas of the celebrated French beauty, Mme. Gautrin. Sargent was not as impressed by her as was Gustave Courtois, whose painting of her is far superior and one of his most celebrated achievements. I heard one lady say of it: "I always turn my back on that every time I come in this room; I dislike it so much."

I was sorry to see the sketch (head) of Joseph Jefferson, loaned, I believe, by The Players, which does not do either the sitter or the painter justice, and which Mr. Jefferson never liked.

"Rose" is the portrait bust of a young girl, where Sargent rises to his usual height. The white scarf, with brocaded border, is a masterpiece of technique and in texture like Greuze's painting of white stuffs.

Here are several of his late courtyard and stable scenes, subjects which only a genius can make interesting. A canvas titled "Reconnoitring," which some think is a self-portrait, shows an artist in shirt sleeves seated on his sketch stool and embracing his paint box, with snow-covered mountains of Tyrol in the distance.

Adjoining Sargent's room is that of Gari Melchers, which is filled with a large and well-selected number of canvases, and which he came from Weimar to hang and arrange at the opening of the exposition. His contributions number twenty-one oils, many being old friends.

Here again we see "The Fencing Master," who, foil in hand, is standing at attention. A superb type of man, superbly painted. Opposite, a young mother bends lovingly over her baby as she nurses it, also an old favorite, but a much later canvas. One wonders why this has never found a home in one of our art museums.

"The Skaters," loaned by the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, is one of the Dutch series of a decorative tendency. Here is a young couple, skates in hand.

Another of this period—and a very lively one—is of a young Dutch mother, in full costume, nursing her baby, while a little child stands at her knee, all flatly, simply, harmoniously rendered, and a symphony of delicate color against a dull green meadow. The "Sailor and His Sweetheart," loaned by Charles L. Freer, is the favorite of the throng which pours through the galleries, for it tells a story.

Again we see the sturdy "Smithy," and that charming mother and child, loaned by James Deering. Here are no embroidered jackets or strong effects of color. The whole interest is centred on the face of the young mother and the little child. They both gaze at you, the baby with that wondering, old look that babies often have. It is monotonous in its dull browns and grays, yet it is a picture to live with.

The most dominating is that of the late Hugo Reisinger, seated in front of a canvas, while Melchers, in shirt sleeves and yellow waistcoat, stands behind, palette and brush in hand, as if resting while the sitter criticises the picture. It is unusual, both as subject and composition, and arrests the eye, but as a self-portrait Melchers has not done himself justice.

A number of high-keyed, sunny interiors, of women sewing or reading, or of maids at work, and a nook in his studio garden, complete this most representative collection.

A close neighbor is Hassam, in a white-walled room. His contribution numbers thirty-eight, many being those exquisite little pastels and water colors which often show him at his best. Of the oils there is a great variety of subjects: landscape, still life, portraits, seascapes, figures in sunlight—a very interesting lot of pictures. It is another room in which to study, to dream, but one whose contents the ordinary public rarely grasps.

Half a dozen of the canvases were in Montross's Gallery last Fall. Again we see the black-haired girl holding her plate of peaches in the sunlit grape arbor, and the lazy girl reading in the hammock on the porch; the still life of fruit and of leaves on the white tablecloth, and the Summer girl crossing the bridge, with the white-winged yachts in the distance. Gloucester Harbor—a beautiful color symphony, showing a blue, blue sea, rocks in the foreground on which a white-clad figure is seated, holding on her hat in the wind—is one of the favorites in this room.

At its left is a large canvas named "Aphrodite"—a back view of a nude figure gazing in a hand mirror, with a cliff and green trees in the background—a picture technically correct, but entirely without charm or interest.

"The Strawberry Tea-Set" is one of the series of figures standing against a curtained window, all diffused in sunlight. Here the model is clad in a blue kimono and, with cup in hand, which she is examining, stands by the table on which the tea-set is placed. The whole is a harmony in restrained color.

Not so subdued is "California Hills in Spring," of an exaggerated green which is a libel on these hills, green though they may be after the rains. A portrait of a young girl in white, entirely in shadow against a strong green background, is one of the most successful of these difficult subjects.

William Keith, whose wooded landscapes are well-known and greatly admired by all art lovers on the Western coast, is badly shown in a small, darkred room. As Keith's pictures are nearly all low in key, in this dimly lighted well they are almost impossible to see, which arouses the indignation of his friends. The brilliant blue, mauve, and white snow scenes of Redfield in the adjoining white room make the contrast all the greater.

The Keiths number twenty-nine, and with few exceptions are all loaned by private collectors, and with two exceptions are oils. Very few are of his early literal period, when he faithfully studied the beauties of the California landscape. Had he kept on in this vein some think he might have become the American Daubigny. But, possessing the temperament of a poet and a mystic, in his later work he gave only fleeting impressions of nature, broadly painted.

He says: "Broadly speaking, there are but two schools of landscape painting: one that has to do mainly with facts, workmanship, and technique; the other with emotions, so subtle, so elusive, so evanescent, that they are beyond human reach."

His palette is in a low, rich chord of greens, browns, and ambers, with a few blue or mauve notes. The general title for his most representative work might be "A Wooded Landscape." They represent huge masses of dark foliage, simply modeled, in contrast to a white-clouded or sunset sky, with a pool of water in the foreground. One of his admirers has said that he never detected the lack of human interest in Keith's wood interiors, as a hidden presence is often felt.

These canvases, painted during his introspective period, correspond to those of his friend George Inness. Unlike this contemporary he saw less color, and in a darker key.

"The Berkeley Oaks," (a favorite subject,) "The Impression," "The Spirit of Music," all are splendid examples of his ripest period, as well as "In the Portals of the Wood." "Into the Storm" shows a rider on horseback, bending forward against the fierce wind, on the edge of a forest, and reminds one of Millet's wonderful conception of the same subject. One regrets that only two of Keith's watercolors are included in his exhibition, and but one of his cool, gray-blue motifs in oil.

I was very much amused and interested at a remark I heard one lady make to another of Keith's pictures: "Well, there's no use talking, they are permissible but not possible."

How he would have enjoyed that sage remark! I can easily see his huge gray head shaking with laughter.

Edward Redfield's twenty-five examples in the next room (white) are all finished oils, the greater proportion being his well-known snow scenes. These have nothing introspective nor imaginative like Twachtman's, but are all bold, realistic scenes on a river bank on a sunny Spring day, and all are painted in one method and in the same mood.

One sees patches of melting snow in the sunlight, or houses on a bank; sometimes trees, whose branches form delicate tracery against the pale blue sky. On one wall alone are hung seven of these snow scenes, some being repetitions. By contrast he exhibits two large early evening impressions—one of Brooklyn Bridge from the New York side, the other of the Singer Building and its neighboring high structures, all of which are agleam with lights as well as the low shops and the ferries in the foreground. These two show a new and interesting vein, such as blue-purple symphonies, and offset the many bright snow scenes by which they are surrounded.

Tarbell has twenty canvases. Many are life sized, being three-quarter portraits, and well fill the space accorded to him. All but two are loaned by public museums, clubs, or private collectors. Nearly all have been exhibited several times in New York. There are seven of his interiors hung, which critics generally concede to be his best work. The early interiors, with one or two girls (generally one) reading or sewing, are somewhat monotonous in color, yet have a wonderful envelopment, and a truth in their values. So fine are they that one is reminded of that other wonderful painter of interiors, Vermeer. Two later interiors are more luminous and better color and show the effect of sunlight.

The Whistler room is remote from the other nine, and like five others the walls are hung in white. His twenty-one contributions, with five exceptions, are from Charles Freer's collection.

"The Falling Rocket" or "Nocturne in Black and Gold," lent by Samuel Untermyer, was the cause of the celebrated lawsuit between Whistler and Ruskin, or, as the former put it, "between the Brush and the Pen." One reads a very interesting account of this notorious episode in the Pennells' "Life of Whistler." Ruskin had written of this picture:

> I've seen and heard much of cockney impudence before now, but never expected to hear a coxcomb ask 200 guineas for flinging a pot of paint in the public's face.

Whistler felt that either he or Ruskin must settle the question whether an artist may paint what he wants to. Whistler brought suit. The jury decided for Whistler, giving him one farthing damages.

The only life-sized, full-length portrait is of Mrs. Huth, lent by E. Huth, Esq. This was executed at Whistler's best portrait period, 1872-1874, when those of his mother, Thomas Carlyle, Little Miss Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Leyland were painted. Pennells' "Life of Whistler" says:

> It is Holbein-like in its dignity, its sobriety, the flat modeling, the exquisite rendering of the lace at the throat, and the wrists. Mrs. Huth wears black velvet, and stands with her back turned, her head in profile. The background is black, with a wonderful luminous and intense depth.

There are four Japanese "Seabeach and Figure Studies" for six schemes or projects. "In these he was trying to combine Japanese and classical motives, expressing beauty of form and design that haunted him." They are thinly painted in blues, pinks, and mauves, and represent draped and undraped figures, combined with flowers, with a blue sea beyond. He made many pastel drawings as well as etchings for these projects, which were never completed.

Four small oils—two being beach scenes, exquisite and harmonious as only Whistler can achieve—and four small water colors hang on the opposite wall. Two small heads, one "The Daughter of the Concierge," is loaned by Mrs. William Noyes.

This is a small but fairly representative collection of this great man's work.

In the room adjoining his etchings comprise many of the Venetian series, and lithographs of his pastels and drawings. It is said that his work during his fourteen months in Venice (his only visit) is better known than any of his other. These are selected from the "series of twelve," as well as from the series of twenty-six etchings of the charming little pastels which raised such a storm of abuse when first exhibited in London. It is said: "The surprise was that they could be so simple, so easy, but Whistler said 'only the doing it was the difficulty.'"

SEALS ACT MUCH LIKE SUBMARINES

Leading Authority on Their Habits Draws Parallel Between Them and Latest Naval Weapon

By Henry W. Elliott.

THAT airships, gliding planes, and aeroplanes have been suggested to man by the flight of birds is well understood by us. That the deadly submarine of our present maritime war has been suggested to us by any form of natural animal life is not so patent. Doubtless it has often been in the minds of fishermen and whalers when tempest tossed and severely driven. Certainly it would be a happy ship for them that could be so constructed which would safely dive with all on board to the quiet depths below, there to rest content and easy until the "clouds rolled by" above.

We have come to regard the soaring albatross or the condor as the prototype of the aeroplane. When we look for a natural model for the submarine we find it well made in the body of the fur seal and fully suggested by its method of progression in the sea, for it travels there only when wholly submerged.

Unlike, however, the "Unterseebote," the fur seal is not fitted for swimming on the surface; it only rises there to survey, to breathe, and to sleep; it never attempts to swim with head above water on any course, no matter how short. It rises, when undisturbed or not alarmed, looks about with head and neck well stretched up above the surface of the sea, fills its lungs with air, (literally compressed,) turns its head down, and, with its powerful anterior flippers, drives it below the surface to the depth of five or ten feet, then ahead on that level; thus submerged, the body of the seal glides through the water as swiftly as a swallow in the air—it is a vanishing streak to our eyes.

How long it remains thus submerged when traveling, no one has any definite knowledge, but the best consensus of opinion gives it a rise at intervals of every three or four minutes to breathe—that is, a pause of less than two or three seconds with barely more than its nose and eyes above the surface, for exhalation and renewed inhalation—when down goes the trim body to speed ahead again.

When our submarines were first brought out, a trip of more than 300 miles from base was the utmost limit of their cruising. Today, they have been so perfected by the Germans that we know that they can cruise safely more than 3,000 miles from that base. Therefore, in this connection it is interesting to know that the fur seal makes a submarine journey in the North Pacific Ocean of more than 5,000 miles from its base on the Pribilov Islands in Bering Sea, and then returns.

An animal which can not only make such an extended journey, but can steer its course over an uncharted waste from point to point, month by month, with positive regularity and in perfect time, must be a fine type of swimming machine—it is.

There is to be observed a close resemblance between the cigar-shaped submarine boat and the body form of the fur seal. As we view them laterally, this resemblance is complete; they are both driven ahead by feathering screws, and they are both kept on the level of their submerged course at a given distance below the surface by rudders.

Then we observe that the periscope, to which the submarine craft owes all of its efficiency, is duplicated exactly by the seal's nose and eyes, and which are all that it ever lifts above the surface when startled, and in flight of passage.

Again we note that the fur seal as a submarine has a great advantage over the human boat—it has eyes that can look ahead and around under water—how far, we do not know, but it is reasonable to assume that the seal's eye can see as far under water as the eye of a camera can, and which we have the evidence of in good records.

Then, too, it also has an acute sense of hearing under sea, for we know that the whirring of a propeller's screw will drive all the seals away for miles around a steamer. We know that, because some of the early pelagic sealing vessels were fitted with small auxiliary screws, and these, when put into use, had to be removed.

Then, on the other hand, we find that our submarine boat has one great advantage over its sealing prototype—it can remain for many hours—yes, days—under sea. The seal cannot stay there more than four or five minutes, as far as we have any proof of.

That it can remain that long has been well known to us by the evidence curiously given to us by the seals themselves. They have a habit of turning themselves head down in the sea, with their hind flippers lifted up entirely out of water, completely reversing their normal attitude when rising to breathe and survey. This habit is to enable them better to scratch their sides and loins with the fore flippers than they can when not thus inverted, because the hair and fur open better in this queer position under water when rubbed by their flippers. A great many stop-watch records have been made of the time under water which a seal would keep its head when thus scratching, and the limit of four to five minutes was frequently made—never any longer.

With reference to the powers of destruction, of course our fur seal boat has no torpedo tubes, but it can and does "shoot its mouth off" at fish with a deadly certainty.

In this connection it is interesting to note that seals do not catch fish by pursuit of them—not at all; they shoot down, from above, upon the backs, or up from below, to strike at the bellies of their finny prey.

How fast these phocine submarines can speed up under the stimulus of excitement or fear, no one knows. But it is well known when a vessel is coming down before a gale of wind from the islands, logging fourteen to sixteen knots, that a bevy of fur seals will often follow the ship for hours, and repeatedly swim by it, swim around it, and then renew the chase and circling of it.

MAKING STATE LAWS UNIFORM

Twenty-fifth Anniversary of Movement Sees Great Progress in Harmonizing and Simplifying Laws

A CELEBRATION to commemorate the completion of twenty-five years' work in harmonizing and bringing into a reasonable state of uniformity the divergent laws of our States dealing with many important business and social interests will be held this week in Salt Lake City. It is the annual conference of the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, an official body whose members are appointed by the Governors of the various States, and meets in different sections of the country every year.

Closely affiliated with this national commission is the American Bar Association, of which ex-President Taft was President last year. He will address the delegates of both bodies this year. The annual meeting of the American Bar Association will follow the conference of the Uniform Laws Commissioners, the latter opening next Tuesday, Aug. 10, and continuing for one week. The meetings of the Bar Association will begin on Aug. 17.

The meetings will be attended by many of the most prominent lawyers from all parts of the country and others interested in simplifying many of the annoying interstate regulations. Particular prominence will be given to the successful rounding out of the first quarter of a century devoted to what was originally regarded as the almost impossible task of making it easier for residents of one State to do business with those of other States.

"It is not more law but greater uniformity in the existing law which is needed," said Charles Thaddeus Terry, a professor in the Columbia University Law School, who is closing his third year as President of the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. "In the early years of the commission skepticism was openly expressed with regard to the possibilities of bringing any semblance of order out of the chaos of divergent State laws.

"The moral courage of those first pioneers in the tangled wilderness of variant State laws was as admirable as it is now praiseworthy, when it is remembered that their task was undertaken in the face of a cold tolerance which obviously looked for speedy failure. Soon criticism and doubt were disarmed by the persistent patience, the wise conservatism, and the steady progress shown by the little body of disinterested enthusiasts who were willing to work for their States and for the science of jurisprudence. In no other way could the illogical and wasteful inconsistencies of the laws of the several States be eliminated and uniformity accomplished; and uniformity was necessary, not only as a prerequisite of a worthy system of American jurisprudence, but also for the proper preservation of the rights and privileges of every individual citizen of every one of the collection of separate States composing the nation."

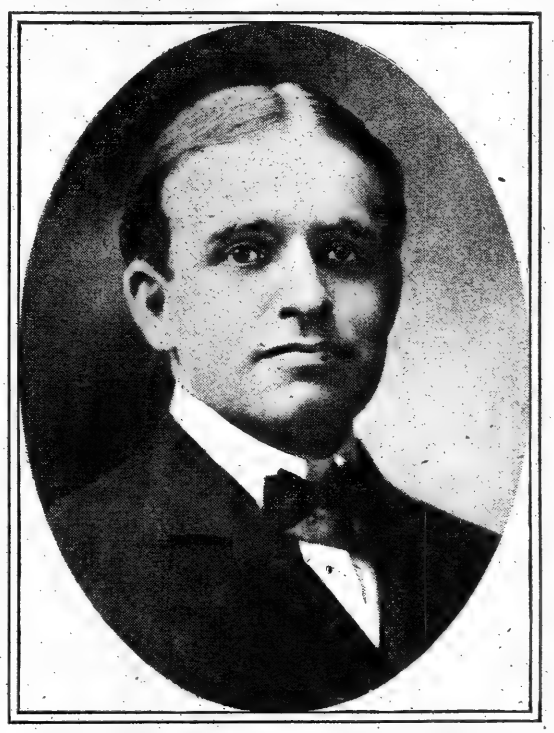
"What has been accomplished?" is the natural query of the man in the street.

Well, if he were a man of extensive commercial interests with dealings in many cities and States, he would recognize the benefit that twenty-five years' work for reasonable uniformity has been to him in making it easier to transact business.

If he were interested in the purity of the food which he eats, in a correct standard for weights and measures which should be as right in New York as in California, or in proper drug regulations, he would learn that the Commissioners have considered these as highly important essentials for uniformity and their work has vitally influenced many special associations working for harmony in particular cases.

Then, there is the automobile law, which, like the poor, is always with us with its insistent problems. Why, for instance, should New York stipulate that to exceed thirty miles an hour "is presumptive evidence that the driving is not careful," while many other States fix the limit at twenty-five miles, and Massachusetts makes it twenty? Again, New York requires no license to drive a car from registered automobile owners. This liberality has been severely criticised, for many States now require a certain examination to determine the efficiency of the private owner to handle his car on the public road.

To summarize briefly some of the more important achievements of the National Commission on uniform State laws, it has drafted a uniform act for promissory notes, known as the Negotiable Instruments act, which has been adopted by forty-seven States; warehouse receipts, adoped by thirty-one States; bills of lading, by twelve States; Sales act, by eleven States; stock transfer, by nine States; family desertion, by eight States; divorce and marriage evasion acts, each by three States, and an act on the probate of wills executed in other States, adopted by ten States.



Charles Thaddeus Terry, President, Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

In addition to these, uniform acts have been approved for partnership, workingmen's compensation, and cold storage, the last named having been adopted last year after two years of study by the Committee on Pure Food Products. The information of every one who had any practical knowledge on the subject of cold storage was obtained and the acceptance of the uniform act within two years established a record in the commission. Never before had a uniform act submitted to the Commissioners stood the test of debate from the official representatives of forty-eight States, undergoing frequent amendments, until reaching its perfected form, short of four years, and many of the Commissioners' acts have taken from five to seven years to meet with unanimous approval.

The commission, it must be understood, it not an authoritative body like a State Legislature. Although recognized by the Governors, who appoint the Commissioners, usually three from each State, it can only suggest the adoption of its uniform acts and their acceptance rests with the Legislatures of the various States. The members serve without pay, and it is a high tribute to the thoroughness of their deliberations that so many States have already placed upon their statute books the uniform acts designed to simplify interstate intercourse.

"There is nothing spectacular about its methods," said Mr. Terry, in explaining the objects of the commission, "and hence it has taken years for its work to reach the consciousness of the country; but the day of its obscurity is past, and Legislatures, State officials, and all individuals whose concerns transcend State lines not only know but heartily welcome the efforts made by the Commissioners in their behalf.

"The workshop is in order and it is manned by workers capable of forging the instruments to eliminate from the body of our laws the unnatural growths, to harmonize the discordant elements, to regulate the irregular practices, and, in short, to reduce to order the conflicting members, without the destruction of any one of them which might be material or valuable, and in all this care is taken not to increase the body of the law.

"If we are to be and remain a nation, the rights of citizens must be clear and uniform throughout the various sections of this country, so far as those rights are of an interstate nature. Either this or our system of government is a failure.

"Either the States must bring about such harmony or the Federal Government must do it. For the Federal Government to do it means centralization, and it means at the same time an extension of the powers of the central government beyond anything contemplated at the organization of the Government or established by the Constitution.

"It is clear that there is only one answer to the question and only one antidote to the centralization of government, and that is uniformity of State laws. And harmony will not be secured so long as any State, or set of States, maintain a false notion of 'States' rights,' and persists in riding it as a hobby and in disregard of the rights of citizens of other States.

"In the United States there are no such peculiarities of climate or location or racial distinction as would require the differentiation of the principles of law or such as to justify the application of divergent or inconsistent rules and regulations to the citizens of different sections in their life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. In matters of interstate concern, it is now well understood that the geographical boundaries of the various Commonwealths are only imaginary lines which cannot be allowed to interrupt the working of principles which are in their very nature universal.

"The soundness of this doctrine has been amply demonstrated in theory and now we have ample proof of its soundness in practice, not only in the hisfory of the uniform laws but particularly in the insistent demand of our citizens of every walk in life, that, if duties, privileges, and remedies are to be properly safeguarded, the laws embodying them must be uniform in their application.

"Consider, for instance, as illustrations, the disparity on those two widely discussed questions of marriage and divorce. There is no sound reason why the laws affecting the marriage tie should differ on geographical or territorial lines. It would seem that a law which is sound and proper to govern the people of one section of our country would be equally sound and proper to govern the people of every other section of the country.

"And yet the fact is that there is the widest divergence in the laws relating to marriage and divorce and the legitimacy or illegitimacy of children throughout the various States of the Union. They are so divergent that it may and frequently has happened that a man who has had some matrimonial complictions may be a married man under the laws of one State, unmarried under the laws of another, a bigamist under the laws of a third, and so on with all sorts of variations of laws affecting domestic situations.

"The commission, a few years ago, adopted a uniform divorce act. There is involved in the question with which it deals so much of sociology, so much of religion and so much of other elements than pure matter of law that it may not be surprising that its adoption has been slow. The conference has done its duty in that, whether the country chooses to adopt the remedy or not, such remedy has been afforded and stands ready at the hand of the various States whenever they may choose to deal with the widely recognized problem presented by the divergent and inharmonious divorce laws of the present day.

Besides the forty-eight States of the Union which are represented at the conference, the Territory of Alaska, the District of Columbia, and the Federal possessions of Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and Hawaii are members of the commission, with regularly appointed delegates. The three Commissioners from New York State include the President, Mr. Terry; Professor Francis M. Burdick of Columbia University, and Dr. Carlos C. Alden of the Buffalo Law School.

VASQUEZ TAGLE, MEXICO'S HOPE

Former Minister of Justice in Madero Cabinet Supposed to Have Backing of President Wilson

MANUEL VASQUEZ TAGLE—the final surname is pronounced "tag-leh"—is one of the big lawyers of Mexico, and those who champion him claim that he is the most highly respected man in all the contending factions in that troubled land.

No breath of scandal has ever touched him. Even Huerta, who is or was one of his few enemies, admits that he is courageous, honest, and able. That President Wilson favors Señor Vasquez Tagle as the man best qualified to govern Mexico in the interval that will be necessary for the election of a President and a Vice President of the republic does not surprise those who are familiar with the history of this Professor of Law and lover of peace.

The man who has so suddenly been brought into the limelight as the probable choice of the Wilson Administration as ad interim head of the Mexican Republic was born in Mexico City sixty-one years ago. His father, Portasio Tagle, was Minister of Justice in the first Cabinet of General Porfirio Diaz. He was perhaps the ablest of all Mexican lawyers of his time, and, like his son, a man of independent thought and action. This soon led to his resignation as a member of the Diaz Cabinet, for Don Portasio could not sanction certain policies of Don Porfirio which, he maintained, violated the word and spirit of the Constitution.

Portasio Tagle became the most powerful of the Diaz opposition, but his opposition did not take the form of revolutions against the famous old President. It confined itself to argument, reason, and law. Don Porfirio respected him all the more for it.

In 1875 Manuel Vazquez Tagle, the son, was graduated with first honors from the National Mexican School of Law. He was then 21 years of age, and within a decade he shared with his father the reputation of being among the ablest and most learned of Mexican practitioners.

From the first he was an independent in politics. He was deeply interested in the millions of Mexican poor people, and his sympathies were always with them. He was a champion of free speech and a free press, and opposed every move to curtail the liberty of newspaper expression.

He was one of the few prominent Mexicans who did not hesitate to criticise openly the policies and acts of Porfirio Diaz whenever, in his opinion, Diaz was in the wrong. On a certain occasion about twenty years ago General Diaz saw fit to have arrested certain prominent newspaper men of Mexico City. They were thrown into jail, and so great was the power and influence of Diaz that in all Mexico City, as the story is told, there was found only one lawyer who was willing to undertake the defense of the imprisoned journalists. That man was Manuel Vasquez Tagle.

"And the power and standing of the man are indicated by the fact that he won his case," said a prominent Mexican now in New York a few days ago.

Five or six years after the incident of the newspaper men Diaz decided that he needed a new Minister of Justice. He decided upon Vasquez Tagle, son of his first Minister of Justice. But the man chosen found himself unable to accept the portfolio, not because he did not desire the honor but because, as a friend put it a few days ago, "he realized that as Minister of Justice under Diaz he would not be permitted to apply the law in strict conformity with the Constitution and as he would desire."

Señor Tagle was then Professor of Civil Law in the Mexican National School. He continued to devote himself to his profession and to his classes, and his name never appeared in the political news of the day.

Then came the Madero revolution and the downfall and subsequent exile of Porfirio Diaz. Following the ad interim Presidency of Francisco de la Barra, Madero was duly elected President of Mexico.

Shortly after his election Madero sent for Vasquez Tagle and asked him to take the portfolio of Justice. Madero told him that he was in sympathy with his views as to the administration and enforcement of law and that he would be permitted to administer his office in strict conformity with the Constitution. Vasquez Tagle accepted and remained with Madero until the end. He is the only member of the Cabinet of the murdered President who refused to seek safety in exile, and to this day he has remained in Mexico City. He has never yet tendered his resignation to any of the nine Governments that have followed that of Madero, and his friends argue that under the Constitution he is for this reason today the legal President of Mexico and should by right be ruling at Chapultepec Palace.

As a member of the Madero Cabinet Manuel Vasquez Tagle was known as a stanch defender of the law as it was written. He believed in its strictest interpretation. A story is told that in one of the meetings of the Cabinet a proposition was advanced to curtail the freedom of the press. The Minister of Justice was up in arms immediately and pointed out to Madero that such a move would be sure to undermine further his not too strong administration. He argued and argued and in the end won over the President and a majority of the Cabinet.

"If this administration is to succeed it must live up to the letter of the Constitution," he is said to have informed his chief.

Francisco Urquidi, who, as Consul General in New York, represents the faction in the Mexican imbroglio known as Villistas, told a story a few days ago that, he said, was the truth about the last meeting of Madero and his Cabinet. There were present in the Cabinet room in Chapultepec the doomed President and three of his Ministers—Pedro Lascurain, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Rafael Hernandez, Minister of the Interior, and Vasquez Tagle.

"Madero was then a prisoner of Huerta and his fellow-conspirators," said Señor Urquidi in telling this story, "and the Ministers realized that Madero's doom was probably at hand. Huerta was all powerful and it was he who had placed Madero in restraint, or prison, if you wish to term it so.

"In the course of that last meeting and near the end of it Huerta, partially under the influence of drink, swaggered into the room.

"He saluted Madero and uttered the words: 'Señor Presidente.'

"Madero looked at Huerta and then ironically asked: 'And so I am still the President, am I, Señor General Huerta?'

"Huerta was abashed for the moment but quickly recovered control of himself and, bowing very low, saluted again and said: 'I beg your pardon, Sir; I meant to say "Ex-President."'

"Huerta then started to make a speech defying Madero and defending his own course as a participant in the conspiracy that made Madero a prisoner in the National Palace. For once Madero lost his temper and, springing to his feet, he ordered Huerta to stop his harangue. For once in his life Madero uttered an appropriate epithet as he addressed Huerta. Huerta stopped speaking, surprised at the unexpected firmness and anger of the gentle Madero.

"'All right, Sir, I shall cease,' Huerta said, and, turning to Lascurain, he extended his hand. In a disgusted sort of way Lascurain accepted the proffered hand of Huerta. Huerta then turned to Hernandez, who also reluctantly shook hands. Then Huerta turned to Madero and extended his hand.

Madero drew back and, pointing his finger at Huerta, shouted:

"'I do not care to shake the hand of a traitor like you.'

"'Very well, Sir,' replied Huerta. Then he turned to Vasquez Tagle and extended his hand.

"'Neither do I care to shake the hand of such as you,' said the Minister of Justice. With that rebuff, Huerta, his face ablaze with rage, backed out of the Cabinet room. A few hours later Madero and the Vice President, Pino Suarez, were dead, victims of assassins. Huerta ruled in Mexico City.

"In an effort to make the succession of Huerta appear legal the resignation of Lascurain, who, under the Constitution succeeded to the Presidency when Madero and Suarez were killed, was tendered to Congress and accepted and Huerta was elected Provisional President. But neither the resignation of Lascurain nor the accession of Huerta was legal, for there was no quorum present, and therefore no action in conformity with law could be taken. Had Lascurain remained in Mexico he would still be, under the Mexican Constitution, President of Mexico. But he is now in New York, and when he departed from Mexican soil his right ceased to exist. Likewise Hernandez lost his right when he quitted the country.

"That left Vasquez Tagle, who did not flee the country and never has been molested by the various factions who have been in control there during the stormy years that have elapsed since Madero was shot down.

"It might be argued in objection that he forfeited his rights when he failed to demand the office following the Huerta coup and the departure from the country of Lascurain and Hernandez. It is quite true that he might have stood up and exclaimed, 'I am President under the Constitution,' but what good would that have done in the dark days of the Huerta régime?

"Huerta never dared touch him because of his great popularity with all classes and his reputation for courage and honesty.

"Vasquez Tagle is what I might term a high-class revolutionist. I mean that he is one who combines in himself what is best in all the various elements. He believes in and is a sincere friend of the common people. He is against confiscation, and believes that justice should be accorded to all, from the highest to the most humble Mexican.

"Villa would not oppose his selection, but Villa could not for one moment control him. Neither could Carranza or any other man. I frankly believe that he is the only man in Mexico who enjoys the confidence of a majority of the men in every faction.

"He is the one man who can unite the whole country—enemies, friends, and all. His government would be an assurance that law and every man's rights would prevail.

"As for Carranza, he is too stubborn to agree to anything, but the fact remains that some of the most powerful Generals in the Carranza forces are not now personally inclined to favor Carranza and might be expected to support an arrangement that would place Manuel Vasquez Tagle in office as President ad interim. But for the obstinate attitude of Carranza the Mexican trouble could be settled in two days."

HELIGOLAND'S SILVER JUBILEE

Mystery Revealed Attending Surrender of Island to Germany by England Twenty-five Years Ago

By a Veteran Diplomat.

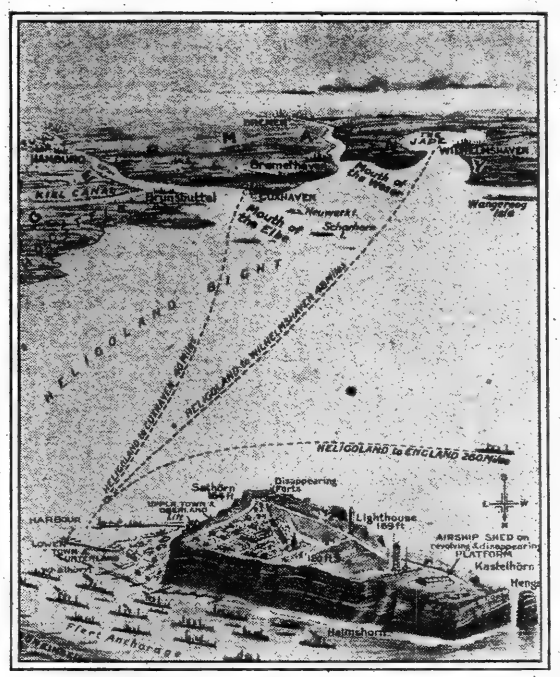
GERMANY is celebrating this week the silver jubilee of the Kaiser's acquisition of Heligoland, which has not inaptly been described as the Gibraltar of the Teuton Empire. Commanding, as it does, the entrances to the Kiel Canal, to Hamburg, and the mouth of the Elbe, to Bremen, and the mouth of the Weser, and to Wilhelmshaven, in the bay of which the greater part of the German Navy has been riding in safety at anchor for the last year, Heligoland has played so important a rôle in the present war that the circumstances under which Great Britain came to surrender this double island are worthy of discussion. All the more is this the case, since the motives which actuated Lord Salisbury, then Premier and Foreign Minister, in transferring the sovereignty of Heligoland from the British Crown to Germany, have always remained shrouded, as far as the public is concerned, in a certain amount of mystery.

All sorts of speculations and conjectures have been indulged in since last August relating to this question. The majority of his countrymen have been loud and violent in their denunciation of the late Lord Salisbury, and declare that by giving up Heligoland he rendered himself responsible for the German naval raids on the English coasts, for all the damage done by the Kaiser's submarines, which latter have their chief base at the island; for the necessity of maintaining the main portion of the mighty British fleet on guard throughout twelve weary months in the stormy North Sea, and for the failure of the great naval forces under Sir John Jellicoe to destroy the Kiel Canal, Hamburg, Bremen, and Wilhelmshaven.

The critics of Lord Salisbury, with regard to this particular transaction, are fond of citing it as an argument in favor of their contention for a more complete control of the activities of the Foreign Office by the National Legislature. For the late Marquis, by virtue of his constitutional powers as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, did not dream of asking Parliament for its consent to this alienation of British territory, just five-and-twenty years ago. He merely contented himself with informing Parliament of the agreement which he had concluded with Germany for the surrender of Heligoland, after the transaction had been completed.

Until the time comes when the "Life and Correspondence" of the late Lord Salisbury is at length given to the public—in generations to come—it will be difficult to form any correct judgment of his policy in the affair and of the considerations by which he was actuated in making the deal. But in the meanwhile the following facts, some of which are in the nature of diplomatic revelations, may serve to throw a timely and interesting light upon something that has always been regarded as an incomprehensible feature of the statecraft of Lord Salisbury.

To begin with, people in Germany as well as in all foreign countries are quite wrong in taking at its face value the claim of the Kaiser to have initiated the negotiations and the policy which culminated in his acquisition of Heligoland without striking a single blow. The credit belongs to the late Prince Bismarck, and, while he first approached the British Government on the subject of the acquisition of Heligoland in 1883, that is to say, five years before the accession of William II. to the throne, there is evidence to show that the project was already germinating in his mind more than half a century ago, when the Kaiser had just been promoted from petticoats to knee breeches.



Birdseye View of Heligoland, Showing Distances from Germany and England.

The late Lord Palmerston, who died as British Premier in 1866, of whom it used to be said that he was the only English statesman who had ever succeeded in fathoming the intricacies of the Schleswig-Holstein question, which was a source of so much disturbance to the concert of Europe in the middle of the last century, was wont to assert that if Bismarck had had no project of a ship canal across Holstein, Prussia would never have hankered after the Duchies of Holstein and Schleswig, and would never have gone to war in 1864 in order to wrest them from Denmark. Now the construction of a canal across Holstein by Prussia, connecting the Baltic with the North Sea, was unthinkable as long as Heligoland, commanding what would be the western entrance of the canal, remained in the hands of the English, or of any other foreign power.

The project for the construction of the canal seems to have remained dormant until the Spring of 1883, when the late Lord Granville, then British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, received a visit, not at his office in Downing Street, but at his London residence in Carlton House Terrace, from his neighbor, the late Prince Munster, then German Ambassador, who, after some little hesitation and beating about the bush, inquired confidentially whether Great Britain would be inclined to cede Heligoland for a consideration. He pointed out that it was a place of no importance whatsoever to England, whereas Germany was anxious to convert it into a harbor of refuge, always open to British ships, in connection with the canal which Bismarck was proposing to cut from the Baltic to the North Sea.

He added that the cession of Heligoland would strengthen the good feeling of Germany toward England to an extraordinary degree—an assertion which must be taken in conjunction with the fact that for some years previously Bismarck had pursued a policy of pin-pricks toward Great Britain in every part of the world, particularly in Egypt, elsewhere in Africa, and throughout the Orient. Lord Granville laughingly replied that he presumed the cession of Gibraltar to Spain would strengthen the good relations of that country with England, Munster denying that there was any similarity between the two cases.

A little later in the same year Lord Granville wrote as follows concerning another conversation with the German Ambassador: "Munster sounded me again as to Heligoland. He said that the Chancellor (Bismarck) was bent on opening a way into the Baltic, and for this purpose there ought to be a great harbor at Heligoland; that we could not be expected to spend the capital required, but that Germany was ready to do so if the island was ceded to her, and to admit England to every advantage in connection therewith. He begged me not to mention the matter to my colleagues. I did so only to Gladstone, and we agreed upon a dilatory course."

Two years later Lord Granville was again approached by Munster, and writes as follows about it: "I reminded him of the tenor of our previous conversations. He once more referred to the intention of Germany to open a canal from the Baltic into the North Sea, which would offer great commercial advantages, not only to Germany, but also to us, as the greatest and most powerful maritime nation in the world. For the security of that canal it would be necessary to construct a good and fortified harbor at Heligoland. This could only be done at great expense, which England could not be expected to undertake, but for which Germany would be prepared. It would be necessary under the circumstances for Germany to have possession of the rock, but with conditions which would give all the advantages of the harbor to England. I was of the opinion that if Egyptian difficulties between the two countries were settled, and also certain colonial controversies relating to Africa, we could consider the cession of Heligoland. I subsequently consulted the War Office and the Admiralty as to the advantages of Heligoland to us. The War Office saw none. The Admiralty was strongly in favor of its importance. But its reasons seemed to me to be a little far-fetched."

Lord Granville went out of office almost immediately afterward, and was succeeded at the Foreign Office by Lord Salisbury, who remained there, save for a brief interregnum of a few months, in 1886, by Lord Rosebery, for the following six years. Everything goes to show that Lord Salisbury was of the same mind with regard to the importance of Heligoland as Lord Granville, and that he showed himself more amenable to the suggestions of Prince Munster. For in 1887 Bismarck inaugurated the construction of the Kiel Canal, which he would certainly not have done had he not obtained some assurances from Munster in London as to the certainty of Great Britain eventually consenting to the surrender of Heligoland, which would necessarily constitute the key to the projected waterway. This was a year before the present Kaiser's succession to the German Crown.

In the first days of August of 1890, when a large proportion of the members of both houses of the National Legislature at Westminster had already left London for the Cowes Regatta, for Scotland, and for thermal resorts on the Continent, Lord Salisbury suddenly announced to a most sparsely attended Parliament the fact that in the name of the Crown he had concluded a treaty with Germany whereby the latter withdrew all her rights to Uganda and to other portions of what is now British East Africa, in return for which Great Britain had transferred the sovereignty of Heligoland to the Kaiser. The announcement took Parliament and the public in Great Britain, in Germany, and, for the matter of that, everywhere else, entirely by surprise. The treaty did not require, under the terms of the English Constitution, any legislative sanction, and it is rather interesting to recall, in view of subsequent developments, that people in England, as well as in Germany, were disposed to regard Great Britain as having got far and away the best of the bargain in the matter.

Sir Henry M. Stanley, the great African explorer, universally regarded in those days as the most eminent authority on all questions relating to the Dark Continent, who (having a few months previously returned from his Emin relief expedition, which took him clear across the continent from the west to the east coast) had been consulted by Lord Salisbury about the deal, publicly expressed the opinion that Great Britain had secured an entire suit of clothes, indeed, a whole outfit of clothes, in return for "a mere trouser button."

Much the same view was taken at Berlin, where a good deal of popular enthusiasm had up to that time prevailed with regard to the activities of General von Wissmann, of Dr. Karl Peters, and of Eugene Wolff in obtaining grants of territory in East and Central Africa to the German Empire, through treaties, from the native rulers and tribal chieftains. What, it was asked in the Kaiser's capital, at Hamburg, and in other leading German cities, was the idea of sacrificing all the German gains in the Dark Continent, nearly a million of square miles of territory, for a little bit of rock in the North Sea? In fact, William and his new Chancellor, General Count Caprivi—Bismarck had been dismissed a few months previously—came in for no end of criticism, and the address delivered by the Kaiser on taking possession of Heligoland, just twenty-five years ago, which was published far and wide throughout Germany, fell very flat. It ran as follows:

"Four days ago I celebrated the anniversary of the battle of Woerth, in 1870, at which my revered grandfather and my father gave the first hammer-stroke toward the foundation of the new German Empire. Now twenty years have gone by, and I, William II., German Emperor, King of Prussia, reincorporate this island with the German Fatherland, without war, and without bloodshed, as the ultimate piece of German earth. This island is chosen as a bulwark in the sea, a protection to German fisheries, a central point for my ships of war, a place and harbor of safety in the German Ocean against all enemies who may dare to show themselves upon it. I hereby take possession of this land, whose inhabitants I greet, and in token thereof I command that my standard be hoisted, and beside it that of my navy."

It is difficult to know what the Kaiser meant by "reincorporating" Heligoland, for the island had never belonged to Prussia, nor even to Germany, save when temporarily hypothecated to the free city of Hamburg for loans advanced by the latter to the Dukes of Schleswig and of Holstein, to whom it belonged, as such, and also in their capacity as Kings of Denmark. In fact, it formed part of the island possessions of Denmark when ceded by the latter in 1814 to the English, who had seized it in 1807, and who held it until its surrender to Germany in 1890.

Situated at a distance of twenty-eight miles from the nearest point of the German mainland, and now barely seventy acres in extent, it possessed in ancient times an area of several hundred square miles. As long as Heligoland was an English dependency there hung on the walls of Government House a wonderful old chart, reproduced in the Royal Geographical Magazine of 1876, showing that the island was watered by several small rivers, that a dozen churches, monasteries and convents flourished there, and that it could boast of no less than four different and excellent harbors.

This chart was said to date from the reign of Charlemagne, more than a thousand years ago, and it is worthy of remark that the intimate friends and contemporaries of that monarch, namely, Bishop Adam of Bremen and the learned Alkuins, refer, in documents still in existence, at considerable length to the character of the island as indicated in the chart. They also emphasized its religious character, whence its name of Heligoland, or Holy Land, and it is a matter of tradition that in the days of the old Vikings the Goddess Hertha had her temple on the island, to which people from all parts of Scandinavia and Frisia made pilgrimages, while St. Willibrod first preached Christianity there toward the close of the seventh century.

By the beginning of the fourteenth century the island had lost two-thirds of its area through the inroads of the stormy seas, which continued their ravages until in 1714 the size of the island had dwindled to 173 acres. Seventy years later the seas tore the island asunder, dividing it into the so-called Island and the Dune, while by the time that Germany had taken possession, in 1890, the islands had still further shrunk to their present size.

There is little doubt but that they would have shrunk still more since then had not the Kaiser devoted enormous sums of money to preventing further encroachments of the sea, filling in all the fissures and the caverns with a particularly durable form of concrete and facing the entire cliffs of the principal island—cliffs which rise to a height of about 200 feet—with a tremendously strong granite and in part armor-plated wall, the masonry being yards in depth. Moreover, by means of breakwaters the stretch of sea between the two islands has been converted into a large and wonderfully protected harbor, which serves as a base for the light cruisers and submarines of the German Navy.

The cliffs are surmounted with disappearing forts of the most modern description armed with immense Krupp guns carrying in the neighborhood of twenty miles. Equipped with sheds and hangars for Zeppelins and aeroplanes, Heligoland serves as a base for the operations of German aircraft, while the whole rock is pierced in every direction, like Gibraltar, with galleries and tunnels to admit of the handling of the concealed guns, which literally bristle from every point of the island. The German Government admitted five years ago that it had already then spent some $50,000,000 on the rock.

Since that time probably as much more has been expended in developing the defenses of this island, which the English throughout their tenure thereof had left virtually undefended and without any garrison. Indeed, in the English days it merely served as a sea-bathing resort for the people of Northern Germany, and especially for the members of certain of the German reigning houses, who were glad to find refuge there from the terribly tiresome etiquette with which royalty is always burdened in Germany. Moreover, Heligoland enjoyed the same sort of vogue as Gretna Green formerly possessed on the border line of England and Scotland. For couples who found obstacles in the way of their matrimonial projects in Germany and Austria and desired for one reason or another to escape all the legal formalities and red-tape incidental to marriage at home experienced no difficulty in getting themselves wedded by the solitary Lutheran pastor of the island.

It is no exaggeration to state that not alone the Heligolanders themselves, but even the German visitors and residents were happier under the English flag than under that of Germany. Many Germans made their home there, and it was in a wooden gabled house on the island that Hoffman von Fallersleben wrote in 1841, while a political refugee, his celebrated German patriotic song, "Deutschland, Deutschland Ueber Alles."

Civilians, however, are not wanted in naval strongholds such as that into which Heligoland developed after 1890. Visitors were discouraged, especially foreigners. Most of the natives were expropriated, receiving good round sums of money for their holdings, which were taken over by the Government, and were asked to leave the island, while thirty-six hours before the outbreak of war between Germany and England all the remaining natives and civilian residents were removed en masse from Heligoland to a stretch of territory on the banks of the River Elbe some forty miles from the mouth of that river, which had been specially prepared for just such an emergency.

The question will naturally occur to the readers of this article as to what would have been gained by Great Britain if she had retained the island in her hands instead of surrendering it to Germany. So far as I can see, the only way in which Great Britain would have profited would have been that Heligoland would not have developed into the German naval stronghold which it is today. The island is too far distant from English shores to have served as a naval base for Great Britain or even to admit of its having been held, in its former defenseless condition, against Germany in war time.

From 1890, when the island was ceded to Germany, until the death of Queen Victoria, ten years later, Great Britain leaned towards Germany, and saw in France and Russia her principal adversaries in times of peace, and her probable foes in the event of war. Any break in the ties of the then friendship between Great Britain and Germany appeared "unthinkable." That was the expression used by Lord Salisbury, by Prince Munster, the German Ambassador to England; by Bismarck, and even by such clever, far-sighted experts and writers on naval strategy as the late Admiral Colomb, R. N., and his American friend and fellow-master on such matters, Admiral Mahan, U. S. N.

But after the Boer War the foreign policies of Great Britain and Germany underwent a change. In the face of the ever-growing hostility of the War Party at Berlin, of the Pan-Germanist movement, and of the German Navy League, England was forced to turn from her to Russia, and to France, who are today her loyal allies, and it may safely be asserted that in view of these altered relations between Germany and England in the last fifteen years, the present war between the two countries would have been precipitated at any moment during that time if Great Britain had attempted to put Heligoland into a state of defense, or to convert it into another English—in lieu of a German—Gibraltar.

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF NAVAL BOARD

Secretary Daniels Says Great Inventors Will Originate Ideas and Discuss Those of Others

By Edward Marshall

TO give the nation's navy the benefit of the best thought of the nation's great civilian experts is the plan of Secretary Daniels, and his device for doing it is revolutionary.

By the frankly grateful statement of the Secretary himself, one of THE NEW YORK TIMES interviews, in which Thomas A. Edison gave his views of what America should do to make herself invincible, and, therefore, peaceful, was responsible for the project of establishing as an adjunct of the Navy an Advisory Board of great civilians.

Of this board Mr. Daniels named one member, Mr. Edison, asking the technical societies of the nation to supply the others by their own politically non-partisan election. His hope was and is that thus may be accomplished an important detail of the interesting job of keeping the United States bright at a time when all the balance of the world is stained with battle-blood and dimmed by battle-smoke.

The week before it had been my great good fortune to have the epoch-making talk with Mr. Edison which resulted in the creation of this plan, I had discussed with Mr. Daniels his own hopes for the navy.

After the new plan was announced it seemed most likely that the fresh development might well have altered some of these, so I went to Washington again to talk things over once more with the Secretary in the light of new events.

"What do you expect of the new board?" I asked at once.

"Two things," said Mr. Daniels. "I expect it both to originate ideas and to examine those of others, critically and with such a concentration of ability as never has existed in the personnel of any other board.

"I shall not be disappointed. This board of great civilians will add more to the strength and efficiency of our navy than any one idea outside the service ever has added to the strength of any navy.

"Puzzling mechanical problems continually arise in these days of highly specialized fighting devices. Certainly we can hope more effectively to solve these problems when we have concentrated in the makeup of a Naval Advisory Board the nation's very greatest civilian experts in machines to work in harmony with our ablest naval men and for the selfsame object.

"It is a curious fact that the world's civilian citizens often have felt themselves shut out from making contributions of ideas to their Governments.

"Sometimes they have made them, but it has been the general impression that every effort has been made to render this a difficult process. No one even can roughly guess at what the Governments have lost through lack of real co-operation between civilian experts and the navies of their nations.

"It is interesting to recall the fact, in this connection, that Ericsson was a civilian and that when he proposed his ironclad, the famous Monitor, which sank the Confederate Merrimac in Hampton Roads, there was much opposition to a Government trial of the idea.

"I do not think it in the least improbable that if our Government at the time had not been engaged in war and fairly desperate for fighting machines he might have found it utterly impossible to get a trial for his epochmaking invention.

"But the problems of this naval day are far more complicated than were the problems of that naval day. Sea fighting has developed into a highly specialized science, in which men must fail unless they be learned in the science of an exactly scientific profession. Bravery, of course, is as great a trait as ever, but in these days the merely brave man could not be the most effective. We must have upon our ships men who are not only brave but highly educated in their very technical work.

"The present European war has revealed a startlingly complete change in naval methods.

"The great battle between the mightiest fighting ships the world ever has known, which was confidently thought to be a certainty of the next war two years ago, has not occurred.

"It is most unlikely that it will occur.

"But the submarine, which, like the Monitor, was regarded as a possibility, but not as a certainty, has proved to be of great importance. It has slipped up to the side of warships and other craft of many times its size and sent them to the bottom, it has so demonstrated its effectiveness that great flotillas of the world's most imposing warships never have been sent out of their harbors, but lie in them, rusting, while the contest rages, guarded closely by torpedo nets against an undersea attack.

"Naval men have played their admirable part in the development of submarines both in this country and abroad, but, none the less, in its inception the submarine is a civilian and not a naval product.

"Holland and Lake, both of our own nation, neither of them ever in any way connected with the navy, have been the individuals to do most for its perfection. Holland died before he saw his dreams come wholly true, but Lake, today, is actually building submarines at his own shipyards.

"The Government today also is building for itself a submarine at its own shipyards, but in the main it is building it upon the lines which these two civilian geniuses developed as the result of their great concentration upon the single problem, unhampered by attention to the general details of the naval service. The Government in building is paying Mr. Lake for the use of his patented devices. But the Government has moved slowly and finds that this has handicapped it. For the Government-built submarine it will be unable to get, for love or money, the best-known engine within less than a year's time.

"Both the aeroplane and its development, the hydroaeroplane, are devices of civilian origin. While Government brains—and it must be thoroughly understood that nothing I may say about the need of co-operation of civilian brains with those of naval men is a reflection upon naval brains—have done much toward their perfection, civilians have done far more. That has been inevitable, and similar facts will be inevitable in future.

"These riders of the air and joint riders of the air and water need new engine ideas, too, yet under the system which has been pursued we have not found them. There are but a few concerns which manufacture engines, either for the underwrater craft or aircraft, and their hands are overfull.

"They have done well for us, and we have done well for ourselves, but still we are confronted by unsolved engine problems of immense importance.

"Is it not obvious that we shall be the gainers when this civilian board cooperates with us?

"Certainly this great nation is capable of solving that annoying problem of submarine and air motive power; but it is of such importance that, as certainly, we must put all the nation's ablest engine-planning brains at work upon it. In that direction, to my mind, and not in the direction of a studied refusal to seek wisdom which may lie outside of a Government department must lie our national security.

"Another problem of immense importance, upon which might rest the fate of some momentous day if this nation unfortunately ever should be forced to go to war, is that of the torpedo.

"When one is devised which can be fired beneath the water and give no surface indication of its passage as it speeds grimly to its mark, the secrecy and, therefore, the effectiveness of the submarine will be immensely multiplied.

"For a long time the naval experts of the world have been working upon this. They have not solved the puzzle. The civilian board and the great interest in naval problems which it will arouse among civilian inventors may easily result in the discovery of some device which will accomplish that.

"Explosives offer another group of problems which must be carefully considered, not only by the admirable brains which, already, we have concentrated in our naval personnel, but by all the best brains in the nation.

"These few rough statements of some unsolved questions which most need solution will give a slight idea of the great importance of the work for national defense which now remains undone, not only here but in the balance of the world.

"The referendum feature of my plan will consist in placing these and other similar questions before the members of the board. I think the initiative, the announcement of newly created ideas, soon will follow in most instances.

"The eminent men who will make up the board will consider what is laid before them, and then, I think, we shall begin to see the working of the plan's initiative feature.

"I do not expect these celebrated and very busy men personally to devote much time to the questions of the board. But an immense advantage to the nation will accrue if we succeed in planting our most vital problems in these minds.

"We know that soil is fertile. We know that, for already it has produced mechanical and scientific marvels which have made us the world's wonder. Then it is not unreasonable, is it, to hope that such seed planted in such soil will grow and presently will fructify in great ideas which will make us so secure against attack that none will ever run the risk of trying to annoy us?

"The big thing about the whole idea of the board, I think, it is that it will bring into the definite service of our Government the men whose brains could not be purchased for such work by any conceivable expenditure of money.

"Their payment will lie in their realization of the highest patriotic service. When I went to Mr. Edison to ask him to accept the Chairmanship, I told him that I did not ask him for myself, that I did not even ask him for the navy, but that I asked him for the whole United States.

"That pleased him, I imagine, and it was absolutely true.

"Then, after he had told me that he would accept, I asked him if he thought that other eminent men who might be asked to work with us would be likely to accept the invitation.

"'Why, yes, I'm sure they will,' said he. 'In this country no official honors have been provided for inventors or for other scientists. There are official honors waiting for the lawyer in the nation's Judgeships—and so on. But for the scientist there are none.

"'This board supplies an honor of the highest order. Every man selected for its membership will feel as might an Englishman who had received a knighthood.'

"That was very gratifying.

"I am sure that men thus animated will accomplish wonders in creating helpful thought.

"Fulton thought about the steamship when no naval man had done so.

"When we began to build the Monitor both naval and civilian experts said the Government was wasting money. When it accomplished its great feat they criticised the Government because it had not built more monitors.

"Under the stimulation of the certainty of a sympathetic civilian body to consider them, other ideas as startling as the great thought of the turret ironclad surely will come to the surface, the inventions of great brains, today as utterly unknown as Ericsson's was then.

"Money could not do, I think, what thus this board will do. No one ever stimulated minds to great inventions by giving known inventors money and telling them to take it, go to some secluded spot and there invent new wonders. We must bring out the ideas which, unbidden, arrive in the creative mind—the inspirations.

"Most of the men who will comprise the board have spent their splendid energies at the invention of the instruments of peace, not warfare. That is as it should be.

"It is to be regretted that conditions ever should have risen which must request of them a change in the productive channels of their thought, diverting it toward warfare.

"But since this has occurred, and since military and naval conditions have swerved so far away from those which we have spent so lavishly of time and money in preparing for, since they have turned so generally from the old-time paths into the modern paths of chemistry and of electricity, we must have as our advisers the most thoughtful, most progressive, most developed men.

"Modern warfare is a very different affair from that of old. No bands with music thrill the hearts of Europe's fighting men on land or sea today.

"The glitter and the pomp of brilliant uniforms are gone forever.

"One chemist, one electrician might be greater in the warfare of the future than Napoleon, at his best, was in the warfare of the past.

"One scientist very probably may do more for the United States than any Admiral or General could do.

"It is interesting and very gratifying to find how quickly the thought of this consulting board has captured the people's thought throughout the country.

"The letters have poured in from every sort of people. The Vice President has sent me one. It said the plan caught his imagination, for he favored no armament save for our own defense, but that that must be complete.

"That is the American sentiment which most frequently has been expressed, from every section of the nation.

"I have a barrelful of letters and editorial clippings. I am saving these to read while I am on vacation and have not the slightest doubt that in them will be found many suggestions of great value, for it is plain enough that, today, owing to this plan, thousands of brains are working at our national problem, which, previous to the publication of your interview with Mr. Edison, had not given any thought to it.

"I have no doubt that I shall find among these letters many from the nation's so-called 'cranks.' But what is a crank? The crank of today is the genius of tomorrow. Our 'cranks' have done great things. They have done harmful things, sometimes, but they have done some very useful things. The few letters which will prove to be unwise won't bother me at all.

"We have gone through enough of these communications to make us feel certain of the average value. Some of them will be among the first things to be brought to the attention of the new Advisory Board.

"One, from Colorado, suggests an improvement in wireless telegraphy. We at once discussed it with the head of our department, who was very much impressed by it.

"We then asked the man to come to Washington, but it seems that he has not the funds, and we have none from which at present we can draw.

"You see? That man, without funds for the journey to Washington and without funds for experimentation, may have a very great idea. That is a situation which doubtless is recurring constantly. It is an evil and a waste, and the existence of the board will do much, I hope, to do away with its repetition in the future.

"It is evident that we need a national laboratory. Its value to the nation easily might be inestimable.

"Some years ago we established at Annapolis a laboratory for coal testing. In one year these coal tests saved the Government as much as it will cost to run the laboratory for many years.

"We now take for the navy only coal from mines which have been tested and which we know produce coal sure to burn effectively and economically in naval ships. Through this laboratory we have discovered that the coal of Government-owned mines up in Alaska is good for naval vessels, and through its tests we have discovered many valuable things concerning oil as fuel.

"But it is comparatively small and narrow in its scope. What we really need is a great institution for close chemical analysis which will cost from half a million to a million dollars, and which will be supported by an annual appropriation to be expended in accordance with the directions of the new Advisory Board in conjunction with the Secretary of the Navy.

"The board, too, should be allowed to compensate originators of good ideas, even though these men be in the navy. I think this is imperative and mere justice. We have men in the navy who have done extraordinary things, but it is conceivable that they might do things more wonderful if they could be paid for what they do and relieved of other work, for that procedure would enable them to concentrate on the production of more big ideas and upon the full development of those which they already have produced.

"American genius will meet any needs and meet them as they have not been met by the conventional methods of the older nations. Always we have been creative people and original and daring people. But, perhaps, others have had more value from our own originality than we ourselves have had. That is certainly a failing of our system.

"Think of the submarine—purely an American idea! We have done less with it than any other of the really great nations. Think of the folly of it!

"Suppose that, through governmental aid, we had brought to its perfection the aeroplane, which is absolutely an American idea. How vast would be our present-day advantage.

"But what really occurred?

"When Langley got some public money with which to build the first one, he could not get enough, and so it failed and was discredited. He died a broken-hearted man.

"Yet we now know that Langley was a genius of high order, and a practical genius, too. His ideas were exactly right, so far as flying was concerned.

"His device lacked only motive power. When Curtiss recently put a modern engine into the old Langley flying machine—the one whose failure crushed his soul and heaped the ridicule of fools on him—the apparatus flew as Langley had declared it would fly.

"Such a board as now is under way toward an effective formation, as the result of your remarkable interview with Mr. Edison, will tend to mobilize the genius of the country and will pay for its slight cost a thousand times a year in public service after once it is in operation."

TENNESSEE BACK FROM WAR ZONE

Adventures of Armored Cruiser That Has Been in Troubled Waters of Turkey for Eight Months

DISPLAYING her homeward-bound pennant, 610 feet long, the longest that ever trailed astern a modern man of war, her decks lined with cheering bluejackets, with happy officers on her bridge and on her decks, and her four big funnels emitting great clouds of jet black smoke, the United States armored cruiser Tennessee steamed unheralded and uncheered into New York harbor a few days ago. Lacking just six days, the Tennessee had been gone a whole year, during eight months of which she was cruising in the troubled waters of Turkey, her officers alert to see that harm did not come to Americans or to the helpless of others nations, whose interests in the unfortunate land of the Moslems had been intrusted to Uncle Sam.

From Oct. 23, 1914, in the afternoon of which day the Tennessee was reported "standing in" by foreign men-of-war off Beirut, until June 27 last, when the long homeward-bound pennant was "broke" off Jaffa, Syria, and the big cruiser, her "jackies" singing their own particular version of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," finally "stood out for New York" there was hardly a day without "something doing."

Let the log of the Tennessee tell the story of Captain Decker's cruise. The log book is one of the bulkiest ever penned aboard an American ironclad.

When the Tennessee took on a big consignment of oranges grown in the groves that dot the Holy Land, the log records that fact. When the skipper of a British or a French man-of-war came aboard to tell Captain Decker how glad he was to see him, the log chronicles the occurrence. And when, off Smyrna, the Turks fired a few shots at a Tennessee steam launch in which was Captain Decker, the log very briefly informs you that the officers of the Tennessee did not approve of this diversion on the part of the Turks one bit.

The Tennessee "stood out to sea" from New York late in the afternoon of Aug. 6, 1914, heading for Falmouth, England. On board she carried a precious cargo of American gold, all in little kegs to be used in getting stranded Americans in Europe back home. During her first weeks in European waters she journeyed, ferryboat fashion, back and forth between French and British ports, conveying to England the uphappy Americans whose pocketbooks were empty and who had been caught between the fires, so to speak, when the war broke out.

Her mission to England, France, and Holland fulfilled, the Tennessee sailed for Brindisi, Italy, on what was supposed to be the last leg of her European journey. In the early afternoon of Oct. 12 the cruiser entered the harbor of Brindisi.

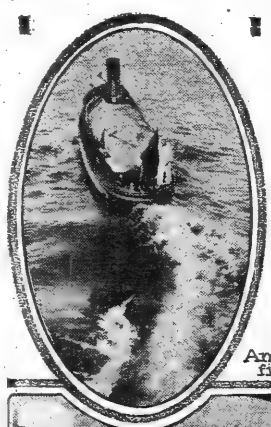
Then came the orders not to return home but go to Turkish waters. On Oct. 19 the Tennessee bade farewell to Brindisi and headed for Beirut. Four days later she was swinging at anchor in the Turkish port. Here the bluejackets were given shore leave and they swarmed over the place and spent money as American sailors can. The foreign colony kept open house and a Tennessee cap ribbon was a passport into nearly every home.

Oct. 30 the Tennessee weighed anchor and sailed for the Island of Mitylene, now a part of Greece. Her arrival caused a great commotion, and the whole population headed for the shore waving flags and cheering. They thought the Tennessee was one of the battleships that the United States had sold to the Greek Government. They came alongside the cruiser in every conceivable kind of hand-propelled craft, with the Governor General leading the way in his official launch.

While in Mitylene, Captain Decker decided to give his men a little battle practice. He put them through the battle drill, then he instructed them some more in torpedo defensive work, and, last of all and to the great delight of the onlooking islanders, the Tennessee fired a real torpedo from one of her 21-inch submerged torpedo tubes. Since everybody seemed to be at war in that part of the world, Captain Decker thought it not unwise to do a little training himself in the friendly waters of the Aegean Sea.

After this for several weeks the Tennessee was going nearly all the time. One day she would be anchored off the town of Scio, on the island of Chios; then off she would sail for Chesme or Vourlah, Turkey; back again to Scio; then to Smyrna and Jaffa and Beirut.

It was while in the harbor of Smyrna on the morning of Nov. 16 last that Captain Decker was fired upon by the Turks. It was 8:30 A. M., and the skipper was going ashore in steamer launch No. 1 to pay his respects to the officials of the Turkish port. The Stars and Stripes fluttered astern. Suddenly three 3-inch shells, one quickly following the other, whistled over his launch. The shots were heard on the Tennessee, and hurried preparations were made to get her cleared for action. The two big 10-inch turrets swung around shoreward and the muzzles of the big guns pointed straight at the fortifications of Smyrna.



American launch that was fired on by Turks

Refugees aboard U.S.S. Tennessee

Captain Decker decided to forego the pleasure of a possible cup of black coffee with the Turkish officials, and steamed back to the Tennessee. He was mad through and through because of the undeserved and uncalled-for insult offered the flag. But Captain Decker never loses his head. Despite the great provocation he remained the "ideal neutral," and when he climbed back aboard the Tennessee the wireless sputtered the news of "the incident" to Ambassador Morgenthau in Constantinople.

The next morning the Tennessee "stood out" for Scio and there she stayed for more than three weeks. While she was off that port the crew was exercised in the art of mine-dragging, given practice in clearing the ship for action and had some more torpedo practice with real torpedoes, "made in the U. S. A."

Alexandria, Egypt, was the next station after Scio, and after taking on a large amount of money for distribution to the suffering people of ancient Palestine, the Tennessee once more put to sea, and on Christmas Eve she was off Jaffa.

The ancient port was full of poverty-stricken refugees, old men and women, young women, and girls, and scores upon scores of little children. Many of them had never before seen the American flag. Twenty-one half famished French sisters of charity sought passage for the friendly land of Egypt, and Captain Decker told them to come along.

"A sad-faced bunch of sweet women" was the expression a bluejacket used the other day describing these nuns of France.

The second morning off Jaffa an old man, with long beard and wearing ragged clothes, came alongside the Tennessee in a little rowboat and climbed on board. He said he was a carpenter of Jaffa, and he wanted to know if he could enlist in the American Navy. He was broken-hearted when told that only Americans could serve in the United States Navy.

When the Tennessee left Jaffa on Dec. 27 she had on board 496 refugees of all ages and sizes and all of them poor. The bluejackets made clothes for some of the youngsters and tied "Tennessee" ribbons around the heads of the little girls.

Four times the Tennessee returned to Jaffa and each time she brought back to Alexandria a capacity cargo of refugees. On two occasions more than 1,000 unfortunates were crowded about the decks of the cruiser. On the sixth trip the Turkish authorities refused to permit any more refugees to leave the city. In February the Turks relented and several thousand more sufferers from Palestine were transported to Egypt on the Tennessee.

"The condition of those poor people was pitiful beyond description," said an officer of the Tennessee. "I never saw so many sad eyes before and hope never to see as many again. Some of the old men looked like patriarchs in the old biblical prints."

Feb. 9 found the Tennessee again cruising along the Turkish shore off Beirut. The baseball team was challenged by a college team from that port and the men of the Tennessee went ashore and won the game by the score of 7 to 3. Likewise, when off Smyrna a few days later, they gave a minstrel show and for the first time on any stage rendered the Tennessee version of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" with all the officers and men joining in the chorus. This is how they sing the marching song of the Allies on the Tennessee:

Back to New York City where I was bred and born,
Back to New York City where they taught me right from wrong,
Of all the countries I have seen, have nothing
on Broadway,
I long to drink my creme de menthe in a
New York cabaret.

CHORUS.

It's a long way to New York City,
It's a long way to go,
It's a long way to dear old Broadway, to the sweetest spot I know,
Good-bye to Alexandria, farewell Egyptian shores,
It's a long, long way to New York City,
But my heart's right there.

II.

After leaving New York town to aid the refugees,
It was on the sixth of August our bow
pointed toward the sea,
And after all our torture, we reached
Falmouth by the sea,
It was there we got our message from the stranded refugees.

III.

Now we're leaving Rotterdam to sail for Brindisi,
Rotterdam was as fine a place as you would wish to see;
Now we're laying at Vourlah Bay, for
Turkey's in distress,
It was there our Captain showed his nerve against the Turkish threats.

IV.

Since we've performed our duties in these
Oriental lands,
I hope to see us sailing soon for dear old
Yankee land,
For there my friends are waiting to greet me
by the hand,
And I'll surely appreciate New York town
when I get there again.

On March 26 the Tennessee was again in the harbor of Alexandria. The harbor was full of warships and transports, for the Dardanelles fight was on in all of its fury. One of the French hospital ships was the French liner Lorraine, one of the French Line that was in the New York trade prior to the war. One bluejacket counted ninety British and French transports in Alexandria harbor one morning. The men of the Tennessee saw nearly 100,000 soldiers leave for the death-fields of Turkey, and they saw thousands of others brought back on the hospital ships, the victims of Turkish bullets and shrapnel.

On May 24 the wireless brought the news that Italy was at war with Austria. The Tennessee was then off Beirut and so was the French cruiser Jeanne d'Arc. The Jeanne d'Arc shelled the petroleum tanks of Beirut after the skipper had warned all civilians to get out of range of his big guns. Subsequently the same cruiser sank two Turkish merchantmen after taking off their crews and putting them ashore.

On July 3 the homeward bound pennant was hoisted. The Tennessee again "stood out" to sea for New York and home.

EMBARGO ON EXPORTING ARMS

Has United States a Legal or a Moral Duty to Establish One?--Precedents in Other Crises

The writer of the article herewith presented while Adjunct Professor of Law at Columbia University was appointed Assistant Solicitor of the Department of State by Secretary Root. Under Secretary Knox he twice represented the United States as agent in international arbitrations, once before The Hague Court. He is now engaged in the practice of the law in Washington, D. C.

By William Cullen Dennis.

A neutral nation must, in all things relating to the war, observe an exact impartiality toward the parties.—(Jefferson to Gouverneur Morris, United States Minister at France, Aug. 16, 1793).

THE really important and underlying question pending between the United States and Germany is the matter of American exports of munitions of war to Great Britain and her allies. An embargo on the exportation of arms and munitions of war would undoubtedly pave the way to an easy solution of all other questions between this country and the Teutonic allies, including the problems arising out of Germany's war zone and her submarine warfare on British commerce.

Has the United States either a legal or a moral duty to establish such an embargo, i. e., to forbid the exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerents? The considerations involved in this question are not new or peculiar to the present contest; witness Lowell's complaint in his inimitable Biglow Papers, of a similar traffic on the part of British subjects during the civil war, when he said:

> You wonder why we're hot, John.
> Your mark was on the guns,
> The neutral guns that shot, John,
> Our brothers and our sons.

Witness also Sir William Vernon Harcourt's masterly defense under the pen name of Historicus of the right of the citizens of neutral nations to engage in this trade, a defense to which practically nothing can be added at the present day aside from bringing it up to date.

The Present Rule of International Law Is Clear.

Fortunately, there is not and can not be any serious dispute as to what the rule of international law upon this subject is. The rule, and the reasons for the rule, were laid down in unequivocal terms over one hundred years ago by Jefferson and Hamilton in the midst of a crisis which was infinitely greater for our infant nation than that through which we are passing today.

Jefferson, in writing to Ternant, the French Minister, on May 15, 1793, said:

> We have answered, that our citizens have always been free to make, vend, and export arms; that it is the constant occupation and livelihood of some of them. To suppress their callings, the only means, perhaps, of their subsistence, because a war exists in foreign and distant countries, in which we have no concern, would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle, and impossible in practice.

And the same day, Hamilton, in one of his illuminating letters to Washington, took the same position, saying:

> A neutral nation has a general right to trade with a power at war. The exception of contraband articles is an exception of necessity; it is a qualification of the general right of the neutral nation in favor of the safety of the belligerent party. And it is from this cause, and the difficulty of tracing in the course of commercial dealings, that, for the peace of nations, the external penalty of confiscation is alone established.

The Hague Conventions of 1907, Nos. V. and XIII., regulating respectively the rights and duties of neutral powers, in case of war on land and sea, contain the following identical provision, Article 7:

> A neutral power is not called upon to prevent the export or transport on behalf of one or other of the belligerents, of arms, munitions of war, or, in general, of anything which can be of use to an army or fleet.

This article was reported to the conference by a sub-commission, of which besides a number of distinguished jurists the military delegates of both Germany and Austria were members, and was adopted without objection from any quarter. It was explained and defended by the official "reporter," Colonel Borel, professor at the University of Geneva and plenipotentiary delegate of Switzerland, in his report (which under the practice of The Hague Conferences is practically an official commentary on the convention) on substantially the same grounds which had been advanced nearly a century earlier by Jefferson and Hamilton. Germany is a party to Convention V. and Great Britain to Convention XIII., while the United States and Austria-Hungary are parties to both conventions. However, all the belligerents in the present war not being parties to either convention, it may be granted neither is technically in force. But this is really immaterial since the article in question is merely declaratory of the universally accepted rule.

This rule has been repeatedly asserted by our State Department during the present war, (circular of the Department of State of Oct. 15, 1914; Secretary Bryan to Senator Stone, Jan. 20, 1915; Secretary of State to the German Ambassador, April 21, 1915,) and its correctness has been repeatedly and consistently recognized by Germany, which, while strongly maintaining that the course of the United States in continuing to permit its citizens to engage in contraband trade with the Allies at the same time that we have "achieved no success or only an unmeaning success" in preventing Great Britain from interfering with legitimate American trade with Germany, is inconsistent with "the spirit of true neutrality," admits that it does not constitute a "formal breach of neutrality." (See the German Minister for Foreign Affairs to the American Ambassador at Berlin, Feb. 16, 1915; memorandum on the German-American trade and the question of delivery of arms, transmitted by the German Embassy to the Secretary of State, April 4, 1915.)

And Dr. Dernburg, who until his still recent departure is generally supposed to have been the Kaiser's unofficial envoy near the American people, at a scientific gathering at which he was accorded the privileges of the floor as a distinguished visitor, thought it proper to deny with some heat, if not indeed with a suggestion of "frightfulness," a statement which he conceived had been made by another speaker, to the effect that "Germany had protested against the legality or right of shipping arms and ammunition from this country."

Dr. Dernburg said: "I want to state here most emphatically that Germany at no time has disputed the right to ship or sell arms. This statement that she has is absolutely false." (See the official revision of his remarks, Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, July 1915, Page 195.)

But if the newspaper version as telegraphed from Europe of the recent Austrian note protesting against the sale of arms and ammunition to the Allies by this country is accurate (and probably it is in substance correct) Austria has "gone Germany one better" and advanced to the position so emphatically repudiated by Dr. Dernburg, so far as Germany is concerned, and has argued that owing to the size and one-sidedness of our traffic in arms with the Allies it is not "in conformity with the practice of strict neutrality."

The suggestion that the legitimacy of contraband trade may be affected by its size has been made before, but has never found a lodgment in the law. It is an attempt to read into the plain rule of law which Austria-Hungary accepted unhesitatingly at The Hague in 1907 a wholly unauthorized and impractical proviso. It may be safely dismissed as simply one more of the protests which belligerents have frequently made in the past whenever their ox was gored—protests which have with practical uniformity been disregarded by neutrals. It would be a work of supererogation to pile up diplomatic and judicial authorities in support of the right of the citizens of a neutral nation to engage in contraband trade with a belligerent. There is perhaps no important rule of international law which is better settled.

When any rule of international law emerges from the perennial conflict between neutrals and belligerents with such unanimous acceptance, it may be safely assumed that, whatever may be said of it in theory, it is based upon sound, practical considerations. The justification for the particular rule in question is not far to seek. So long as war is to be carried on, a fair balance of convenience must be struck between the necessities of belligerents and the rights of neutrals. It would be oppressive and impracticable to call upon a neutral nation to harass its own citizens and restrain their conduct in their own country in manufacturing, selling, and exporting munitions of war. On the other hand, it would be futile to expect a belligerent to sit passively by and allow these munitions of war, once they have left the country of their origin and are embarked on the high seas, to reach its adversary. Hence the compromise. Neutral citizens may sell and export; a belligerent nation may intercept and confiscate if it can.

Should the Present Rule Be Changed?

It is to be conceded, of course, that there is nothing sacred about the compromise embodied in the present rule of international law. The rule can naturally be changed by common consent or international convention, and the United States can, if it sees fit, without reference to the rule of international law, change its municipal law by forbidding the exportation of arms and munitions of war to belligerents. Several bills to this effect were introduced at the last session of Congress, and there is an organized propaganda in the country working to this end.

In considering the proposed embargo, two general questions are presented for consideration—first, whether or not the proposed change is desirable in the abstract at any time, and, second, whether or not it is desirable at this time. The abstract question will be first considered.

If the rule of international law is to be changed, if it is to become a breach of neutrality for inhabitants of neutral countries to export munitions of war to belligerents, then immediately it becomes the duty of the neutral nation to prevent such exportation, just as it is now the duty of a neutral nation to prevent an armed expedition being set on foot upon its territory to attack a belligerent. And in like manner interested belligerents become entitled to take an interest in the performance of this duty on the part of the neutral, and to make reclamations for damages if the duty is not fulfilled with "due diligence."

Of course the United States could not work a change in the general rule of international law by laying an embargo, but it could enlarge the international duties of the United States. As soon as the embargo act became a law, belligerents, both by virtue of The Hague Convention of 1907, No. V., (Article 9,) as well as by the general principles of international law, would be entitled to demand that our new legislation be "impartially applied."

The practical result would be, therefore, that, whereas at present we have no responsibility with respect to the ordinary commercial exportation of munitions of war, the day after the proposed law goes into effect we would find ourselves liable to representations from any and all of the belligerents because of the alleged failure to use "due diligence" impartially to apply the new law by stopping the exportation of rifles from Portland, Me., or Oregon, ostensibly for lion hunting in Abyssinia, or blasting powder from El Paso, Texas, billed to some American mine owner in Mexico.

Moreover, the belligerents would not merely take an interest in the final act of exportation, but they would naturally be watchful of the manufacture and shipment within the United States of arms and ammunition which might ultimately be destined for export, and would diligently seek to keep themselves informed thereof by their secret agents, and as diligently bring the reports of their secret agents to the State Department, with requests for preventive action.

Far from tending toward international harmony, the proposed legislation would, it is believed, tend to multiply our duties and burdens, and thereby to create international claims and international animosity. Neutral duties would be enormously increased and neutral rights restricted in an age when we had been taught to believe that peace and not war was to be the normal status of the nations. As Sir William Vernon Harcourt said in his Letters of Historicus, as regards a similar proposition advanced during the time of our civil war:

If the sale of munitions of war is to be held a breach of neutrality, instantly upon the declaration of war between two belligerents, not only the traffic by sea of all the rest of the neutral powers of the world would be exposed to the inconveniences of which they are already impatient, but the whole inland trade of every nation of the earth, which has hitherto been free, would be cast into the fetters. * * * It would give to the belligerent the right of interference in every act of neutral domestic commerce, till at last the burden would be so enormous that neutrality itself would become more intolerable than war, and the result of this assumed reform, professing to be founded on "the principles of eternal justice," would be nothing less than universal and interminable hostilities. (Quoted in Sec. 1,308, Moore's Digest, Page 970.)

Moreover, although the majority of the bills introduced at the last session of Congress are aimed only at the exportation of munitions of war, once the propriety of such legislation is granted in principle it ought not to and would not stop there. It would naturally be applied to conditional contraband, and no one can well foresee the complications to which it would lead.

Said Mr. Seward:

If Mexico shall prescribe to us what merchandise we shall not sell to French subjects, because it may be employed in military operations against Mexico, France must equally be allowed to dictate to us what merchandise we shall allow to be shipped to Mexico, because it might be belligerently used against France. Every other nation which is at war would have a similar right, and every other commercial nation would be bound to respect it as much as the United States. Commerce, in that case, instead of being free or independent, would exist only at the caprice of war. (Mr. Seward, Sec. of State, to Mr. Romero, Mexican Min., Dec. 15, 1862; Moore's Digest, Sec. 1,298, Page 938.)

Such being the justification for the present rule and the practical objections to the proposed change, what can be said in the abstract in favor of changing the established rule of international law in the manner proposed? So far as the writer is aware substantially only two arguments have been used in favor of such a change; first, that it is wrong for neutral Governments to permit their citizens to trade in munitions of war to be used against nations with which they are at peace; and, second, that the prohibition of this traffic would tend to diminish the frequency and severity of future wars. The ethical argument is, of course, sound from the point of view that all war is wrong, and that any assistance—direct or indirect—toward carrying on war is wrong under all circumstances.

Unfortunately, however, the world is not yet prepared to accept this viewpoint. If it was, war would cease to exist at once, and there would be no necessity for the legislation proposed. But, granting that wars must for the present be endured from time to time, it is submitted that it is very doubtful whether the proposed change would tend to render them less frequent or less bloody. It would simply result in largely increased purchases of munitions of war during times of peace, (unless it is also proposed to prohibit commerce in munitions of war in time of peace also,) and in the great increase in every country, and particularly in the United States, of the amount of fixed capital invested in the business of manufacturing munitions of war. In other words, if international commerce in munitions of war were forbidden while war itself remains, every country, according to its capacity, would have to do as Germany has done in anticipation of failure to control the seas, and every nation would have its own Essen and its own "Kanonen König."

And if by any chance a peaceful country like the United States became involved in war before it had adjusted itself to the new rule by building up great establishments for the production of arms and armament, it would pay dearly for its neglect. Instead of decreasing, it is believed that this would increase the influences in every State which make for war, unless the whole business of the manufacture of arms and munitions of war was everywhere made a Government monopoly, which would raise other interesting questions—among them, whether or not the entire world has yet progressed to the point where liberty would be safe if revolution were made practically impossible through universal Governmental control of the manufacture of munitions of war—questions which would lead us too far afield.

Let us not be deceived into thinking that we can abolish war by making it more burdensome for neutrals, and compelling even the non-military nations to join in the competitive construction of gun factories.

Should the Present Rule be Changed Now?

So much on the abstract question as to changing the long-established rule of international law. But how stands the case for the proposed legislation, in view of the actual conditions now obtaining? The proponents of this legislation maintain "that it is a condition, not a theory, which confronts us," that as a practical matter England commands the seas, and arms and munitions can only be exported to the Allies and not to Germany and Austria; that the rule of international law therefore lacks under these circumstances the "moral background" which supports it, and, to maintain it, is to fail in genuine neutrality.

In this connection reference is made to Jefferson's statement that, in order that "the purchases of arms here may work no inequality between the parties at war, the liberty to make them will be enjoyed equally by both." But the answer to this suggestion is obvious. The liberty to make purchases, to which Jefferson referred, is still "enjoyed equally" by both belligerents, and it is no more the concern of the United States that Germany is unable to import contraband because the British fleet commands the seas than it would be if her failure to make use of her liberty to purchase resulted from lack of money to pay for the arms, or because the Krupp works were able to supply all her necessities, as may perhaps be the case.

With all deference to those who talk about "changed conditions," it is submitted that suddenly to change our law, which conforms to our international duties, because England has won the command of the sea, (rather more completely than she did a hundred years ago,) is simply to intervene to undo the effects of her naval victories. There was a time, not so very long ago, when Germany was victorious in the South Pacific. Would it have been fair for Chile immediately after the German victory to have forbidden the exportation of arms and ammunition on the ground that none could get through to England?

It is said by one of the Congressional sponsors of the proposed legislation that it would "absolutely stop the war in ninety days." (Hearings before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Page 8.) But how? Another Congressional sponsor explains:

Those who have made an ironclad agreement among themselves not to quit until one side is crushed, if they found themselves without the necessary implements of war * * * might be inclined to talk peace. (Hearings, Page 102.)

In other words, (in spite of protestations that "the peace which does come will be a matter of negotiation between the warring powers,") this legislation is advocated by its authors on the ground that it will force the Allies to sue for peace in ninety days, and on the further ground that it will demonstrate and vindicate the genuineness of our neutrality.

It is even argued that the passage of the proposed legislation would so illustrate the quality of our neutrality as to increase the availability of this country as a possible mediator at the close of hostilities. But most people will reflect that a referee who changed the rules of the game after the ball was in play, for the professed purpose of depriving one side of an advantage it had gained under the existing rules, would scarcely be called upon to umpire the next game.

Dr. Kuno Francke, an American citizen of German birth, whose affection for the land of his fathers and loyalty to the land of his adoption render him a worthy representative of the millions of American citizens of Germanic origin who are a credit alike to America and Germany, has pointed out the manifest tendency of this unfair and revolutionary proposal.

Unfortunately, however, some of our American citizens of Germanic origin, especially certain of those who are particularly active as "German-Americans," or, as Bernhardi puts it, "American-Germans," either do not see the situation as clearly as Dr. Francke sees it or else allow their emotions unduly to upset their judgment.

If the proposed legislation, when impartially and carefully considered, did really make for the maintenance of strict neutrality, it is reasonable to suppose that it would be advocated by many fair-minded men whose sympathies were pro-Ally as well as by those whose sympathies were pro-German. But the ancestry and sentiments of the great majority of those who are urging this legislation, as frankly and proudly proclaimed by them, indicate that "the contrary is quite the reverse."

Says Bernhardi:

The isolated groups of Germans abroad greatly benefit our trade, since by preference they obtain their goods from Germany; but they may also be useful to us politically, as we discover in America. The American-Germans have formed a political alliance with the Irish, and thus united constitute a power in the State with which the Government must reckon. (Germany and the Next War, Page 78.)

And although the author of one of the pending bills told the House Committee on Foreign Affairs on Jan. 5 that Bernhardi "is looked upon as a crank in Germany," (Hearings, Page 105,) one cannot but wonder in running over the names of the gentlemen introduced by this same Congressman to the committee the day before, in order that they might speak in favor of his resolution, whether he and they were not proceeding on the theory that Bernhardi does occasionally at least have a lucid interval. On that day twelve gentlemen addressed the committee, all of German or Irish descent, and representing or conspicuously identified with various branches of the following societies, all German or Irish in name or in fact;

National German-American Alliance. American Neutrality League of St. Louis. German-Irish Central Legislative Committee of Chicago. Maryland Citizens' Committee for the Furtherance of Neutrality. United Irish Societies of America.

One of these gentlemen admonished the committee as follows:

I tell you, my friends, particularly from New York, the effect of that feeling which has gone abroad is tremendous today. That is what defeated Gov. Glynn of New York—the feeling that this Government is not neutral and impartial. (Page 82.)

Without expressing any opinion as to whether the attitude of the gentlemen who testified before the House Committee with respect to the proposed embargo is really representative of the membership of the German and Irish societies for which they appeared to speak or of our fellow-citizens of German and Irish birth or parentage, generally; and of course without for a moment questioning the good faith of anybody, and least of all that of the distinguished Congressman and peace advocate whose name is most commonly associated with this proposed legislation, and whose advocacy of the principle involved, as he informed the committee, antedates the war, one must respectfully agree with him in thinking that if the conditions as to the control of the sea and the relative efficiency and capacity of Krupp and Armstrong were reversed, while there would still be a large number of citizens protesting against the export of arms and ammunition under his leadership, "perhaps they would not be the same men." (Page 99.)

Precedent for the proposed action under such circumstances as the present, there is absolutely none. Obviously our embargo on the exportation of munitions of war in 1794, when war with England threatened, our general embargo of thirty days just before the war of 1812, and our embargo on the exportation of arms and munitions of war in 1898, just before we went to war with Spain, are not in point, unless the pending legislation be advocated (as it is by the author of one of the bills before Congress, [Hearings, Pages 38-41, &c.,]) as a precaution in view of our possibly becoming involved in the war.

The recent embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition, instituted by Italy while she was mobilizing and admittedly making every preparation for participation in the great struggle, is likewise not in point. Nor are similar embargoes declared during the present struggle by certain other neutral nations of Europe, which, in addition to their desire to keep all their munitions of war for possible use at home, are also probably influenced by their desire to free their commerce as far as possible from interruption by English cruisers searching for contraband.

As little relevant is our prohibition (under the old Spanish-American war resolution of 1898) of the shipment of arms and ammunition to Santo Domingo, in 1905.

The nearest approach to a precedent for the proposed legislation is the act of 1912, authorizing the President to forbid by proclamation the exportation of arms and munitions of war to "any American country where he finds conditions of domestic violence existing, which are promoted by the use of arms or munitions of war procured from the United States." Under the authority of this law, President Taft, on March 14, 1912, prohibited the exportation of arms and munitions of war to Mexico. By virtue of his power, however, to prescribe "limitations and exceptions," President Taft permitted the export of munitions of war to the established and recognized Madero Government in Mexico.

Later on, after the assassination of Madero and our refusal to recognize or countenance General Huerta, President Wilson applied the prohibition to shipments of arms intended for the Huerta Government as well as for the Constitutionalists. Thereafter, in February, 1914, President Wilson lifted the embargo entirely on the formal ground that "the conditions on which the proclamation of March 14, 1912, was based have essentially changed." And in a statement given to the press at the White House at that time it was explained that "the Executive order, under which the exportation of arms and ammunition into Mexico is forbidden, was a departure from the accepted practices of neutrality, a deliberate departure from those practices under a well-considered joint resolution of Congress—determined upon in circumstances which have now ceased to exist." Still later, after the taking of Vera Cruz, it is understood that the shipment of arms and ammunition into Mexico was informally again prohibited for a time, as a military precaution, lest these same arms should be used against our troops. And finally, at the present writing, arms and munitions of war are being exported to Mexico without restriction, although the newspapers at least are full of talk of a possible reimposition of the embargo.

It is submitted that the advocates of the proposed legislation are singularly unfortunate when they invoke this "off again, on again, gone again" Mexican precedent as an argument that the proposed embargo would be an aid to genuine neutrality, or would even tend to hasten the end of the war.

Our policy with reference to Mexico has been founded upon what were thought by Congress and the Executive to be the peculiar relations existing between the United States and the other American republics and not upon the general principles of international law governing the relation of neutrality. Our action has been governed by a well-intentioned desire to do our duty as we understood it, as our brothers' keeper. But it has, nevertheless, and with justice, been regarded by the Mexicans as an interference with their domestic affairs, and resented as such. In fact, our intermittent interruption of the exportation of arms and ammunition into Mexico in the interest of self-government and peace, as we saw it, from time to time, appears to have helped materially to gain us the hearty dislike of all parties which we seem now to enjoy in that unfortunate country. Let us not try this policy on Europe in its present state of mind.

In a word, it is believed that the proposed legislation considered abstractly, in spite of its benevolent aspect, might well be entitled "a bill to abridge neutral rights and stimulate military preparations all over the world"; and, considered concretely, it should be labeled "a bill to deprive the Allies of the legitimate fruits of their naval supremacy, and for other similar purposes." If either designation is truly descriptive, it does not deserve to be enacted.

TRAINING DOCTORS FOR WAR WORK

Well-Known Medical Men Attend Camp at Tobyhanna for Military Hospital Instruction

FROM all parts of the United States medical officers of the organized militia and doctors of the United States Army Medical Reserve Corps are gathering at Tobyhanna, Penn., to attend the camp that Uncle Sam has provided for their military instruction. These doctors will be given a course lasting seven days for each class. There are to be six classes of instruction, and the camp will continue until late in August.

The Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army has on its rolls about 1,500 of the most distinguished physicians and surgeons in the United States. This corps was organized during the Roosevelt Administration by Surgeon General O'Reilly to act as an emergency reserve in case the demands of war should overtax the surgeons of the small regular army and the medical department of the organized militia.

In times of war the military surgeon occupies a double rôle. He is a physician or surgeon at the base, but he performs military duty almost exclusively when at the front. The Medical Reserve Corps is designed to occupy the middle zone, which requires a knowledge of both military and professional duties.

At the front it will be necessary to employ the services of every available regular surgeon, assisted by the trained militia surgeons, to carry on the administrative and military functions of the army. To put these trained military officers at purely professional work would be a waste of talent, because the most expensive surgeon to the country is the surgeon who has been given a rigid training in military matters—a training that only the regular has time to receive.

In the middle zone the administration of military hospitals requires the services of surgeons who are acquainted with property records, records of sick and wounded, court-martial proceedings, boards of survey, and the countless other procedures that are peculiar to the military organizations.

In this zone the hospital corps is drilled and instructed in first aid and sanitation in preparation for their services at the front, and hence it is that even in this middle zone it is necessary to have officers who know at least enough about army administration to enable them to keep their hospital running smoothly and who are able to prepare the hospital corps privates for field duty.

These, then, are the positions that the reserve corps must be trained to occupy, and these camps are intended to give them the necessary instruction.

It usually causes surprise to a civilian to be told that the army surgeon is really a military man and that the surgeons of the regular army and of the organized militia will, in war time, have very few medical or surgical duties to perform—yet this is the fact.

The chief duty of the Medical Department in campaign is to relieve the fighting forces from the burden of caring for the sick and wounded at the front. This means that the transportation of immense numbers of disabled men must be accomplished by the medical department.

If a division of 20,000 men should have a 25 per cent. casualty list—and this is not an unusually large number—it means that the division surgeon will have 5,000 men to transport to the rear. It will require several thousand attendants to move those 5,000 wounded, and the division surgeon suddenly, after a battle, will find himself in command of some 8,000 or 10,000 men.

This is a military movement of large magnitude. No General except the supreme commander has such a big military problem confronting him. The problem is complicated also by the fact that the General of the line simply gives the order to march, while the division surgeon must provide transportation for a large majority of his force.

Viewed in this light, it is readily seen that Medical Department administration in the field requires a large measure of military talent in troop leading, and that unless the division surgeon can have the services of a real military force his efforts will result in chaos.

Further to emphasize the difference between the military surgeon and the doctor, it must be explained that no sick are treated at the front. First aid and emergency treatment are, of course, rendered as the occasion demands, but it is almost a court-martial offense to keep a wounded man at the front for any operation or treatment that is not of a strictly emergency character.

It has been found in all armies that wounded have a better chance of recovery if their treatment is postponed until their arrival at the base where proper facilities can be provided for their care. The military surgeon at the front is most successful when he refrains from practising medicine and surgery and devotes his entire energy to rendering first aid and arranging for prompt evacuation to the rear of all of his charges.

A surgeon possesses surgical judgment and is able to separate those who can from those who cannot be transported, and he is able to give satisfactory first aid. In all active particulars his duty on the firing line could be performed by a line officer. This explains the military axiom that a line officer would make a better military surgeon at the front than any civilian surgeon who has not received a military training. The definition of a military surgeon is a "soldier who has specialized in surgery, sanitation, and medicine."

Many Americans have read of the European field hospitals, and some have been interested in learning that the United States has a few of these organizations. It is doubtful, however, if 50,000 people in the whole country know what a field hospital is. The writer of this article has been informed from reliable sources that there are still to be found many officers of the line of the regular army who have no idea of the function of a field hospital.

This is not strange when you consider the lamentable fact that the United States does not possess a single complete division, even though the division is our unit of army organization. Field hospitals, being divisional organizations, are never seen by our army officers who have had experience only with regiments and brigades.

Field hospitals are not, as one might expect, places for the treatment of the sick. They are simply resting places for the sick during their transit from the firing line to the rear. Each division is provided with four ambulance companies and one transport column, which are assisted by any transportation the division surgeon can collect.

Farm wagons, carts, automobiles, trucks, drays, empty ammunition trains, and supply trains are all impressed into service when one of the big movements of the wounded occurs. In feverish haste the wounded are pressed back—back—back—and if they do reach a field hospital, it is only for rest and recuperation or to await better transportation facilities. The field hospital is therefore only an organized stopping place, and it is never, in active campaign, immobilized for more than a few hours or days at a time.

Field hospitals must always keep in touch with their divisions. To provide for sudden forward movements of the line, the United States has organized evacuation hospitals, to come up to field hospitals to take over their sick, so as to permit them to move with their divisions. Evacuation hospitals are therefore just like field hospitals, because their only duty is to care for the wounded on their way to the rear.

To command field hospitals and ambulance companies requires a great deal of military skill. These organizations are always in charge of medical officers, who must always be in touch with the division, but must never get in the way of the combatant forces. The field orders for battle formation must be read and translated by field hospital and ambulance commanders, and interpreted correctly. Mistakes and bad judgment would produce fatal results.

They must not interfere with trains or troop movements and they must be on hand where and when needed. If they stay too far in the rear they are not available. If they approach too far toward the front they are liable to capture or injury by the enemy's projectiles. They must estimate distances and correctly judge the character of shelter the terrain affords. With map and compass they must be prepared to find their way over side roads to avoid interference with the trains, and from a knowledge of military tactics they must be able to predict the results of the combat and dispose themselves accordingly.

Only a few of the many duties of medico-military organizations have been mentioned, but any one can see that the doctor in civil life has received no training that would aid him in performing any of this work. We cannot even hope that the Medical Reserve Corps can ever qualify for any of the military duties of the army surgeon at the front. This is the work of a military specialist.

The last few weeks of the camp at Tobyhanna will be given over to the instruction of militiamen who have specialized as field hospital and ambulance company commanders, but during the first weeks of the camp only general instruction has been given.

During the instruction period for field hospitals a small one-sixth size model will be used to illustrate the workings of this organization. This model was made by Dr. Raymond C. Turck of Jacksonville, Fla., a distinguished orthopaedic surgeon widely known in this and foreign countries. Dr. Turck, who holds the rank of Major in the Florida National Guard, has patriotically used many hours of his time in mastering the subject of field hospital administration, and has made this model for use in indoor or armory drill.

The model covers a ground space of 100 by 40 feet, and is by no means a toy. It has proved to be one of the most successful instruments for teaching yet devised, and it is expected that the idea of teaching from miniature models will be adopted by the War Department and the various States.

To give a connected idea of what steps are taken to care for the wounded let us trace their course from the front to the base.

Let us suppose that at 4 P. M., in the midst of a furious battle, a man receives a gunshot injury in the thigh. Any attempt to remove this man will, perhaps, be fatal both to him and his rescue party. What then can the Medical Department do? Nothing.

Every soldier carries a first aid packet on his belt and he is trained how to use this packet for just such an emergency as we have described. This packet of sterile dressings will be opened by the soldier, and he will have to dress his own wound as best he can. Perhaps a comrade may help him and, perhaps, he will be lucky enough to have a medical officer near at hand; but his main reliance is his own knowledge of first aid.

When darkness brings a lull in the battle it will probably be possible for the sanitary troops to come forward and get this man. He will be carried back under cover to the regimental first aid station, his dressings will be removed, and a skilled surgeon will prepare him for transportation by splinting the fracture and applying more elaborate dressings to the wounds. At this station it may infrequently be possible to give him a little broth, but a hypodermic of strychnine and morphine will more often be all that he will receive.

Before his dressings have been adjusted the litter section of an ambulance company will appear and our wounded man will be carried to a dressing station, established in a safe place, under good cover. At this station our wounded man receives more careful emergency treatment. He is fed, and is given, perhaps, a bed of straw covered with a blanket, and here he awaits his turn to be loaded into the ambulances that will carry him to the field hospital four or five miles further to the rear. If our man is lucky he will reach the field hospital the next morning, but if transportation is scarce, wounded are plentiful, and the roads crowded with ammunition wagons or troops, hours or days may pass before he can move to more comfortable quarters.

At the field hospital our man may get a better bed, better food, and more careful surgical treatment. At this station all wounds will receive careful preparation for the remainder of the journey, which begins as soon as the ambulances of the transport column can carry him.

If the wounded are so numerous that they cannot be carried to the rear, an evacuation hospital comes up to relieve the field hospital, and a man may spend days or weeks at this spot, but the object is always to push him back to the rear. The evacuation hospital has more elaborate equipment. It has X-ray machines and good surgical appliances, but it is not a permanent hospital, and our man is carried back to the base as soon as possible.

This base hospital is a real hospital, equipped with all the surgical and medical appliances known to man. It is here that the reserve corps specialists of all branches of medical and surgical science can be found, and it is at this station that the man is kept until he can go back to the firing line, or until it is proved that he is hopelessly disabled. This latter class is discharged from the service and is sent to one of the big home hospitals far away from the front.

SUFFRAGIST ADDRESSES MEN ONLY

ONLY men are having suffrage speeches made to them in the campaign the Women's Political Union is carrying on in New York State. They are enjoying them greatly, so reports show, while women, hearing of the meetings through the men, are asking for meetings, but cannot get them.

This is because Miss Helen Todd, who is a suffrage campaigner, made a great discovery. Miss Todd said that she would not make another speech to women, having found that it is men who have the indirect influence, and that when men go to a meeting and get interested in an idea they influence their wives to accept the same idea. But women do not have similar influence with their husbands.

"I just made up my mind," said Miss Todd to a TIMES representative, "that I was not going to humiliate myself any more by going around and asking women if they wouldn't please want to vote. California has the vote—there are 700,000 women voting now—and I wasn't going to plead with women who don't want the vote—women who, if they should get it, would probably vote down everything we would think was worth while. I believe that most of the women who are worth anything do want to vote now, and those who don't never would. So I said that if I had to talk any more to women I wouldn't talk at all. I would just go back to California and spend my time voting myself.

"So I was told I could speak to the men. Now, Miss Jane Pincus, who is the Union Organizer, and I have been through the southern part of the State from Middletown to Buffalo. I have made fifty-six speeches in thirty-six days, and I have talked to the Masons, the Elks, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Columbus, the Rotary Clubs, the Advertising Clubs, the Young Men's Christian Associations, and the Bible Classes, and with the Chambers of Commerce. They have been all glad to see us.

"Then I discovered that wonderful thing about the indirect influence of men. You always hear about the indirect influence of women, but I don't believe any woman ever went home from a meeting with an idea that interested her and got her husband so worked up that he adopted the same idea; but I find the men do that. If one of them goes home from some big meeting and tells his wife that he and 300 other men have just heard a corking speech on suffrage and there wasn't a woman to hear it, his wife is crazy about it and she wants to hear the same thing.

"The women wrote so many letters asking us to speak to them, that in a few places we had to do it. They came out in crowds. We never in the world could have brought them together if we hadn't had the men's meetings first. We have had from 300 to 500 at the men's meetings, and there was never a meeting where a large majority did not stand up to say that they would vote for us. They were really interested, too.

"The only thing you have to do at a man's meeting is to dress well, let them smoke, and don't be dull. You see, the men think they are going to be scolded, and some way they seem to think that suffrage is against smoking. Men don't care a rap about abstract arguments. They bombard us with questions, and they want to know what has really happened in California; they want political information about things they would like to have in New York. Men feel dimly that things are not always as they would like to have them. They feel that there are sides of life that women touch more directly than they, and they think—' well, perhaps, the women might help us, and it might be worth trying.'

"If we can show the men that it would take only an hour a year, and that the woman could vote in a nice, womanly way through her own club, he can't see why she shouldn't do it if she likes. When in twelve Western States the men think enough of their women to give them the vote, why shouldn't the Eastern men believe in their wives as comrades just as much?

"We tell them of the three types of men who are the ones chiefly opposed to woman suffrage—those who are working for the vice interests; the illiterate man who makes a slave of his wife and wants her chained to the cook stove; the silk stocking man, who wants his wife to sit on a throne apart from all the interests of the world.

"We tell them how, when we thought we had lost California, those brave mountain men and the miners came pouring down at 4 o'clock in the morning and turned the vote in our favor. And we ask them not to think of women as dolls."

"What can I do to make her stronger?"

Your physician has told you that it is simply one of the thousands of cases of "debility." You have tried certain "tonics" without avail, but you have not yet tried Sanatogen, the true food-tonic.

And Sanatogen may well prove her salvation, for remember that thousands of women who were weak and weary have derived new strength, a new joy of living, from its use.

Olive Schreiner, the famous writer, gratefully exclaims:

"Nothing that I have taken in years has given me such a sense of vigor as Sanatogen."

And Amelia E. Barr, the beloved novelist, refers to the "marvellous help" derived from using Sanatogen.

This help of Sanatogen is not the false help of a mere stimulant but the constructive aid of a true food-tonic which gives the exhausted system the natural elements for building up the blood, strengthening the nerves, improving digestion.

How well it performs this function, physicians in every land—21,000 of them have endorsed Sanatogen in writing—know from actual observation. Their attitude is well summed up by the famous Berlin specialist, Professor Eulenberg, who writes:

"I am using Sanatogen more and more in cases of nervous troubles which have their origin in poverty of the blood and poor nutrition, and never had occasion to regret its use."

And we feel sure you will never regret using Sanatogen.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in 3 sizes, from $1.00 up.

PHASES OF ART IN WAR TIMES

Art at Home and Abroad

Interesting Collection of French Soldiers' Sketches Made at the Front --Charming Etchings by Lepere

ONE of the most interesting incidents of the war to lovers of art is the appearance in the current number of The Century of sketches made by soldiers in the trenches and brought together by the Inspector General of Fine Arts at Paris. There is not a trace of formalism in these rapid notes, "actualités," precisely what went on under the eyes of the artists under conditions permitting no second thoughts and no cautious eliminations. The little scenes spring saliently to the sympathetic vision—a scrawled portrait of a superior officer directing the fire from his post in the trench; a little ruined and famous farm in Flanders, drawn, we are told, by one of the prize winners of the Salon while a shell bursting near him flung up the earth against him; a card player at his game between the narrow walls of his prison; a rocket describing a parabolic curve above a snowy landscape, and in the foreground an intensely watchful figure; a soldier in a worn uniform bending over his Plutarch; a group of worn-out soldiers huddled over a small stove, all of them documents of life and of that strangely accentuated life that goes on at the elbow of death. M. Dayot, the Inspector General, sees in the experience of the trenches, where all classes of society mingle in uniform, a new promise for French art. "The expression of sincere emotion," he says, born in the midst of perpetual danger, is going to succeed the insane interpretation of false sentiments from which French art was slowly dying."

It is interesting to review the course of art during the French Revolution, "the astonishing and marvellous tragedy which," in the words of Geoffroy, "was playing for sixteen years on the great European stage, that extraordinary epoch which has renewed the face of the world, that succession of miracles which giving to human minds a direction separates them from the old toys that formerly amused them." Marcel Raymond's penetrating study of the subject has shown us that the principal characteristics of the art developed by the Revolution were idealism, morality, energy and simplicity; the idealism corresponding to the dreams and desires of the new philosophy, its morality to the reforms undertaken for the improvement of the social state, its force to the quality of energy required by the terrible struggle against the former régime, its simplicity to the reaction against the excessive luxury of the society which the revolutionists had sought to destroy. Painting was essentially the art of the epoch. Cheaper, and produced by a quicker process than sculpture, it expressed the underlying feeling of the time, and in the hands of a David united energy with sentimentality. The portrait was the favorite form taken by the art of the Revolution, portraiture in which the soul was revealed and intellect and genius were emphasized instead of rank and fortune. Subject pictures ran to symbol and the motives chosen by the artists were love of country, justice, liberty, glory, victory, fame, peace.

It is possible already to foresee something of the same evolution in the official art of the period just now forming on the battlefields. The portraiture will be there, certainly, with Jacquier's portrait of General Joffre in the lead, and the issues of L'Illustration bear witness to the influence still exercised by the symbol over the impressionable French painter. There also will be, no doubt, a series of "military pictures" in which manoeuvres and weapons are scrupulously observed for purposes of historical record, pictures such as adorn the walls of that palace dedicated to "all the glories of France." But one is permitted to predict that there will be much more than at earlier periods of the casual comments on daily experience of which the Century article has given us a foretaste, that another generation will know something of the present war more intimate and real than past generations have known of their battlefields through the medium of art.

"Mrs. Perez Morton," by Gilbert Stuart. (In the Worcester Art Museum.)

One thing is certain, if the present war turns out to be the inspiration of a living art such as profited Goya and to a less degree of fervor Callot, this permanent good won from immeasurable tragedy will find prompt appreciation on the part of the public, and the really good things of the years 1914 and 1915 will be quickly absorbed by a race of collectors grown exceedingly astute. Nor will this popularity be limited to "war pictures," which, of course, will play the prominent rôle. Already there are signs of the times. Although it is natural to think of France and of all the fighting countries as wholly given over to their immediate and heavy task, there are in truth many who, by no means dead to the importance of the international issues, nevertheless keep on with such serenity as they can command in the avenues of work that formerly entreated them, and produce excellent results. The etchers and devotees of the point especially are industrious in their interpretation of old favorite themes, and their work has never found a public more avid. In several cases the American print dealers have not been able to obtain first proofs of etchings made during the early months of the war, even when the subjects had nothing of occasional appeal. D. Y. Cameron is one of those who has produced characteristic plates the early editions of which already are exhausted. The work of Muirhead Bone has practically doubled in price during the last six months. The drawings of Paris made by Forain just before the war broke out are not to be had, having been swallowed up by private collectors. Lepère, too old to fight but not too old to do amazing things with the etcher's needle, has kept his intensely militant spirit out of his charming new subjects, plates as brilliant and engaging as anything in his earlier portfolios.

One of these recent subjects by Lepère in its first and second states illustrates with particular felicity the natural course of the artist's mind in determining the development of a composition. The first state shows a group of trees, the sharp definition of the twigs indicating the crispness of the atmosphere. All the interest is centred in this rather compact group, a few lines straying off toward possibly entertaining distances. There is the admirable freshness of touch which Lepère, above all living etchers, is able to command, and there is the hint of the complete idea in the swaying branches under an empty sky. In the second state one sees how he delights to play with the dramatic and amusing side of his subject once the fine structure is determined. A storm has come up in that empty sky, and explains the swaying of the trees. The rain comes in scudding gusts, and you see it, then miss it, then find it again against the foliage, precisely as in nature. There is plenty of nature to enrich and enliven that firm underlying design. The little distant bushes, adrench and disturbed under the onslaught of the storm. A tiny house, some microscopic figures, indicated with the clear open line dear to the French etcher since Callot first discovered its usefulness. In the foreground the deep cleft of a narrow stream, and then at the left a simple episode, just such as appeals to the sense of humor of a true Frenchman away from the boulevards. A man and a woman are shooing home the geese, who flap perversely in different directions. The awkward peasant figures, the eloquent spread of the wings in the startled birds, the uncouth gestures, the distracted haste—one seems to hear the clipped phrases of dialect tumble from the mouths of these agitated human beings putting themselves in accord with the agitation of nature and the stir of the elements. This sympathy for the everyday life of the common people, tinged with mockery and with an indefinable suggestion of pity, is Lepère himself and at his best.

He is not altogether at his best in the etching called "Quartier de pêcheurs," but no other etcher would choose quite this subject or treat it in quite this way. The scene is an open space surrounding some huts. It is wash day, and sheets that resemble sails are hanging from clotheslines and flapping in the strong breeze with magnificent billowing curves. Some ugly children are munching in the foreground, and the ugly figures of fishwives are saliently in evidence. Nothing is subtracted from the realism of the scene and nothing of grace is added to it, but the harsh snapping line gives the sense of salt air and the disposition of the figures suggests illimitable horizons.

Still another composition is entirely of trees, the branches twisted in romantic design, the trunks springing in the manner of organic growth from deepset roots, sparkling details of foliage noted. Nothing of human interest, but an interest in the tree life so absorbing, a probing into the secrets of character so thorough that the observer is enlisted by images not less vital than those of the human world. This equally is Lepère, and it is difficult not to regret that in this hour of battles he clings to scenes of peace. With that open and synthetic line of his—amazingly resembling Callot's in his small and distant figures—he like Callot could have brought together the episodes of a swarming battlefield on a single plate with no loss either of character or general impression.

Steinlen, too, would find his account in this new material which he could use with such zest, meeting its brutality with a brutal energy of his own. To be convinced of it one need only recall those drawings of Montmartre in which the pulse of the quarter is kept so steady under its superficial manifestations with that cruelty of courage which is French and unassailable. If the new group of artists dedicating themselves to the life of the trenches can manage to see as deeply into human character as the masters of philosophic insight who have dedicated themselves to the wars of Montmartre it will be thrilling history for future generations.

Early American Portraits.

The Bulletin of the Worcester Art Museum is devoted this month to the extraordinary collection of early American portraits in the museum, a collection which Charles Eliot Norton said was "perhaps more significant for a New England museum than a masterpiece by Rubens or Titian."

The period covered is between the late seventeenth century and the early nineteenth. One family is represented in six generations from Thomas Elbridge to Stephen Salisbury, with portraits by Christian Gülliger, crude and keen and uncompromising; Chester Harding, peddler, chairmaker, and tavernkeeper before he was artist; the famous Copley, and the still more famous Stuart, among others. The excellent article illustrated by a number of reproductions, also excellent, gives a number of quaint anecdotes from the lives of the artists. One from Chester Harding's autobiography throws light on the position accorded art in the estimation of the colonists. When the young artist came home from a wandering pursuit of art with pockets full of money and a talent which drew commissions for portraits to him steadily, his amazed and incredulous grandfather felt obliged to call him aside and say: "Chester, I want to speak to you about your present mode of life. I think it very little better than swindling to charge forty dollars for one of those effigies. Now I want you to give up this course of living and settle down on a farm and become a respectable man."

It is pleasant to find the bulletin adequately enthusiastic over the portrait of Mrs. Perez Morton, by Gilbert Stuart, which is one of those delicate personal achievements which has been prevented by some lucky accident from passing the point of perfection in its journey toward "finish." Blake's vigorous phrase comes to mind: "Let a man who has made a drawing go on and on, and he will produce a painting, but if he chooses to leave off before he has spoil'd it he will do a better thing." Stuart has done this "Better Thing." The writer in the bulletin says that if a portrait can express pure poetry this may surely claim that quality. "It is an unfinished sketch, a seemingly transient harmony of transparent, pearly, shimmering tints laid on the canvas with rapid strokes. Completed, it would have been a charming portrait u ually implies—both in coloring and expression it is a poetic suggestion of life itself, radiant and vivacious and passing like a breeze. Among all the portraits in the collection, there is not one which has the pure beauty of this sketch."

A New Magazine.

A new art magazine of different intention from those already existing makes its appearance this month. Frankly addressed to those interested in the commercial arts, The Modern Arts Collector proposes to print designs and illustrations in the modern style suitable for advertising posters, book covers, post cards, wall papers, textiles, and to print a supplement for young artists working in the modern spirit, who find it difficult to make their work known. Examples of it will be reproduced in this supplement. The first number has on its cover a macaw of exuberant coloring against a background of what one may call Viennese pink, since it is so largely used in modern Viennese designs.

Brygos in the Boston Museum.

The current number of The American Journal of Archaeology contains an interesting paper on a Greek vase in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts attributed to the famous painter Brygos. The Boston Museum is distinguished in its collection of Greek vases, owning considerably over a thousand examples, each of high quality, and illustrating in chronological sequence the story of Greek ceramic art from the early Mycenaean period, about 1200 B. C., down to the third century decadence.

The art of Brygos belongs to the period beginning in the sixth century B. C. when the designs on Greek vases were left in the red of the clay, the surrounding surface having been covered with a black glaze. On these red figures the interior lines were painted with a fine brush in rich brown. The method was characterized by an inspiring freedom, and the artists employed it with zest. The Boston Museum possesses signed vases by Euphronios, whose strength and energy expressed themselves in violence of action, and by Douris, whose measured harmonies give a high degree of aesthetic pleasure. Both artists retain in certain examples of their work traces of archaism, but Brygos works with full command of his powers and of his instrument, sweeping into a few strokes all the anatomical understanding of the human body which he had, and playing easily with character almost to the verge of caricature.

The special interest of the Boston vase, granted the ascription to Brygos, which is amply supported by internal evidence, lies in the subject, athletes with their trainers practicing with halters (metal weights) in the palaestra. It has been assumed by no less an authority than Hartwig that Brygos treated all the subjects known to vase painters of the severe red-figured style except the palaestra, and the publication of this vase adds the missing subject to his repertory.

An Exposition Number.

The August issue of Art and Progress is dedicated to the Fine Arts section of the Panama Pacific Exposition. Michael Williams writes on "A Pageant of American Art," with immense appreciation of the importance of the American school and belief in its future. Mr. Laurvik writes on the foreign paintings with a special word for excellence of the Swedish group both in selection and manner of presentation, and for the interest of the Hungarian section, the only one among the foreign sections to give a survey of the general development of a nation's art from the beginning of the last century down to date. The article by Mr. Neuhaus on the "Sculpture and Mural Decoration" strikes at the outset an exhilarating note. The author says that the "best compliment to be paid to the exposition sculpture is that it is not evident at first and that one becomes aware of it only in the course of studying the architecture." "I do not think," he adds, "that with the exception of the Column of Progress and the groups of the Nations of the East and of the West, the exposition has produced through its very unusual and novel opportunities, any great work, or presented any new talent heretofore not recognized; but it will most certainly stand a critical examination and a comparison with other exposition sculpture." After this dignified moderation every word of praise has a true value and carries conviction, and Mr. Neuhaus finds possible many cordial words. The Arts and Crafts are rather summarily dismissed in three or four pages by Mr. Williams, and a short article on the section of prints by Charles Olmstead emphasizes the fine and steady development in this field.

Dolls in Costume.

The Metropolitan Museum has hit upon the admirable plan of illustrating the historical development of costume by dolls dressed with archaeological correctness and with an artistic feeling for line and color. They date from the Middle Ages to the nineteenth century, and the designer is Miss Lightfoot, an expert in the field of historic costume, who has spent years of study and labor in the libraries and art galleries of Europe. For her costumes she has used as nearly as possible the materials that were worn at the period, although frequently modern adaptations were necessary, because the patterns of the old fabrics were too large for miniature reproductions. The details, such as the laces used for trimmings, the buttons and ribbons, are carefully considered, and the whole effect is characteristic of the age represented.

The early sixteenth century, or the period of Holbein, shows the broad wired headdress that gave to the face and its superstructure the form of a heart. The position of the waist line and the skirt broadening into many folds are well known to students of Holbein's work. The period of Catherine de Medici is courtly, with slashed sleeves, high collar, and flowing lines of black silk, and the end of the sixteenth century shows a gown of grayish green and pink, which Pepys would have called "a very fine and handsome garment." The Frans Hals period is represented by a doll in an extremely blonde wig, with characteristic stiff collar and cuffs, embroidered satin, and stiff gilt stripings. One sees the portraits by Hals a little differently for this thin ray of common light on the formal dress of his sitters.

A SOURCE OF INNOCENT MERRIMENT

Husband—That electric lamp on her birthday cake is my wife's idea. Clever, isn't it?

Guest—Yes. But what candle power is the lamp?

Lines from a Jester's Notebook

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.

A TRUE LOVER.

THEY said he was a callous Turk who'd never had a heart
Wherein the god of Love might work his soft romantic part,
But this I know as well as I
Know things that round about me lie,
The man could woo, and sweetly sigh,
With all a lover's art.
He loved Babbette, he loved Suzette, Kate, Phyllis, and Yvonne;
Dear Madeline, and Caroline, Priscilla, and Mignonne;
He loved Elaine, and Sara Jane, Anne, Grace, and Chrystabel,
Amelia, Prue, and Emmie Lou, Cordelia, and Estelle.

They said he was an arrant flirt, a bee that sipped and flew;
That everywhere he saw a skirt, or eyes of dreamy hue,
He'd hover round them day and night
Like moth around a candle-light,
But I who knew this gallant wight
Will swear that he was true
To fair, Babette, and sweet Suzette, Kate, Phyllis, and Yvonne;
To Madeline, and Caroline, Priscilla, and Mignonne;
To dear Elaine, and Sara Jane, Anne, Grace, and Chrystabel,
Amelia, Prue, and Emmie Lou, Cordelia, and Estelle.

And what is more I dare to say that if the law had said
That on some sunny Summer's day, with roses round them spread,
This man of whom I sing my song
Could marry all and do no wrong
You would have seen this list so long
Of maids that he had wed:
The fair Babette, and sweet Suzette, Kate, Phyllis, and Yvonne;
Dear Madeline, and Caroline, Priscilla, and Mignonne;
La belle Elaine, and Sara Jane, Anne, Grace, and Chrystabel;
Amelia, Prue, and Emmie Lou, Cordelia, and Estelle.

A VIOLATED AGREEMENT.

"I don't like to find fault, Mr. Landlord," said Dixie Ipsit, addressing the proprietor of the Ocean View House, "but didn't I understand that our arrangement was that all bills were to be presented weekly?"

"Undoubtedly, Sir," replied the landlord.

"Well, I think you had better notify your mosquitos of the fact, Sir," said Dixie. "About ten thousand of them are presenting their bills nightly."

ANSWER TO A CORRESPONDENT.

A person signing himself Poeticus asks, "What do you pay for verse like this—

If Poeticus will call at this office we'll give him the same compensation per line that Adam got.

What Did It?

FOR once youth and good looks were nowhere. Middle age was triumphant. The victor was hatless and she carried a large market basket. The car was so crowded that she had difficulty in pushing in with her basket, but she finally managed it. Moreover, she found space to balance it on the back of a seat. Then she looked out at the station clock. That gave her a fright.

"Half-past five," she said. "Good gracious! And I've got to have Jim's supper ready at 6:30."

One corner of the basket was partitioned off into a little nest, and into that nest she tossed her green beans as she strung them. Before half a dozen beans had left her fingers every man within seeing and hearing distance was on his feet begging her to take his place.

Well-dressed men, shabby men were for the moment on a level. To them it mattered not in the least that good looks had to stand, but that a woman who wished to have her husband's supper ready on time should have to stand in a car while preparing a part of it was unthinkable.

Vacation.

By M'Landburgh Wilson.

YOU need not be cumbered with baggage;
It won't take a cent of your pelf;
The plan for the finest vacation
Is getting away from yourself.

My ego has gone to the mountains
To revel in woodland and stream;
My spirit has fled to the ocean
To bask on the sands and to dream.

To gaze on the magical marvels
My inner me went to the fair;
My soul is away at a farmside,
The bounty of nature to share.

And meanwhile the I who must hustle
For shekels for rent and for hash
Is staying right here in Manhattan
And grubbing away for the cash.

All in the Day's Work.

IN a town of Maryland one Bill Morton appeared before the Postmaster one morning, and the following colloquy occurred:

"Morning, Mr. Postmaster."

"Morning, Bill."

"Has Tom Moore been in for his mail yet?"

"No."

"Will you be here when he comes?"

"I guess so."

"Well, when he comes in will you tell him that on his way from the cheese factory I wish he'd stop and get that pig of Herman Stutz's and take it down to Henry Parker's, and tell Henry I said he could have it for that single harness even up, if he'll fix that bridle and throw in them russet lines instead of the old black ones; and if he won't trade, tell Tom to bring the pig down to my place and put it in the extra pen, and be sure and shut that door to the hen house, or all the chickens'll get out. Sure there ain't no mail? Morning, Mr. Postmaster."

"Morning, Bill."

Quick Thinking.

THE Chief of Police of Cincinnati tells this one:

"A German shoemaker left the gas turned on in his shop one night, and upon arriving in the morning struck a match to light it. There was a terrific explosion and the shoemaker was blown out through the door, almost to the middle of the street.

"A policeman rushed to his assistance, and after helping him to arise, inquired if he was injured. The Teuton gazed into his place of business, which was now burning quite briskly, and said:

"'No, I ain't hurt. But I got out shust in time, eh?'"

AT a certain college in Iowa the male students are not permitted to visit the resident female boarders. One day a male student was caught in the act of doing so and was brought before the President, who said:

"Well, Mr. Jones, the penalty for the first offense is 50 cents; for the second, 75 cents; for the third, $1, and so on, rising to $5."

In solemn tones the trespasser said:

"How much would a season ticket cost?"

The Divorce Problem in Tennessee.

THE office of the Circuit Court Clerk, where divorce suits are filed, was on the fourth floor of the Court House, and the elevator was not running. Among the early stair-climbers was a big, black mammy of nearly 300 pounds weight, who pulled along by the trousers band a shrivveled, shrinking black man.

At the top of the first flight of steps, which was unusually long, she stopped and exclaimed, between puffs and blows: "Look a-here, nigger, I ain't a-gwine one step fu'ther! I'se drug you th'u forty-fo' years o' matrimony, an' I'se drug you up all dese here stairs. "Yes, Eben," said the woman, sympathetically, "what has happened?"

SCIENCE DOES NOT JUSTIFY HUMAN WARFARE

Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, Noted English Biologist, Contests the Claim That International Conflict Is Based on Laws of Evolution

EVOLUTION AND THE WAR. By P. Chalmers Mitchell. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.

GERMAN militarists have tried to justify the present war by an appeal to biology and the evolutionary laws of nature as set forth by Charles Darwin. In the words of von Bernhardi: "Wherever we look in nature, we find that war is a fundamental law of development. The natural law to which all laws of nature can be reduced is the law of struggle." On this ground he and his class hold that a war of aggression by Germany is natural, just, necessary, and admirable.

But even nature, "red in tooth and claw," refuses to father the monstrous child. The German appeal to evolutionary science is overruled by modern science itself.

Dr. P. Chalmers Mitchell, a noted biologist and evolutionist, has written a book to show that von Bernhardi's "law of struggle" is nonsense as applied to wars of nations, a shallow pseudo-science that is worthless as a defense of the present German raid for power.

Dr. Mitchell is Secretary of the Zoological Society of London and an honorary member of many similar bodies in other countries, including the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. He is a Scot and holds university degrees from Aberdeen, Oxford, and the University of Pennsylvania. His present book is based on three lectures recently delivered at the Royal Institution in London.

Writing as a scientist rather than as a controversialist, Dr. Mitchell gives much of his space to clearing up some of the latest advances in evolutionary thought. One of his first acts is to note that, while evolution is an accepted fact, Darwin's so-called law of natural selection remains to this day only a much-disputed hypothesis. He then proceeds to show:

> That even if the struggle for existence were a scientific law, it does not necessarily apply to human affairs.
> That modern nations are not units of the same order as the units of the animal and vegetable kingdom from which the law of struggle for existence is a supposed inference.
> That the struggle for existence as propounded by Charles Darwin, and as it can be followed in nature, has no resemblance with human warfare.
> That man is not subject to the laws of the unconscious, and that his conduct is to be judged not by them, but by its harmony with a real and external not-self that man has built up through the ages.

Dr. Mitchell first takes a kindly, humorous glance at the glorious results which the Germans expect from their conquest of a great part of the world—"German civilisation reigning from the Urals to the Atlantic, from the North Cape to the Mediterranean, the docile millions of Asia practicing the goose-step, and happy Africa playing Wagner and Strauss syncopated for the tom-tom." Then, remarking that it is no new thing for a prospective criminal to intend to devote the proceeds of his crime to ennobling the human race, he turns to the serious, scientific aspects of the subject.

Even in the animal world, the author contends, when one species supplants another it is not due to direct warfare. Evolution, the law of the survival of the fittest, works inwardly among the individuals of each species, rather than outwardly, tribe against tribe. Even where one species encroaches on the ground of another the battle is against environment rather than against each other.

Dr. Mitchell cites many cases. Take that of the thylacine, or Tasmanian wolf, which has been supplanted by the Australian wild dog, or dingo. The thylacine was the fiercest of the marsupials or pouched animals in Australia. It is now extinct, except in the remotest mountains of Tasmania. Its fierceness did not save it. It was abundant all over Australia as far back as pliocene times, and it has been supplanted by a modern dog with a little larger brain. The author continues:

> There is no particle of evidence that the dingo made any direct attack on the thylacine. Although we do not know, we can at least infer that the struggle in which the thylacines perished in Australia and the dingo succeeded was one in which success came to the hardier rather than to the better armed and more aggressive creature. A struggle, in fact, much more like what occurs between rival nations in time of peace than between rival nations in time of war.

Even if we accept the German notion that they are a more highly endowed, more intelligent, more industrious, and more highly civilized people than the French or English or Russians, the zoological analogy which seems most pertinent could be found for their peaceful infiltration of Russia and France, of England and the English colonies, an infiltration that has been rudely arrested by the operations of war.

But Dr. Mitchell holds that there is a vital difference between men and animals, which renders null and void every attempt to justify human conduct by reference to the laws of the animal and vegetable kingdom. He believes, with Darwin, that, as the body of man has been evolved from the body of animals, so the intellectual, emotional, and moral faculties of man have been evolved from the qualities of animals. Yet he finds in man an element of profound difference, a soul, whose presence is indicated by "consciousness and a sense of freedom." He sets down his own theory of how the soul was evolved, but adds that no doctrine or proved fact of origin could obliterate the distinctions between man and beast. Man is no longer amenable to the laws of savage nature, but to a new code, the moral law.

Listen to the author's confession of faith:

> Writing as a hard-shell Darwinian evolutionist, a lover of the scalpel and microscope, and of patient, empirical observation, as one who dislikes all forms of supernaturalism, and who does not shrink from the implications even of the phrase that thought is a secretion of the brain as bile is a secretion of the liver, I assert as a biological fact that the moral law is as real and as external to man as the starry vault.
> It has no secure seat in any single man or in any single nation. It is the work of the blood and tears of long generations of men. It is not in man, inborn or innate, but is enshrined in his traditions, in his customs, in his literature and his religion. Its creation and sustenance are the crowning glory of man, and his consciousness of it puts him in a high place above the animal world. Men live and die, nations rise and fall, but the struggle of individual lives and of individual nations must be measured not by their immediate needs, but as they tend to the debasement or perfection of man's great achievement.

Dr. Mitchell agrees with Professor Dewey in tracing back to Kant the dreaming megalomania that has made German "Kultur" the enemy of the human race. It is on the principle, he says, that the worst is the corruption of the best. He calls Nietzsche "a terminal flower of the tree of idealistic thought, beautiful, poisonous, and sterile," adding that Bernard Shaw is "only Nietzsche grinning through a horse collar." Noble as Kant was, Dr. Mitchell believes he was profoundly wrong in declaring that the moral law resides in the individual.

The author also devotes a chapter to showing that there is no natural scientific basis for Germany's intense national and racial pride. Racially Germany is just as much a mixture of the three primal stocks as any other nation in Europe. The theory that the German Empire is the home of a special race, the Teutonic race, long-headed, tall, and blonde, has been the basis of a political campaign for pan-Teutonism. It still survives in the popular imagination and in the writings of such men as Treitschke, Nietzsche, and the Germanized Englishman, Houston Chamberlain, "probably the least reliable of all who have peddled so-called philosophy to the public." Dr. Mitchell refutes it with the aid of Ripley's "Races of Europe," and a map, showing that the long-headed Nordic or Teutonic race has its headquarters in Scandinavia, and that the German Empire is inhabited chiefly by the round-headed Alpine race, except along the northwestern edge.

He sums up the matter in these words:

> Even if the struggle for existence were the sole law that had shaped and trimmed the tree of life, it does not necessarily apply to the political communities of men, for these cohere not because of common descent, but because of bonds that are peculiar to the human race.

In the author's opinion it is the internal environment of ideas and ideals, rather than the racial stock, that differentiates one people from another; and in the case of Germany this "Kultur" has been vitiated by dangerous misreadings of science and philosophy. The book, at least, makes it clear that neither Darwin nor his scientific successors can fairly be cited as witnesses for the proposition that war is the great elevating force of nations.

JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES

Interesting Result of an Investigation Conducted by Professor H. A. Millis

THE JAPANESE PROBLEM IN THE UNITED STATES. By H. A. Millis. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

AT the request of missionaries in Japan, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America appointed a commission to investigate our relations with Japan, and Professor Millis of the University of Kansas was chosen by that commission to look into the American end of the problem, especially as regards the Japanese in California. This book is the result of his investigations.

There are about 73,000 Japanese in the United States, 55,000 of them in California, and more than one-half of the total are engaged in farming—mostly in raising berries, potatoes, beets, and other vegetables. The "Japanese problem" consists mainly in the hostility with which they are regarded by many Californians. Professor Millis has made a thorough study of all sides of the question in that State, and he presents his facts and conclusions dispassionately.

Officially, the immigration of Japanese laborers ended with the Presidential order of 1907. Mr. Millis finds that the Japanese Government has lived up to its one-sided agreement and that the number of Japanese in this country has remained practically at a standstill since that year. Since immigration has ceased wages have advanced, so that there is now very little difference between the pay of a Japanese and that of any other laborer.

The Japanese farmers are industrious, intelligent, sober, honest, and law-abiding, and they do a kind of work that few others are willing to do. Their economic value to California is undeniable, yet the opposition to them continues. For one thing, they have inherited the race prejudice originally aimed at the Chinese. So long as the immigration remained unchecked, however, the author says there was a real problem in the tendency toward "capitalistic agriculture, retarding the natural subdivision of the land"; but since the number of Japanese has been limited this danger is negligible.

Professor Millis therefore condemns the California alien land law of 1913 as unjust, impolitic, and unnecessary. That law, against which Mr. Bryan's mission of protest proved useless, forbids Japanese to own land or to lease it for more than three years.

An overwhelming majority of Americans, by no means confined to labor unions, are agreed that there should be careful restriction of Japanese immigration; yet to discriminate against this one nation is unjust and a possible cause of friction. Dr. Gulick, who was sent to do in Japan what Professor Millis has done in the United States, has suggested changing the general immigration law to meet the case, and the author accepts that plan, with modifications.

Believing that our immigration from certain parts of Europe is undesirably large—and likely to be still more so at the end of the present war—he suggests a Federal statute along the following lines:

> Amend the existing law so that, except in the case of Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, and Cuba, the number of immigrants admitted in any one year shall not exceed 5 per cent. of the total of those who had taken their "second papers" and the native born of one or both parents born in the given country, as recorded in the census of 1910.
> Provide, however, that the maximum number in no case shall be less than 1,000, in order that immigration from new countries shall not be unduly restricted.
> Only those immigrants should be admitted who come with a proper certificate, signed and numbered by a designated officer of the United States Government residing in the country from which they emigrate.
> Each one admitted should be registered, and any immigrant found unregistered in the United States should be liable to deportation.

Mr. Millis believes that this would limit the influx of Japanese sufficiently, and that after the passage of such a law all aliens should be given the same rights and privileges, irrespective of race. He would give the right of naturalization to the Japanese and Chinese, but admits that the situation in Hawaii would call for separate and careful treatment.

ADVENTURE AND DISCOVERY IN AFRICA

Three Explorers in Different Parts of the Dark Continent Tell of Their Experiences as Sportsmen and Scientists

STEWART EDWARD WHITE believes he has found the last virgin hunting ground in the inhabited part of the world, and this book is his diary of his expedition through it. The place is teeming with game. It is in Africa, and is as large as that region of British East Africa over which Colonel Roosevelt and many others have hunted, but until now it has never known the sound of a gun. Mr. White and R. J. Cuninghame spent the Summer of 1913 there, and the story of their encounters with lions, rhinos, buffaloes, elephants, and other big game will make many a sportsman eager to follow their trail.

This ultimate paradise for those who delight in the slaughter of wild animals is in German East Africa, between Lake Natron and Victoria Nyanza. That remote corner of the German protectorate, according to Mr. White, has never been penetrated either by German or by English sportsmen. It is most easily reached by way of Victoria Nyanza, with the aid of a lake steamer from Kisumu to Musoma, but White and Cuninghame tackled it by way of Nairobi southward through difficult mountain country, inhabited by unfriendly Masai and so infested with tsetse fly that fifty-nine donkeys died on the way.

But to the lover of sport and adventure it was worth all the trouble. Of the Bologonja Valley the author writes:

> I strolled over the fine green hills and reveled in the sight of game—black herds of wildebeeste, like bison in the park openings; topi everywhere, zebra, hartebeeste, Tommy, oribi, steinbuck, impalla, reedbuck, and others. Out of the lot I picked a kongoni at 237 yards, after missing one at 180, buck and doe oribi at fifty and 120 yards, and a wildebeest at 333 yards.
> Never have I seen anything like that game. It covered every hill, strolling in and out among the groves, feeding on the bottom lands, singly, or in groups. It did not matter in what direction I looked, there it was: as abundant one place as another. Nor did it matter how far I went, over how many hills I walked, how many wide prospects I examined, it was always the same.
> During my stay at the next two camps I looked over fifty square miles. One day I counted 4,628 head! And suddenly I realized again that in this beautiful, wide, populous country no sportsman's rifle had ever been fired. I moved among those hordes of unsophisticated beasts as a lord of Eden would have moved.

Like other Edens, this one has its undesirable citizens. A charge from a rhino is always in order. One day a big lion leaped to the top of a bank within four yards of the author. Before it could take the next spring it had to be stopped with a .405 bullet by a very much surprised sportsman. Fortunately the man proved the quicker of the two, but it took three shots to finish the beast. It stood three feet seven inches high at the shoulder, and was nine feet long.

Mr. White shot a good many lions on this trip, but his most amazing feat was that of tackling four at once and finishing them all. It makes one of the most stirring lion stories since Colonel Paterson's famous exploits at Tsavo.

> First a big lioness thrust her head up from a clump of bushes twenty yards away. Wounded, she charged, snarling with rage, but was stopped by three rapidly delivered shots in the nick of time. At the same instant a lion emerged from the thicket, followed by a second lioness. A shot at the lion caused it to leap into the air and bite savagely at the wound in its shoulder. The lioness did not stir. As White was swiftly preparing to take another shot at the wounded animal before it could charge, his gun bearer touched his elbow and breathed, "Look, master, see the very big one!" The author continues:
> I looked. From behind the screen of thin bush to the left sauntered the most magnificent wild lion I had ever seen. His yellow mane hung thick and long half way to his knees, and extended far along his back. His head was up, and his sleepy, wise face expressed dignified surprise.
> It was very bad sense to "take on" one lion before settling with the other, but the temptation was too great. I put a Springfield bullet in his shoulder, too. At the report of the rifle the lioness charged like a flash. Nobody had said or done a thing to her. She just wanted to prove that line about the female of the species." I suppose. Already I had two wounded lions on hand, but evidently it was necessary to acquire another.

In the next few moments all three beasts came at the hunter in their various ways. It was absolutely necessary to keep cool, and Mr. White says he was scared enough to do so. Taking each animal in turn, he fired nine cartridges from two different kinds of rifles as fast as his gun bearer could load them. Finally only the large male remained sitting on his haunches and staring around him, sixty yards away. In a spirit of bravado, and to test the theory that even a wounded lion can be bluffed if the man charges first, Mr. White then started to walk straight toward the animal. At first the king of beasts lost its nerve and retreated, then it charged so suddenly that the hunter was almost paralyzed by the surprise of it.

> This is, in my opinion, [he says,] the supreme moment in a hunter's life, the moment when, all preliminaries at an end, the lion makes his direct and deadly attack. The little unessentials are brushed aside. Only remains the big primitive idea to fill a man's mind—kill or be killed. . . . Excited in the usual sense of the word? No. But alive to the uttermost of all his faculties at once? Yes. That is why the moment is supreme. . . . I killed that lion with three shots, the last delivered at eight paces.

The travelers came out by way of Victoria Nyanza, and then went up into the forests of Mount Kenia to shoot an elephant. Here Mr. White had more thrills, stalking and being stalked, until he finally killed one of the animals that was close enough to seem like an animated skyscraper.

Big-game hunters will enjoy this book and envy its author. It is written with Mr. White's usual skill and dash, and is liberally illustrated with photographs.

ON STANLEY'S TRAIL

THROUGH CENTRAL AFRICA FROM COAST TO COAST. By James Barnes. Illustrated by Photographs by Cherry Kearton. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $4.

MANY changes have come in Africa since Stanley led his Emin Pasha relief expedition from coast to coast twenty-eight years ago, but it is still a man's-size task to follow his trail, especially through the 800 miles of gloomy forest at the headwaters of the Congo. James Barnes, the writer, and Cherry Kearton, the photographer, accomplished this feat a year or two ago. The object was to make moving pictures of wild animals in their native habitat, and in "Through Central Africa" we now have the lively story of the trip, with more than a hundred reproductions of Mr. Kearton's superb photographs.

Mr. Barnes tells of his experiences in informal style and with an ever-ready sense of humor. The expedition started from British East Africa, but first turned northward to the borders of Abyssinia, where Mr. Kearton got his finest animal pictures. Constructing "hide-ups" in which to conceal themselves with a moving-picture camera, the travelers waited patiently for weeks, gradually accumulating many wonderful films of giraffes, zebras, oryx, impalla, and other animals that came to the water holes to drink. At night they were serenaded by lions. Once a bad-tempered bachelor elephant went by, tearing up trees to relieve his feelings. Evidently life in that "little back room of Noah's ark" was not dull.

While walking out alone one day with only two cartridges in his rifle Mr. Barnes suddenly came upon three lions. One made a short rush toward him, and the others watched him in a way that he found embarrassing. He did not hurt them. Neither did he consider it wise to run. "All I wanted of those lions," he says, "was for them to go away, peaceably and quietly, and to live the rest of their lives in health and plenty." When they got ready they did so.

A curious picture caught by Mr. Kearton shows a herd of timid impalla peacefully grazing while a black-maned lion is bellowing in plain sight not a hundred yards away. The gazelles did not even raise their heads. Perhaps they knew that their swift feet could carry them out of danger, but, even so, the incident throws a new light on animal psychology.

On their way to the Belgian Congo the travelers passed through Uganda and called on the Kabaka, the nominal ruler, who does whatever his British adviser tells him to do. He is a "gentle-voiced young man of supremely good manner, with the diffident shyness of good breeding—a tall young Eton boy done in dark sepia."

By the time they had crossed to the Belgian side of the Semliki River the travelers were fairly in the wilds of Central Africa. One of their vain attempts to photograph elephants furnishes Mr. Barnes with material for a humorous page. They climbed into a tree with their camera, and the humor was furnished by myriads of ants, belligerent, never-say-die ants, that crept under their clothes and fixed sharp nippers into their flesh. Over every portion of their anatomy the ants swarmed:

> And bite, my aunt, didn't they bite! In the midst of it four or five young cow elephants emerged from the forest and placidly shuffled toward a little patch of bushes not thirty yards away. The heroism displayed by the photographer was worthy of a medal of the first class. With ants on his whiskers and ants on his nose and ants at every buttonhole, he stood up and started the aerosceope and did secure a few feet of film.

When the elephants disappeared in the bushes the Barnes-Kearton expedition hastily dropped to the ground and removed its clothes with all the swiftness of two boys arriving late at the old swimming hole.

Fun and moving pictures alike became few and far between after entering the dark forests of the Congo. It was a hard trip. A visit to the pigmies, the shooting of several elephants, the photographing of cannibal ladies with disks stuck through holes in their upper lips—these were a few of the diversions. The most exasperating difficulties were those encountered in descending the Aruwimi River to the Congo, and the worst of these were due to refractory native boatmen.

Mr. Barnes's narrative reveals the extent to which Belgian rule in the Congo State had fallen into decay. The natives treated the white travelers pretty much as they pleased, and there was no power to call them to account. The rubber traffic, once the most exacting monopoly in the world, had crumbled away. It has never paid, the author says, since Belgium took it over from the private company that had made it a scandal. Traffic on the upper river was given up several years ago, and now the war has cut the whole Congo region off from the world. It is passing through a period of anarchy, and its fate is in the balance.

The author met several natives who had known Stanley, and at Matadi he visited the grave of Stanley's trusted assistant, E. J. Glave. The expedition was on the way thirteen months, and the written and pictured story of its doings is full of interest.

A SCIENTIST IN AFRICA

ALONE IN THE SLEEPING-SICKNESS COUNTRY. By Felix Oswald. Illustrated. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Truebner & Co. $3.

DR. OSWALD went to British East Africa to study certain Miocene fossil deposits for the British Museum, but he found many things that were livelier than old bones. During two months spent in the steaming wilderness around Karungu, on the east shore of Victoria Nyanza, he was bitten by the tsetse fly, whose poison is killing off the natives by thousands with incurable sleeping sickness; he was driven half frantic by noisy insects, threatened by man-eating crocodiles, kept awake by hyenas and lions, and once stopped a leopard from leaping upon him by yelling and throwing his geological hammer at its head.

Once he saw what looked like a filmy waterspout coming up from the lake straight toward him, with a loud humming noise. It was a cloud of gadflies. To escape their vicious bites he had to throw himself on the ground until the menacing swarm had passed overhead. If he happened to drop a book in the grass the termites at once began plastering their earth tunnels against it, preparatory to devouring it.

One night Dr. Oswald was waked by the ghoulish howls of hyenas just outside his open tent, and one of the beasts was even stumbling over the tent ropes to get in at him. An electric torch and a revolver scared it away. Later the author had his revenge by stumbling squarely on top of a sleeping hyena in the wilderness, scaring it into swift flight. Like most revenges, however, it was dearly bought, for the odor of the animal clung to the learned doctor for the next three days.

All this time Dr. Oswald was living alone among the Kavirondo negroes, a tribe that still goes entirely naked. This peculiarity, by no means common among African tribes, never ceased to impress the author with a feeling that he was 3,000 years instead of only three weeks distant from London. He agrees with other travelers in testifying to the fine physique, good health, and exceptional morality of these unclothed natives.

Most of Dr. Oswald's pages are devoted to an inland journey to Metamala and the Kisii highlands, where two lone British officials keep order amid a half hostile tribe of blacks. His own adventures, humorous happenings among his thirty naked porters, observations of geological and botanical wonders—these make up the warp and woof of his narrative. Science in all its aspects is of perennial interest to the author, and kindred spirits will find much to please them in his book. A map and seventy good illustrations from photographs complete the volume.

SCANDINAVIA OF SCANDINAVIANS

SCANDINAVIA OF THE SCANDINAVIANS. By Henry Goddard Leach. Illustrated. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

VERY welcome to Americans ought to be Mr. Leach's practical little volume about the present-day life and people of the three Scandinavian kingdoms. In the process of amalgamating our immigrants and making good Americans of them all we have heretofore paid too little attention to that national life and character out of which they have come, of which they are the product. A wider knowledge of the influences which have molded them would surely make the task of amalgamation easier and enable the work to be done more sympathetically. But if heretofore we have been too prone to consider our immigrants as merely "aliens," one and all, there are signs of a growing interest in their past, a tendency to discriminate between and to study the separate groups and a desire to comprehend rather than sweepingly condemn their previous habitat and environment. Mr. Leach's book offers just such an understanding and sympathetic picture of the previous lives of many hundreds of thousands of our fellow-citizens as will help us to understand and appreciate them.

The volume has also an added and timely interest because of the important position into which circumstances have thrown these three neutral nations of the north during the European war. It is hardly possible to understand thoroughly the fears, the patience, the sympathies, the national feelings that have influenced them in their several attitudes toward the belligerents without such knowledge of the various phases of their life as Mr. Leach offers. Even to so everyday a matter as the Norwegian flag, which nowadays is seen flying in New York harbor oftener than any other national symbol except the British, the two chapters in which he tells of the traditions, the toils, and the achievements which lie behind that flaming banner give a background of interest and romance.

Mr. Leach, who is secretary of the American-Scandinavian Foundation and has gained his knowledge of Scandinavia by years of residence therein, begins his work with a comprehensive glance at his subject in its entirety, giving a brief review of their common history, setting forth their relations to one another and comparing and contrasting their characteristics. Afterward he takes up each kingdom separately and, after an outline of its history, passes in review the various phases of its present-day status—home life, education, literature, art, industrial developments, sports, scientific achievements, resources, characteristics.

In the section dealing with Denmark he devotes much attention to the development of the dairying business and the co-operative societies which together have given that little nation such remarkable prosperity. The struggle which has been going on for some time in Norway between the adherents of those who would retain Norwego-Danish as the national language and those who would have it superseded by the developed country speech called "Landsmaal," or "New Norse," fills an interesting chapter. The extent to which Norway is harnessing her numberless waterfalls and the consequent industrial development gives a glimpse of the national energy and initiative. In the same chapter is an account of Dr. Eyde and of his process for extracting nitrogen from the air. The Swede, says Mr. Leach, "is inherently conservative, but he has also a deep love of progress, and in this combination the author finds explanation of much in his history and present achievements and conditions. The reasons for Sweden's fear of Russia and of her occasional leanings toward Germany in the present conflict are made clear. The strides which feminism has made are described and their causes explained. There are chapters on Strindberg and Lagerlof, art and architecture, and one on sport as "a national expression of temperament." The mining industry, the development of electricity and its use as a railroad motive power are also among the phases of life and industry that receive attention. Comparing the Swedes, Norwegians, and Danes Mr. Leach writes:

> The Swede is conservative, courtly, extravagant, magnanimous, a lover of nature and her image in art. The Dane is rational, free and easy, saving, indifferent to outward appearance, genial, and humorous, a student of social problems, a gifted conversationalist whose chief amusement is his study of his fellow-men. With the Norwegian the idea is more important than the fact. The Norwegian is the extreme northern type, severely simple in his physical needs, vigorously independent, luxuriating in the wealth of his dreams.

AT THE FRONT IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM

Incidents in the Campaign of 1914 Described by a War Correspondent—Paris Less Than a Year Ago—Recent Books on European Conflict

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1914 IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM. By G. H. Perris. With Maps and Plans by F. F. Perris and Photographs by the Author. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $1.50.

As special correspondent of The London Chronicle, Mr. Perris has seen about all that any newspaper man has been allowed to see of the war in France and Belgium. In the present volume of nearly 400 pages he has attempted a military history of the fighting in those countries to the close of 1914, supplemented by chapters of his newspaper correspondence from the battlefields of the Marne, the Aisne, and Flanders. The shadow of the censor is upon his pages, of course, and many of them are lacking in human interest; but his tactical studies of army movements are exceptionally complete in analytical detail.

Toward the end of Mr. Perris's book is one striking example of the sort of human interest that is systematically excluded from the official communiqués. On the 1st of October the French bulletin announced:

> Between the Oise and the Aisne the enemy has vigorously attacked Tracy-le-Mont, but has been repulsed with heavy loss.

By chance the world has a living human account of one phase of what lay behind that cold official statement. It is the narrative of a young stretcher-bearer, who, with two regimental doctors, was called to the aid of the German and French wounded who had taken refuge in the large farm of Quesnevières, lying between the lines. The Germans probably thought the farmhouse sheltered French artillery, for they were deliberately bombarding it. At imminent peril of their lives the trio reached the place amid a rain of shells and rifle bullets. In the dooryard a dog was baying mournfully and running ceaselessly around the dead body of his master.

They entered the kitchen and found three rooms full of wounded, with a French doctor and nurses, and several German Red Cross workers, all tending both nationalities with equal solicitude. The stretcher-bearer's narrative continues:

> A soldier asks for a drink; as he rises with hand stretched out for a glass of water, a bullet comes through the window and strikes him full in the heart. The poor fellow sinks without a sigh. Most of the wounded are taken away in a lull of the combat. Drs. A. and T. remain with the last of them, and with the Germans, who help them with real courage. Firing recommences, more violent than ever. The shells whistle ceaselessly. An adjutant, terribly wounded, begs to be put into the cart, which seems to him a guarantee that he will be among the next removed. Scarcely is he laid there when shrapnel bursts over him, killing him.
> I watched the doctors, indifferent to the approaching danger, tending the wounded. Most of the living rooms of the farm are now in ruins. In the sheds the cows low piteously.
> A wounded man in the kitchen calls me. Struck by a ball in the chest, the poor fellow pants for breath. He is supporting himself by one arm, which slips on the bloody straw. With the other hand he feels in his overcoat pocket, which is glued up with congealed blood, for a letter which he hands to me, his eyes full of tears.
> "It will soon be over," he says, "perhaps for both of us. But if you should escape, look, here's a letter."
> He stopped. A shell passed, burying itself in the road twenty yards away. The lad looked at me, smiling sadly through his tears. I take the letter. "My sweetheart," he murmurs. And I see in his blood-stained fingers a little lock of black hair which he presses tenderly to his lips.
> Raising my eyes to the ceiling, I see the plaster break into a huge star, and through the gaping hole the end of a great shell appears. The ceiling sinks funnel-wise at the same moment the roof cracks, and the shell explodes. Then all is dark. * * * Presently I come to myself, half suffocated with dust and the fumes of dynamite. The house is riven from top to bottom, and we can see the calm blue sky through the broken roof. Nearly all of us are bleeding. The poor lover is dead, disfigured.
> Shells have struck the house on two sides. In a part that is still standing a Sergeant, mortally wounded, with indifferent gaze watches the ceiling cracking and sinking above him.

They manage to get to the cellar. From a dark corner comes a sob, and a woman's voice rises out of the shadow: "All my own children are dead and my husband was killed up there in the yard." It was the farmer's wife. Children, husband, goods, she had lost everything. Above, on the grass before the door, the dog was still baying, heartbroken, over the bleeding body of his master.

Back of the dry military details of Mr. Perris's book lie countless scenes like this, but they must be supplied by imagination, for they are seldom in his pages. Of well marshaled facts, however, there is an abundance. The whole strategic movement that won the battle of the Marne is traced; the five German armies, the five French armies, the one British, how each manoeuvred and what turned the tide—these you will find here. The winning idea in Joffre's tactics is described as "a wave-like repetition of one manoeuvre—combined flank and frontal assault." The fighting in Belgium is analyzed with similar care.

One notes with surprise that Mr. Perris places the German losses during the three weeks' battle of Ypres at only 120,000. Will Irwin's recent book named a possible figure of 375,000. The discrepancy indicates how thick the veil of secrecy still is.

The author quotes Edgar Crammond's estimate of the cost of the first twelve months of the war, which was laid before the Royal Statistical Society. The direct and indirect cost to the six chief nations amounted to $45,735,000,000. The larger share of that colossal loss has fallen on the Allies, but the vast superiority of their resources, it is believed, will enable them to continue the war longer than the Germans, and recuperate more quickly when it is over.

This is one of those serious and carefully written volumes to which the future historian is likely to turn with confidence.

PARIS IN HERRICK DAYS

PARIS IN HERRICK DAYS. By Elizabeth Dryden. Paris: Dorbon-Aîne, 19 Boulevard Haussmann.

Elizabeth Dryden of Baltimore was one of the few American women authors and journalists who remained in Paris throughout the exciting days, after the Government had withdrawn to Bordeaux, when Mr. Herrick, our Ambassador, was idolized by the Parisians for his determination to stay whatever happened. In this book she depicts the city's social life during that period. Her method is the typically feminine one of innumerable little sketches and glimpses, thrown together pellmell, with all the inconsequence of a vivacious woman's gossip.

In Miss Dryden's pages one gets glimpses of everybody of note that she met, from Mr. Herrick and General Galliéni to the youngest American newspaper correspondent. There go Mr. Kirby and Gelett Burgess, and yonder comes Dr. Bayard Hale. Here is Mrs. Edith Wharton, "in a becoming checked suit, with a sable scarf thrown around her shoulders." What is she doing? Selling the knit goods made by the women of her ouvroir! And there stands the author, with other "impressionable young women, glued to the sidewalk by the sight of a regiment of Royal Scots in full uniform, as they "swagger down the middle of the street, with their thirty yards of kilt a-swinging, and their hips a-springing out below their tightly buckled belts."

After the battle of the Marne Miss Dryden went out to the region over which the fight had raged, and from the little village of Béton-Bazoches she brought back the pretty story of Riri. Riri is the 4-year-old baby boy who saved the village by touching the hearts of the German soldiers. When they entered the house for food, the leader took hold of Riri's little hand, and the child held up the other to him trustfully, saying, "You are not going to cut off my hands, are you, monsieur?" The soldier looked away—perhaps he could not trust his voice to answer—but when Riri repeated his question the man struck himself on the breast and said: "We are not all beasts! I myself have a little boy not as large as he. Perhaps I shall never see him again." The story is too long to tell here, but in the end the Germans left in the direction of Berlin without firing the fuses that had been laid to burn the town, and Miss Dryden believes it was because the officer had met Riri.

A pleasant, gossipy, sentimental, impressionistic book it is, with queer little signs here and there that its English was set into type by French hands, and with a fine portrait of Mr. Herrick stamped on its heavy paper cover.

THE WAR AND ITS ISSUES

THE WAR AND ITS ISSUES: AN ATTEMPT AT A CHRISTIAN JUDGMENT. By John Oman, M. A. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

This little volume, issued by the Cambridge University Press, is the attempt of a cultured thinker to square his religious principles with the issues of the present war. As a disciple of Him who said, "Resist not evil," and yet as an Englishman who objects to becoming a vassal of German militarism, Mr. Oman naturally has a hard time coming to any very definite conclusion.

Happily his fine, sensitive character, aided by his British sense of right, is more successful in dealing with the moral issues, to which he devotes the second half of his book. He is by no means blind to the social wrongs of the existing system in England, and he says very definitely that a victory will do England no good if it is regarded merely as a commercial transaction for capturing German markets. He continues:

> The question for us—and perhaps it carries with it most other questions—is whether this war is to cut off one large more of slavery from the base of society that it may be settled more solidly on the brotherly recognition of rights and duties. * * * Nothing less is required than a change of worship which expresses itself in esteeming men above means and in having a single eye to duty undistracted by gain. Thus only can we overcome the idolatry which enslaves us at home and embroils us abroad.

Mr. Oman condemns the policy of "preparedness" when it prepares a country for war in a way that spells bankruptcy in peace, adding: "If that type of militarism was wrong for Germany, it is wrong for us." And on the same score he condemns compulsory military service. Hear him:

> Conscription is dead sea fruit which we will not pluck, because it inevitably leads to militarism, at least if it succeed. A liberty at the mercy of militarism is not worth defending. To adopt the German system would be a crime. We should have done our best to rivet the present military burden upon the necks of all European nations till only an overwhelming calamity could deliver us, and to extend it to Asia and to train the hordes that would make it futile.

Afterward, however, the author qualifies this to the extent of remarking that "compulsion is alcohol, possibly a fillip to help round a hard corner, but dangerous even for that." On the whole the spirit of his book is much finer than its substance.

GERMAN CULTURE

GERMAN CULTURE, PAST AND PRESENT. By E. Belfort Bax. New York: McBride, Nast & Co. $1.25.

When Columbus was discovering America, robber knights still infested all the trade routes of Germany, living wholly by plunder; and their occupation was still considered honorable. Robber barons were still waging private war for loot, and no disgrace attached to their occupation. Conditions in the Church were as bad as those in the State. After the Puritans had found freedom in New England, the German principalities still had to go through the Thirty Years' War, which laid the whole Renaissance structure of their social life in ruins. In these typical glimpses of the past we have a key to the barbarity in modern German ideals of warfare.

Such is the tenor of "German Culture, Past and Present," in which Mr. Bax, an English Socialist and historian, tells the story of German social and intellectual life from the close of the Middle Ages to the present time, adding a spicy sketch of Prussian militarism for good measure. One quickly discovers that dullness is not one of this author's faults. He writes in a breezy, popular fashion, and speaks largely in terms of human interest.

The largest share of space is given to picturing German society in the first half of the sixteenth century, when the feudal system and the Holy Roman Empire were breaking up, and when Luther's religious reforms were only one phase of a profound revolution. The rise of the merchant and the free city, the abolishing of private warfare, the revolt against ecclesiastical abuses, the futile attempt of the peasants to escape from the tyranny of the privileged classes—these are Mr. Bax's main themes.

Luther's act in taking sides against the common people in the Peasants' War calls down Mr. Bax's bitter criticism, as does the similar attitude of "Luther's jackal, the 'gentle' Melanchthon," who "specially signalized himself by urging on the feudal barons with Scriptural arguments to the blood-sucking and oppression of their villeins."

The appalling desitution and suffering of the people after that uprising, says the author, helped to rivet the peasant's chains and set back the dial of civilization in Germany. But far worse in this respect was the Thirty Years' War, which left a chaos out of which rose the half Slavic power of Prussia, "the robber State of Europe par excellence." On the theme of modern German militarism, from Frederick the Great to Bismarck and William II., Mr. Bax "lets himself go" with unbridled bitterness. His opinion of one of the Kaiser's laws is as follows:

> The law of lèse majesté, by which all criticism of the despotic head of the State or his actions is made a heinous criminal offense, to which severe penalties are attached, is not too much to say is a law which brands the ruler who accepts it as a coward and a cur, and the Legislature which passes it as a house not of representative citizens, or even subjects, for that matter, but of representative slaves.

Though not free from bias and passion, this book is decidedly readable, and, from the viewpoint of democracy, its judgments of the larger issues of history are sound.

A WOMAN'S HEART

A WOMAN'S HEART. By Daisy Vall. New York: The Knickerbocker Press.

This slender volume of verse contains, as its title might suggest, many delicate intimacies. Throughout feminine throughout, it runs a pretty gamut of emotions, from love and spontaneous joy in mere living to resentment and disappointment. The verses which fall under the latter classification show at times too deep a tinge of bitterness and cynicism, but they are more than balanced by songs of brighter mood, as well as those of deeper and more earnest emotion. There is no very elaborate technique involved in Mrs. Converse's singing, but her lyrics are direct, simple, and for the most part, refreshing.

John Quincy Adams

Volume III. has been published of "The Writings of John Quincy Adams"; it covers the period running from Oct. 13, 1801, up to Dec. 15, 1810. Included in the correspondence the volume contains are letters written at Washington while Mr. Adams was a member of the Senate and dispatches and letters written from St. Petersburg while he was serving as the American Minister to Russia. (Macmillan Company. $3.)

A B C of Good Form

A treatise on etiquette, written by Anne Seymour, appears in a little volume entitled "A B C of Good Form," which is published as one of Harper's A B C Series. It is not an exhaustive work; but it contains a great deal of useful information and advice with respect to problems that confront those who mingle in society. (Harper & Bros. 50 cents.)

FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

PLAYS FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN. Edited by Anna M. Lutkenhaus. Introduction by Margaret Knox. New York: The Century Company. $1.35.

This interesting and very practical book tells what has been done in Public School 15, Borough of Manhattan, New York City, in the way of making the native dramatic instinct of children serve them in the learning of their lessons and the broadening and enriching of their minds and souls. Miss Lutkenhaus, the editor, is the director of the Dramatic Club, and Miss Knox is the Principal of the school. The wide use of dramatics in the school curriculum for which the latter pleads would amount, if it were generally adopted, almost to a revolution in teaching methods. But she insists strongly upon its value and writes most interestingly in her ten-page introduction of the beneficent results which she has seen in its use in the school of which she is Principal. She begins using the dramatic method, by which the children act their lessons, with the littlest children learning to read, and she carries it through all the grades in the study of geography, grammar, history, composition. She thinks that the value of the method in formal instruction "cannot be overestimated"; that it trains the children better than can be done in any other way in "habits of efficiency, economy, unselfishness, ingenuity"; that it quickens the intellect and helps to broaden and develop character.

The volume contains a score of plays, pageants and pantomime stories selected from those that have been used in Public School 15, most of them written by the students as part of their work in geography, history, and English composition, and prepared by them under the supervision of Miss Lutkenhaus. Among them are: "Through the Looking Glass," "Town Meeting in Botetourt, Virginia, 1860," "A Nature Play in a City School," "A Geographical Squabble," "A Grammar Play," "Four Queens of England," "The Birds' Story of the Trees." There are also programs, filling a dozen pages, for the celebration by school children of special days throughout the year.

IRVING'S MEXICO

COURTESIES between rivals in literature may be scarce; when they occur they afford good material for the type of anecdote one delights to ponder over. There are few instances of the kind better worth recalling than the sudden rivalry that sprang up between PRESCOTT and WASHINGTON IRVING regarding Mexico, culminating in the latter's graceful withdrawal from the authorship of the projected history of that pre-eminently picturesque country. The recent discovery of a fragment of the manuscript of IRVING'S "History of Mexico" revives the story in the August number of The Bookman, and at the same time leads us to wonder whether the delightful courtesy shown by the elder to the younger historian did not rob us of a literary masterpiece that is scarcely equaled by PRESCOTT'S deservedly famous "Conquest of Mexico." It appears, from a private letter, reproduced in The Bookman, that the story of Mexico was, with IRVING, "a favorite subject which had delighted my imagination ever since I was a boy." He planned writing it "as the pendant" to his "Columbus," and when, in deference to PRESCOTT'S claim, he gave up the project after collecting considerable material for its prosecution, he deliberately abandoned an undertaking that promised well financially at a time when he was in severe straits for money. This is the interesting personal side of the incident; the rescued fragment of the unwritten history suggests what we have lost in the way of dramatic narrative. Here, for instance, is a portion of the introductory chapter:

> At the time when the Kingdom of Mexico was about to be invaded by strangers and the downfall of the throne of its Indian monarchs was at hand, strange portents were seen in the heavens and the earth, but none which surpasses the following, attested by too many Spanish historians of gravity and veracity to be for a moment doubted.
> There lived near the foot of the mountains which encircle the great plains of Mexico an Indian of the name of Itztupulcan. He was a simple and virtuous man, his drink was the water of the brook, and his food the maize of his fields and the fruit of his groves.
> He had toiled one day in his fields, and during the noontide heat reposed himself under the shade of a palm tree by the side of a fountain. Scarcely had he fallen asleep when he was awakened by a rushing sound in the air and, looking up, beheld a huge eagle hovering over him. The enormous bird swooped down and, seizing him in his talons, but without doing him injury, bore him aloft far above the tops of the trees, until his little hut and grove and field of maize diminished to a mere speck in the lost landscape, &c.

That is hardly the method employed by the average historian who narrates the events that mark the evolution of a nation. In the hands of IRVING, however, one delights to imagine its dramatic possibilities. He acknowledges, in his letter on the subject, that his method would have been different from that adopted by PRESCOTT. He would not have had any "preliminary dissertation on the history, civilization, and so forth, of the natives." All that would have come before the reader in the dramatic sequence of events in which the story of the conquest would be told. "In this way," IRVING argues, "the reader, like the conquerors, would have become gradually acquainted with Mexico and the Mexicans; and by the time the conquest was achieved he would have been familiar with the country without having been detained by long dissertations, so repulsive to the more indolent class of readers." The method indictated is distinct enough from PRESCOTT'S to have left room for the publication of both histories of Mexico. One feels that the professional courtesy of the author of the Knickerbocker History squandered a delightful masterpiece of literature.

THAT Mr. ROBERT FROST'S volume of poems, "North of Boston," made its first appearance under the imprint of an English instead of an American publisher has disturbed some of our reviewers and revived the old complaint that we are unappreciative of true excellence when it knocks at the door of our native literature. Mr. FROST'S poems are pre-eminently worth while, they are thoroughly original in theme and treatment, they are genuinely interpretative of certain phases of American life—why, then, were they published first in England? The query has suggested dire possibilities by way of answer. But now Mr. FROST himself comes to the rescue with an explanation the simplicity of which should allay at once any international jealousies or suspicions. Writing to his present American publishers he tells them that he happened to be in England when the idea came to him of collecting his poetry manuscripts into a volume. He did this, and, with the manuscript in his pocket, went up to London and left it with a publisher, who promptly accepted it. He declares, moreover, that he "never offered a book to an American publisher, and didn't cross the water seeking a British publisher." The thing "just happened." And, so, there is not "another case of American inappreciation" to record.

THE death of Sir JAMES A. H. MURRAY will not prevent the completion of the "New English Dictionary," the great work upon which he has been engaged as editor for the last twenty-seven years. Happily the labors of the lexicographer, although more arduous today, are better organized than they were in the days of JOHNSON. The death of the latter before his task was finished would have robbed posterity of the completed results of his researches in philology. The work of Sir JAMES, however, will continue until the final page of his dictionary is reached. The two editors who preceded him, HERBERT COLERIDGE and Dr. FURNIVALL, accomplished comparatively little, and it looked as if, under their management, the dictionary would be abandoned before the publication of its first volume. Sir JAMES MURRAY'S genius for organization insured the success of the enterprise. He had "more than 1,500 assistants whose duty it was to read books, and thirty assistant editors who sorted out the rough material. Every English book published before 1500 A. D. was read, and every book of importance since then." The result was that the work grew more rapidly than the most sanguine had expected. Nine volumes have been published; the tenth and final volume, containing the letters T to Z, remaining incomplete. Its publication will probably not be long delayed.

THE August number of THE NEW YORK TIMES CURRENT HISTORY is notable for the long list of articles on the war from contributors enjoying an international reputation. Thus, we have Colonel ROOSEVELT writing on American Preparedness; CHARLES W. ELIOT on Eleven Months of the European Conflict; Sir JOHN FRENCH'S story of the Battles in the West; COMPTON MACKENZIE on Gallipoli's Shambles; MAURICE MAETERLINCK on Two Devoted Nations; Sir WALTER RALEIGH on Dr. Conybeare's Recantation; HUDSON MAXIM on Explosives; "I am the Gravest Danger," by GEORGE BERNARD SHAW; Prime Minister ASQUITH on the Power of the Purse; Field Marshal Earl KITCHENER on New Recruiting in Britain; GERTRUDE ATHERTON on a Threatened Despotism of Spirit; PIERRE LOTI on Rheims Cathedral; "The English Falsehood," by SVEN HEDIN; "Depression—Commonsense and the Situation," by ARNOLD BENNETT; "Note on the Principle of Nationality," by JOHN GALSWORTHY; "Evviva l'Italia," by WILLIAM ARCHER; Major LEONARD DARWIN on the War and Racial Progress, &c. Besides these special contributions there are a number of articles describing the first year of the war from different points of view.

"MARIE HAY"

New York Times Review of Books:

THERE is a good deal of speculation as to the effect of the war upon writers of fiction that have had any sort of connection with it; nursing, fighting, corresponding, engaged in relief work, or merely sitting back somewhere in Europe and philosophizing. Of all the women writers of Europe at least it seems to me that "Marie Hay" is having the most interesting experience and should show the most pronounced effects of the war in her work hereafter. A Scotchwoman by birth and married to Baron von Hindenburg, (a nephew of the General,) who was First Secretary of the German Embassy in Rome from the beginning of the war until Bülow demanded his passports, she has had (both in Germany and Italy) an opportunity so peculiar among writers of fiction to observe the inner workings of diplomacy and the real personalities of the group of men who for good or ill must loom in history, that she cannot look upon life and human nature with quite the same eyes as in the good old days before the war. Of course diplomatic secrets are sacred, and in Germany one does not put the eminent living into fiction no matter how great one's admiration may be. This is a pity, for few women have combined such brilliant opportunities with so keen a brain and so broad a vision. But, after all, facts don't matter. The effect that interests all lovers of good literature is the probable modernizing of a faculty hitherto too interested in the past to take a creative interest in the present. "A German Pompadour," "The Winter Queen," "Mas' niello" are among the greatest historical novels ever written, but in spite of a style as lively as it is distinguished, these books have had little vogue in this country for the simple reason that "the past" having had a long day—following our war with Spain—is temporarily out of fashion. It is hardly credible that a mind like Marie Hay's, doubly steeped in the present as it has been through so many personal contacts in this war—dating from that week before the declaration whose secret history for years to come will continue to inspire guessing and argument—will be able to turn its imaginative faculty backward when, able to draw breath once more, she sits down to her own work. But as she never would be able to write a work of any period that was not good history also, I cannot imagine anything more grateful than a novel covering certain phases of modern Europe from her pen.

FROM COLONIAL DAYS TO PRESIDENT WILSON

Four Principal Factors in the Growth of the Nation as Described in "The Riverside History of the United States"

BEGINNINGS OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. By Carl L. Becker. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.75.

UNION AND DEMOCRACY. By Allen Johnson. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.75.

EXPANSION AND CONFLICT. By William E. Dodd. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.75.

THE NEW NATION. By Frederic L. Paxson. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.75.

UNDER the general title of "The Riverside History of the United States" the four volumes named above constitute a new and comprehensive account of the nation's growth from its earliest beginnings to the days of President Wilson. The four authors have worked on a concerted plan under the editorship of Professor William E. Dodd of the University of Chicago, and have produced a well-proportioned history of "the forces, influences, and masterful personalities which have made the country what it is." The set is intended for advanced college classes and for professional and business men who desire the whole story in small compass.

In these days of many histories a new work of this kind must first advance, give the countersign, and show a valid reason for being. Surprising as it may seem, this one easily passes the test.

Since the days when John Fiske was in his prime there have appeared at least a dozen exhaustive "source" histories, such as the works of McMaster, Rhodes, Schouler, Henry Adams, Hart, Ropes, Avery, Channing, and Trevelyan, besides scores of monographs and biographies, many of which have changed the outlook on certain phases of our history. It has been the aim of the present authors to summarize this mass of new interpretation, and to bring it to date in four 16mo volumes. They have done it with a thoroughness and a freshness of treatment that entitle the work to a place even on crowded shelves.

Carl Lotus Becker, Professor of European History in the University of Kansas, has done especially brilliant work in "Beginnings of the American People." To him our colonies were mere fragments of ancient Europe, so he has gone back to the Middle Ages to trace the economic currents that led to the discovery of America. We are here, he says, because of the spices and gold of the Orient. Behind the impenetrable barrier of the Moslem Levant the merchants of Europe knew there was a rich India, whence a small stream of coveted wares trickled through, and it was this golden lure that provided ships for the idealist, Columbus, when he proposed to find the Indies by sailing boldly into the west.

While the authors of this series are not slavish adherents to the economic view of history, they are pretty faithful to it. Professor Becker even hitches the Puritans to it. The Protestant Reformation, he holds, was the spiritual side of a moneyed middle-class insurgence, which has brought about our modern institutions. Hear him for a moment:

> There was no place for the bourgeois when he began to appear in feudal-ecclesiastical Europe. The peasant to obey and serve; the noble to fight and rule; the priest to instruct and pray—these, all in their different ways respected and respectable careers, completed the sum of God's purpose in arranging the occupations of men. Yet into this trinity the bourgeois had intruded his unwelcome presence.
> The secret of his rise was the skill of his hand to fashion material things and his practical intelligence to care for them. Neither personal service nor personal prowess was the source of his power. Untouched by the principle of homage or of noblesse oblige, he commanded, or was himself commanded, through the medium of material values. He put money in his purse because it was the measure of his independence, the symbol of his worth; and he kept it there, guarding it as the priest guarded his faith or the noble his honor.

Mr. Becker goes on to show how the bourgeois, separated from the world, became interested in lay religious services, and in time espoused the Protestant theory of the rights of reason and individual conscience, which expressed the middle-class state of mind:

> Conscious of a worth which society ignored, he transformed his qualities into virtues, and erected his virtues into social standards of value.

The Puritan, the quintessence of Protestantism, came to New England and gave a lasting impress to the institutions of the United States. He came for religious liberty, but he came also because there was a strong economic pressure behind him. The Virginia planters came frankly to seek their fortunes. Many other creeds and nationalities arrived to complicate the problem of fusion into a nation. Professor Becker traces each of these, closing with the first impulse toward union—the war for independence. To read his luminous little volume is to get a fresh view of our national beginnings.

The formation and adoption of the Constitution is the main theme of the second volume, "Union and Democracy," by Allen Johnson, Professor of American History in Yale University. More interesting, however, is his secondary theme, the rise of the West, with its new democracy. The story of the migration across the Alleghanies is told. As early as 1824 the West had become a power to be reckoned with, as the politicians perceived with a jolt when Jackson almost won the Presidency in that year.

Professor Johnson pays a just tribute to the part played by Chief Justice Marshall in shaping the destinies of the new republic. The irrepressible upthrust of democratic ideals, first under Jefferson and later under Jackson, gets adequate treatment. A valuable feature of this volume, as of the others, is found in numerous black-and-white maps or diagrams illustrating the distribution of party power and the like. These original maps tell at a glance what would otherwise have to be told in many pages of dry facts and figures.

Professor Dodd, the editor, treats the period from Jackson to the close of the civil war in the volume called "Expansion and Conflict." A right readable and excellent book it is, too, covering all the chief social, economic, political, and personal forces of that period. The war gets less space than the manners, ideas, wages, and private life of the common people, for which McMaster's work is an inexhaustible mine.

The heart of Professor Dodd's main theme is found in his study of the economic changes between 1830 and 1860, wherein lay the root of the civil war. In that period the North developed the great "mill belt," stretching from New England and New York to Chicago, and employing 4,000,000 operatives. The South developed the "black belt," from Virginia to the Rio Grande, increasing its slaves from 2,000,000 to 4,000,000; but the profits from cotton and tobacco were far below those of the mills and shops of the North. The investments of the Southerners were a billion more than those of the East, yet their income was only one-third as great. The race for economic supremacy was already lost to the South, yet it still held on in a large share of political power. Thus the war was at bottom a vain struggle to stop the oncoming era of "big business" and the shifting of economic empire.

To Professor Paxson of the University of Wisconsin has fallen the difficult task of summarizing the events of our own time. The civil war, he asserts, did not save the Union except by changing its identity. Industrial progress continued throughout the war with unabated speed, bringing great corporations and their problems. The author steps warily among the live wires of current issues, forced to be content with a bald statement of facts on points still bristling with latent sparks.

The only thing he ventures to criticise adversely in Roosevelt's Administration is the way Panama was seized. Most of his space is given to the political and business reforms with which the air has long resounded, and most of which, including the Roosevelt policies, he traces back to the despised Populists. The "muck-rakers" get a chapter. The book is a handy summary of the history of recent years.

This whole series is written with almost the unity of a single mind, and it has enough distinctive qualities to give it its own place in the sun. Each volume contains good bibliographical notes and useful map-diagrams. The set is neatly bound in flexible leather and comes in a box.

BRAMBLE-BEES AND OTHERS

BRAMBLE-BEES AND OTHERS. By J. Henri Fabre. Translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos, Fellow of the Zoological Society of London. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.

THIS is the second volume on wild bees which M. Fabre has given to the public, the first volume, entitled "Macon-Bees," having been published in the Fall of 1914; it contains curious information concerning half a dozen sorts of bees which dwell in the normally quiet part of France where the great naturalist lives and studies the insect world. Like everything else that has come from its author's gifted pen it is a charming work and fully upholds M. Fabre's reputation as a popular writer; it seems to be the world's judgment that there are no nature-books comparable with his—no authors who are his equals in the presentation of scientific facts to unscientific readers.

There is a brief autobiographical paragraph in M. Fabre's book which suggests the explanation of the success of his attempt to understand the insect world and of his power to entertain his readers with his narratives of natural facts. Discussing the matter of permutations of sex he remarks:

> Leading a retired life in the solitude of a village, having quite enough to do with patiently and obscurely plowing my humble furrow, I know little about modern scientific views. In my young days I had a passionate longing for books and found it difficult to procure them; today, when I could almost have them if I wanted, I am ceasing to wish for them. It is what usually happens as life goes on. I do not, therefore, know what may have been done in this direction whither this study of the sexes has led us. If I am stating propositions that are really new, or at least more comprehensive than the propositions already known, my words will perhaps sound heretical. No matter; as a simple translator of facts, I do not hesitate to make my statement, being fully persuaded that time will turn my heresy into orthodoxy.

A student of nature, rather than of books, M. Fabre knows his insects because he has lived with them, experimented with them, played with them; his essays are delightful because they are modest, simple recitals of things he has seen with his own eyes. In this bee book he gives us the results of years of patient observation and ingenious experimentation; shows us how bees are made, what they are like, and how they live.

The most interesting chapters in the book are those relating to the Halicti, honey makers, which are generally longer and slighter than the bees of the hives. Some of these bees make the galleries in which their offsprings are born in the gravel and clay walks of M. Fabre's garden. Beginning in April, they drill down into the ground to depths running from eight to twelve inches and construct little cells in which they lay their eggs and deposit small balls of food for the nourishment of their young when they shall have been born. More food is supplied during the period in which the grubs are being transformed into pupae and then the time comes when the mother bee, conscious she has done her full duty, closes the cells, puts a clay stopper into the outside door, and flies away. Then, if everything goes well, in course of time a new lot of bees will dig their way out into the world and go about among the blossoms of the garden and adjacent country.

But the mothers' works are often all in vain because miserable little gnats get into the galleries and lay their eggs in the cells, the result in each case being starvation for the proper inmates of the cells and a large increase in the gnat population of M. Fabre's garden. This is, of course, only a brief summary of the story the naturalist tells of the Halicti and their parasites; the full story contains details of absorbing interest which fill the reader with wonder.

Other chapters in the book which are notably entertaining are those which deal with the Cotton-Bees, the Resin-Bees, and the Leaf-Cutters.

Stock Exchange in 1914 Crisis

A narrative of great national interest is presented by H. G. S. Noble, President of the New York Stock Exchange, in a pamphlet entitled "The New York Stock Exchange in the Crisis of 1914"; it contains an authoritative account of the conduct of the Exchange during the period running from July 30, 1914, up to Nov. 28 of the same year. Mr. Noble is justly proud of the record of the Exchange for the four months following the outbreak of the war, and those who read his pamphlet with open minds will inevitably reach the conclusion that the Exchange rendered in that critical time a most important service to the American people. VARYING THEMES IN CURRENT FICTION

Mrs. Rinehart Tries "Something Different" in "K" —Typical Summer Reading in Miss Dalrymple's New Story—Books From Other Novelists

K. By Mary Roberts Rinehart. Illustrated. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.35.

THE dominant sentiment in one's mind upon finishing "K" is wonder as to why Mrs. Rinehart has cast aside her first form of expression, the novel of mystery and detection of crime. She has an unusual gift for the working out of a complicated plot, the invention of incident, the close weaving together of happenings that evolve logically from the situations and from one another. She deserves a place in the very first rank of the many American novelists who have developed this class of fiction to a high degree of perfection. Her first novels won for her instant success and a huge army of delighted readers. Why, then, has she deserted that form of fictional art, at which she proved herself so adept, and taken up another form in which her work is not nearly so clever? Did she feel the need of letting lie fallow for a while those fields of the imagination which yield the complicated plot, the mysterious crime, the detective feat, the swift passing of events? In that case it was, of course, the part of wisdom to lessen for a time the demand upon her inventive powers. But why not have given them a complete rest in order that they might recover the sooner? Or was she, perhaps, moved by that mild contempt, most undeserved, which so many fiction writers feel for the novel of plot and incident, of mystery, adventure, solution of criminal problems? For they are prone to think, the people who can write these novels surpassingly well, that they want to do something better, something more intellectual, something of a "higher class." They are never satisfied until they have had their fling in what they believe to be the more aristocratic pastures of the pleasure seeking reader. Let us hope that they derive much satisfaction themselves from such excursions.

In this new novel Mrs. Rinehart has evidently tried to do "something different." The plot is but little complicated, and what mystery there is the reader begins to see through almost as soon as it is sensed. If he is a person of ordinary penetration he knows practically all about it long before its explanation is set before him on the printed page. While several sensational happenings take place, there is not that rapid succession of incidents which in previous books has kept Mrs. Rinehart's readers breathless with suspended interest. But there is much more of deliberate intent to portray the inner self of her characters and to make evident and plausible their motives. And there is a great deal more of sugary sweet sentiment in the treatment of the heroine and her love affairs than one would have supposed Mrs. Rinehart's sense of humor would allow her to indulge in.

The story is concerned with a gifted surgeon who, having attained fame while still in his twenties, cast his profession aside because he had blundered and his blunder had cost a life, and went to live in a shabby street in a mid-Western city and earned his living as a bookkeeper in a gas office. A charming and eager girl, studying to be a nurse and a young surgeon on the way to be famous also live in the street. These three provide the chief part of the action, although there are many other characters, some of them more convincingly drawn than either of these. Upon the surgeon in hiding, known to the shabby street as K. Le Moyne, and soon simply as K., and the young heroine Mrs. Rinehart has lavished opulent love and affection. There was nothing too good for her to give them in the way of character endowment, nor could she persuade herself to economize in the quantity of their virtues.

As always, however, Mrs. Rinehart has written with a graphic pen. She has a notable gift for visualizing her scenes and making her readers feel the sentimental or emotional content with which she wishes to endow them. This same gift appears sometimes in her portrayal of her people when she illuminates a foible or a characteristic with a single striking phrase or sentence.

THE LOVABLE MEDDLER

THE LOVABLE MEDDLER. By Leona Dalrymple. Illustrated by Grant Tyson Reynard. Chicago: The Reilly & Britton Company. $1.35.

BREEZY and bubbly, gay of manner and bright of face, Miss Dalrymple's new story will be hailed with delight by a vast army of readers who are not captious about the artistic qualities of their fiction. Although "The Lovable Meddler" may lack some of the finer qualities of literature, its spirit is cheerful and buoyant, its narrative ripples with good humor, and its people are prone to jest and quip and to take genially humorous views of whatever happens to them. The proportion of those who prefer the latter qualities to the former in fiction being, probably, about ten to one, it is to be expected that the book will quickly achieve a persistent position in the ranks of the "best-sellers." And that likelihood is increased, of course, by the prestige which the author gained as the winner last year of a $10,000 prize with her novel, "Diane of the Green Van." The calculating and discriminating viewpoint and method which Miss Dalrymple has described herself as taking when she set to work upon the latter novel indicate the possession of qualities which would enable her to write novels of more literary value if she were to set her eyes upon a different audience. In her characters also is perceptible the ability to work out into graphic realization the conception she has formed of them. But the conception is likely to show so patently that it had its origin in imagination and reading rather than in life itself that no amount of graphic portrayal can make it a convincing creation.

Her Scotch doctor, the "lovable meddler" of the new story, belongs to this type. He gets the centre of the stage most of the time and he does a great deal of talking in a Scotch dialect that Miss Dalrymple manages very well indeed, using just enough of it to give pungency and individuality to his speech without making it tiresome. The location of the story is apparently a goodly sized town within the suburban radius of New York City. Therein live Dr. Glenmuir and a circle of appreciative friends, including the family of a man who believes himself to be an artist. To enable him to live up to that conviction his wife runs a broker's business in New York, and his eldest daughter, whom the doctor calls "Leddy Rose," runs the home and for years has mothered a large family of younger sisters. The doctor wants to bring about a marriage between "Leddy Rose" and his favorite nephew, but they find it impossible to weaken her resolution to devote herself to her family. So the doctor plans a "schemie" which involves getting the sisters all married off to a group of his young friends, so as to leave "Leddy Rose" without a family to mother. He has also an alternative plan of breaking down the artist's selfishness and making him support his family himself. He manoeuvres the two plans along together through a plot that is very slight and not alway plausible in complications and incidents, but in which the author has showed skill in making the most of its turns and situations.

HOUSE OF MANY MIRRORS

THE HOUSE OF MANY MIRRORS. By Violet Hunt. New York: Brentano's. $1.35.

MISS HUNT, who is an English novelist, and writes about English people of the class for whom play is the most serious business of life, uses with skill the fictional method of infinite detail and minute psychological analysis. It is a method which has been used so brilliantly and with results of such lasting worth by English novelists of genius that those of lesser gifts have fallen into the error of thinking that the same kind of a pen can be wielded by any fictionist. They forget that only genius can make enjoyable hours spent in intimate association with people who, in real life, would be insufferable bores. To make the average person endurable in the pages of a book, if he is photographed minutely and completely, he needs to be hung all over with the wise, clever, informed, interesting, and entertaining comments and observations and divagations of a mind that is bubbling over with things worth saying, worth reading, worth remembering, and set in the frame of a rich and brilliant style. Otherwise the average person is likely to be more companionable in fiction if the author lets him do more things and describes him less.

In her new novel Miss Hunt presents the portrait, done with infinite fine lines of microscopic observation and description, of a London society woman deeply in love with her husband and determined to regain for him the inheritance of a fine old country place from which his marriage with her had cut him off. She has a managing mind that likes to concern itself, or by reason of the pettiness of her interests, is much concerned with trivial affairs, and she busies herself endlessly with innocent intrigues and convoluted understandings and barterings in order to make sure that her beloved husband shall not be left, after her own death, which she sees looming in the near future, bereft of his ancestral estate and dependent upon his own exertions. To reach the goal she had so relentlessly determined to attain she makes a final sacrifice which causes the story to end upon a note of tragedy and under a cloud of gloom and horror. But the portrayal of the woman is clear and vital, and most of the other characters are real and convincing. There is realistic picturing also of much pursuit of pleasures that nobody seems to enjoy. Now and then one or another of the characters says a clever thing. But the mood of the author is ever sombre and dignified, and the final tragedy casts its shadow far in advance through the pages.

TWO SINNERS

TWO SINNERS. By Mrs. David G. Ritchie. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.35.

A WORLD hardened to a sensational view of what is "sin"—and what is something else—needs to be warned against the title of Mrs. Ritchie's entirely innocent novel. There is nothing scarlet or purple or in any sort aggressive or defiant or shocking as concerns worldly standards of goodness in the conduct of any of its characters. Overmuch pride and selfishness and some hardness of heart are the only dyes of sinfulness that have spotted the souls of the "two sinners" of the title. One of them, of course, is a young woman, who at the beginning of the story has just been asked in marriage by a very eligible bachelor entering upon middle life. The aristocracy upon which she prides herself is that of mind and heart and soul, and she feels for him a scarcely veiled contempt because she thinks him, in those quarters of his being, of coarser material than herself. But he has wealth and she is poor and her youth is near its end, and she dreads the narrow, colorless life which otherwise will probably be her portion. So she accepts him, and then in ugly moods born of her self-pity and rebellion against her fate she flouts and hurts him with covert sneers until she feels that she can endure the engagement no longer and gives him his dismissal.

But life takes her in hand, and with personal loss and sorrow softens her heart, breaks down her selfishness, and makes her see with clearer eyes. And presently she finds herself loving her discarded lover with the tenderness and humility newly born in her character. He also has felt the purifying influence of the heartaches she has caused him, and of the self-searchings to which he has in consequence subjected himself, and has become a less self-righteous, cocksure, and self-centred individual. And so, when they meet again, life opens out before them with better promise than it had done in their more "sinful" days.

There is much graphic though somewhat sketchy character portrayal in the story. The girl herself stands out well, notable for the delicacy and sureness with which her refinement of nature and her extreme sensitiveness are made manifest. The lover is more elusive; one sees him only in glimpses. But even so the author contrives to put much substance into his rather shadowy outlines. An elderly aunt devoted to a pestiferous dog gives a touch of subdued humor and is the truest and most lifelike character in the book.

The story is of the quiet sort, dealing with the stresses of the soul and their developments and with material happenings only as these become the expression of the inner drama. It has many dramatic moments, and the author is expert in the handling of her slender material to make it yield the utmost of emotional suspense. But the thread of the story sometimes lacks coherence and the quality of inevitableness. The author turns a phrase neatly and often puts a clean-cut idea into crisp wording. There is a vivid picture in "a battered common tarnished with its proximity to London," and her Father Fitzherbert voices succinctly a truth of modern life when he says, "The modern world is so tender hearted of itself that it would rewrite the parable of the ten talents * * * and insist that the man who had hid his talent and refused to work should not be punished but forsiven and pitied."

THE TOLLHOUSE

THE TOLLHOUSE. By Evelyn St Leger. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.

THIS story has its scene laid in a remote country district of England, while in spirit it is as remote from the present time as any of Mrs. Gaskell's novels. Suggestive of her quiet but effective art it is sometimes, indeed, both in the scene which it pictures and the manner of the picturing. But it is very much of the present in its story, for it deals with the war and with what the war means, even to the furthest corner of England. It is told in the first person by a woman of this far-away, sleepy, last-century village, a village which, as the parson says, is still feudal, in spite of all his teaching. It has its Squire, known to the villagers as "Sirenry," and its great house and the "family-at-the-house," for whom and by whom the village lives and breathes, and in whom are centred its practical and its sentimental interests. But the really vital centre of its life is "The Tollhouse," where lives the arbiter of its thoughts and actions, the woman who in her younger days had been the nurse for "the family." With the breaking out of the war the Tollhouse becomes a sort of intelligence centre for war news, and its dignified and influential occupant becomes a person of more importance than ever, encouraging enlistment when that falters, rebuking and correcting too cocksure confidence that England is bound to win any way, and heartening the timid when there are spy scares and German invasion scares. All the waves of feeling that have swept over England in the last year, the agonies she has suffered and the courage with which she has faced them, the exaltation of spirit and the willing sacrifice, are reflected from the tiny mirror of the life of this remote little village with its feudal love for its one great family. The great house sends its first-born to the front and quickly a hero's death is his. Its daughter's best beloved barely escapes death and comes back a hero. Its rooms are filled with wounded soldiers, and all the village helps in their care, as willingly as it has sent its own sons to the trenches. Pathos and tragedy and romance are all there, and the heart of the village responds at once to each, and the village chronicler tells of it all in the simplest style. There are also many touches of humor, most of it of the seemingly unconscious kind arising out of the naïve statement of the ideas and reasonings of the simple-minded characters.

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

E. P.—Can you tell a constant reader where he can find the following quotation:

Whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad.

The original author of the saying quoted by our correspondent is not known. Dryden, in "The Hind and Panther," Part III., says:

For those whom God to ruin has design'd
He fits for fate, and first destroys their mind.

The old Latin saying is "Quos Deus vult perdere prius dementat." The original author of this saying is apparently unknown. It has been ascribed erroneously, it is said, to Euripides, Publilius, or Publius Syrus, a Latin writer of farces who flourished in the first century before Christ, and who was the author of a series of moral sentences or maxims in iambic or trochaic verse. These maxims have been translated by Darius Lyman. One of these maxims is: "Whom fortune wishes to destroy she first makes mad."

Joshua Barnes, (1654-1712,) quoted the saying from the Greek as follows: "Quem Jupiter vult perdere, prius dementat." The English proverb runs: "Whom God will destroy He first of all drives mad." George Herbert in his "Outlandish Proverbs" gives it: "Whom God will punish he will first take away the understanding."

ISABELLA DOUGLAS.—Will you tell me who is the author of a poem quoted (if I remember rightly) in Parker's "Aid to English Composition," a book in use half a century ago? It begins:

The Lady Jane was tall and slim,
And the Lady Jane was fair;
But Sir Thomas the Good was stout of limb,
And his cough was short and his eyes were dim,
And his hat was remarkably broad in the brim,
And she was uncommonly fond of him,
And they both were a loving pair.
And the name and the fame
Of the knight and his dame
Were everywhere hailed with the highest acclaim,
Hurrah, hurrah, one cheer more,
All sorts of pleasure and no sort of pain
To Sir Thomas the Good and the fair Lady Jane!

The rest of the lines I have forgotten.

The poem quoted by our correspondent is "The Knight and the Lady," by Richard Harris Barham, (1788-1845,) an English poet and song writer. The poem is printed in "Choice Selections No. 5," published by the Penn Publishing Company of Philadelphia.

Mrs. HELEN G. COLEMAN.—Will you kindly tell me the value of a complete set of "Niles's Register"?

It is worth about $50.

H. O. M.—Will you kindly inform me whether the thirty parts of "The Art of the World," published by D. Appleton & Co., illustrating some of the paintings, statuary, &c., of the World's Columbian Exposition, have any pecuniary value today?

They are worth from $7.50 to $10.

M. B.—Will you please tell me something of the life of Robert W. Service, his work, past and present?

Robert William Service, who has been named "the Poet of the Yukon," is the son of Robert S. Service of Toronto, Canada. He was born in Preston, England, in 1876, and went to Scotland with his parents when he was six years old. He was educated at the Hillhead High School in Glasgow. After leaving school, he entered into the service of the Commercial Bank there. Some years later he emigrated to Canada, where his parents followed him in 1905. Service travelled extensively in the United States and Canada, and finally entered the service of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, being stationed successively at Victoria, Vancouver, Kamloop, and White Horse. He retired from active business some years ago, and devotes himself entirely to writing, and is a frequent contributor to the newspapers of Scotland. His chief publications are "Rhymes of a Rolling Stone," "Songs of a Sourdough," "Ballads of a Cheechako," "The Spell of the Yukon," and "The Trail of '98." Mr. Service is a resident of Toronto.

W. M. J.—Can you tell me something of the life of Compton Mackenzie, of his present whereabouts and activities?

Compton Mackenzie was born at West Hartlepool, England, on Jan. 17, 1883, and is the eldest son of Edward Compton and Virginia Bateman. In 1905 he married Faith, youngest daughter of the Rev. E. D. Stone, sometime master at Eton College. He was educated at St. Paul's School and Magdalen College, Oxford. He was editor and co-founder of The Oxford Point of View. He was associated with H. G. Pélissier of the Follies plotting plays and writing lyrics. His publications are: "Poems," 1907; "The Passionate Elopement," 1911; "Carmine," 1912; "Kensington Rhymes," 1912, and "Sinister Street," 1913-14. His plays are: "The Gentleman in Grey," 1906, and "Carmine," 1912. His last given addresses were Casa Solitaria, Isola di Capri, Italy, and care of J. B. Pinker, Talbot House, Arundel Street, W. C., London.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

S. C. G.—In answer to inquiry of Louis Dillman in THE BOOK REVIEW of July 25, the clipping which I have of the poem "Parting" bears the name of Coventry Patmore as author, and is as follows:

If thou dost bid thy friend farewell,
But for one night though that farewell be,
Press thou his hand in thine;
How can'st thou tell how far from thee
Fate or caprice may lead his steps ere that tomorrow comes?
Men have been known to lightly turn the corner of a street,
And days have gone to months and months to lagging years
Ere they have looked in loving eyes again.
Parting at best is underlaid
With tears and pain.
Therefore, lest sudden death should come between,
Or time, or distance, clasp with pressure firm
The hand of him who goeth forth;
Unseen Fate goeth, too.
Yea, find thou always time to say some earnest word
Between the idle talk,
Lest with thee, henceforth,
Night and day, regret should walk.

A copy of Patmore's poem has also been received from Theodore Bitterman. The query has been also answered by Elizabeth R. Smillie.

F. A. M.—In relation to the inquiry of "F. R. S." in the Book Review of July 11, who desired to be informed on what occasion and by whom the following words were used: "No gentleman would insult me, none other can," would say that I have always understood that the phrase was used by Senator William H. Seward of New York, afterwrd Secretary of State in President Lincoln's Cabinet, on the floor of the Senate during a heated debate growing out of the savage assault made upon Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts by Representative Preston S. Brooks of South Carolina, which occurred in the Senate Chamber on May 22, 1856. Brooks took exception to some remarks made by Sumner in a debate in relation to the extension of slavery in the State of Kansas. Senator Sumner was severely beaten with a cane by Brooks, and it was said that he never fully recovered from the effects of the assault.

HARRY KORFMAN.—In answer to "L. W. K." who, in your issue of July 18, asked about the poem "To David in Heaven," would say that the poem was written by Robert Buchanan, a Scottish poet, (1841-1901.) It is printed in Book VIII. of Jones's Readers, published by Ginn & Co. of Boston. The poem was printed in the Literary Digest recently.

APPEALS TO READERS

B. M. E.—Can any of your readers name the author of a poem entitled "An Evening Meditation," which I have on an old sampler made at the Mountmellic Boarding School in 1802? The first stanza is as follows:

While night in solemn shade invests the pole,
And calm reflection soothes the pensive soul;
While reason undisturbed asserts her sway,
And life's deceitful colors fade away,
To thee, all conscious Presence! I devote
This peaceful interval of sober thought.
Here all my better faculties confine,
And be this hour of sacred silence thine.

I. M. R.—Can any of your readers tell me the name of the poem and by whom written, which contains the following line:

He travels fastest who travels alone.

I cannot recall the verse, but think this the last line.

NATALIE S. BENTZ.—Could you tell me in what poem about Lincoln occurs the line:

A soft Kentucky strain was in his voice.

WILLIAM CALLAGHAN.—Could any of your readers give me any information, or name the author, of a poem, one of its stanzas ending as follows:

A flash of the lightning,
A breath of the wave,
Man passeth from life
To the depths of the grave.

N. B. S.—Will some one kindly supply for me the first four lines of the third and last stanza of "Mary MacNeal—or Kinlock of Kinlock"? an old Scotch song. The first line of the stanza is:

But, oh, bitter blast on such fair promise blowing.

I need only the next three lines to complete the poem.

F. M. P.—Can some of your readers tell me where the poem beginning:

Every mason in the quarry,
Every builder on the shore,
Every chopper in the palm grove,
Every craftsman at the oar can be found?

Presents to Americans a New Aspect of the War
Senator Beveridge's Book
What Is Back of the War
Senator Beveridge went to Europe to find out the thought behind the war in Germany, in France, and in England, and the several Governments gave him exceptional opportunities to do this.
He interviewed men and women in many walks of life, statesmen, soldiers, authors, philosophers, socialists, capitalists, laborers, peasants—and set down their views with care. These conversations with representative men are likely to attain permanent historic significance.
He went into the trenches and among batteries in action. He saw battles. He visited hospitals, prison camps, and captured territories. And he tells what he saw there.
What Is Back of the War presents to Americans a new aspect of the war and gives them authentic data on which to base judgment, to estimate resources, and to forecast the outcome.
Editor of FATHERLAND Says:
I have read Senator Beveridge's book What Is Back of the War with interest.
Senator Beveridge is the first man who has succeeded in being neutral. His exposition of the German point of view is as fair as it is brilliant, but the same must be said of his exposition of the point of view of the Allies.
If we had more men like Senator Beveridge in this country and throughout the world, there would be less bitterness and racial antagonism.
No American can afford to discuss the war without having read what Senator Beveridge has to say in his book.
Sincerely
GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK

BOOK WORLD IN SUMMER AND AUTUMN

Various Branches of Literature Represented in Forthcoming Publications—Author and Publisher in Vacation Months

A LITTLE story by Maurice Maeterlinck—his first published work, but never before brought out in this country—is promised for an early date by Duffield & Co. It is called "The Massacre of the Innocents," and is said to be strikingly appropriate to conditions in Belgium today.

This house will also publish during August two novels, "A Wild Goose Chase," by Edwin Balmer, a story of love and adventure in the arctic regions, and "White Tiger," by Henry M. Rideout, in which a young engineer takes charge of a haunted mine in the Dutch East Indies.

"Thirty" is the title of a new story by Howard Vincent O'Brien, whose first venture in fiction, "New Men for Old," was a last year's novel. The new book will be published at the end of this month by Dodd, Mead & Co. It is said to contain an unusual love story concerned with an heiress of strong character and a man of striking and lovable personality.

Among the Fall publications of the George H. Doran Company will be a new novel by Hugh Walpole called "The Golden Scarecrow."

Early next month McBride, Nast & Co. will offer "Wings of Danger," by Arthur A. Nelson, a tale of the wild lands of Africa and of a search for a lost city in which Cecil Rhodes is one of the characters.

"Aladore" is the title of a new novel by Henry Newbolt which E. P. Dutton & Co. will soon publish. It is described as a romance with such a spiritual meaning as to make it almost an allegory. The fair lady of the tale dwells in the earthly city of Paladore, but has the faculty of betaking herself when she likes to its spiritual counterpart, or, perhaps, astral body, of Aladore. The story tells how the hero, after struggles and successes, at last also attains Aladore.

"The Cinder Pond," by Carroll Watson Rankin, is announced for publication toward the end of this month by Henry Holt & Co. Mrs. Rankin's "The Adopting of Rose Maria," and her "Dandelion Cottage," both novels published five or six years ago, are in, respectively, their seventh and fifteenth printing.

The sensational attack on Germany entitled "J'Accuse," from which the Magazine Section of THE NEW YORK TIMES recently published some extracts, is to be brought out in this country very soon by the George H. Doran Company. The authorship is anonymous, except for the statement, "By a German," which appears upon the title page. The volume made its first appearance last month in Lausanne, Switzerland, whither the author went to make its publication possible. The book makes a bitter arraignment of Germany for her part in bringing on the war and for her attitude toward other nations and scoffs at the idea that she can possibly win final success. A little book of poems censuring the wickedness and folly of the war will be published soon by E. P. Dutton & Co. It is by Charles Cammell and is called "Casus Belli to Satire." The verse is in the heroic couplet and is modeled after Pope and Dryden.

Early in the Fall Harper & Brothers will bring out the first books in a new series which will be called "America's Best Funny Stories." The first volume, which will appear in a few weeks, will have the title, "Men and Things," and will be followed very quickly by the second volume. "Men and Things" will contain some of the best works of Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Bill Nye, F. Peter Dunne, and twenty-five other representative American humorists.

"A Voice From the Crowd," by George Wharton Pepper, author of several volumes dealing with laws and legal decisions and long a Professor of Law in the University of Pennsylvania, is ready for issue by the Yale University Press. It makes terse statements of the results of the author's long and wide observation of men and things.

Barrett H. Clark's "Contemporary French Dramatists" is ready for immediate publication by the Stewart & Kidd Company, Cincinnati. Mr. Clark studies each of the chief contemporary dramatists of France, makes quotations from his plays, provides a complete bibliography, and offers also a chapter on "Characteristics."

Frederick A. Stokes Company promises for Fall publication a book on "The American Country Girl," by Martha Foote Crow.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S little volume, "When a Man Comes to Himself," is reported by The Bookman to have been during July the best selling book in the United States other than fiction. A new edition in limp leather has just been brought out, and its publishers report an increasing use of the book as a gift in both this and the cloth binding.

James L. Ford, whose latest book was the satirical novel "The Great Mirage," published last Winter, is spending the Summer at a cottage colony on Long Island and reversing the usual custom by week-ending in the city for the discharge of his editorial duties.

It was while he was a university student in St. Petersburg and in dire need of food that Leonid Andreyev wrote his first story. It was about a starving student. A little later he tried to commit suicide by shooting. Afterward he painted portraits at $2 each, and then tried to be a lawyer, but in a year had only one case, which he lost. Then he turned to literature, to which he has since devoted himself with constantly increasing success.

The manuscript of "Me," now running anonymously as a serial in The Century, which will be published in book form soon, was taken to the Century Company by Miss Jean Webster of "Daddy Long-Legs" fame, who said that it had been written by a friend of hers in two weeks while she lay in a hospital recovering from a serious operation.

Professor Robert Williams Wood of Johns Hopkins University, who collaborated with Arthur Train, Assistant District Attorney for New York, in the writing of "The Man Who Rocked the Earth," in which radium is used to throw the earth's movements out of gear, recently told an interviewer who wanted to know how much scientific truth is in the story, "I do not think that radium could make the earth change the tilt of its axis, but if anything could it would be radium."

John Kendrick Bangs, whose "A Houseboat on the Styx," "Coffee and Repartee," and other books have added to the joy of life, is spending the Summer at his camp in Maine.

Robert Frost, whose "North of Boston" has been welcomed with acclaim in both the United States and England, explains that his book of poems was published first in England merely by accident. He happened to be in that country when it occurred to him that he had enough manuscripts to make a book. The collection of poems was accepted quickly and gladly by the first publisher to whom he showed it, and met when published with instant success, as it did also a little later in this country.

Romain Rolland's trilogy of Jean Christophe has just been sent to the press, the three volumes at the same time, the first for its tenth printing and the other two for their sixth each.

George Herbert Perris, war correspondent and author of "The Campaign of 1914 in France and Belgium," has been engaged to English newspaper work, much of the time in connection with leading London dailies, since 1883. During more recent years he has been prominent in societies devoted to international peace propaganda.

THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN WONDERLAND

A Region That Offers Many Inducements to the Summer Traveler

THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN WONDERLAND. By Enos A. Mills. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.75 net.

THERE are many experiences to be had in this world, some as common, if as strange, as sleep, others so rare that possibly but one or two men in a generation meet with them.

It is these rarer experiences of which you may read in Enos A. Mills's latest book, "The Rocky Mountain Wonderland," and, reading, almost fancy yourself in the author's place, so vivid are his descriptions. He has guided many a party up the steep and splendid slope of Long's Peak, and tells something of these tramps, which must have been enviable excursions. But it is his lonely journeyings through the mountain wilderness that most deeply stir the emotions and arouse the imagination.

For days on end Mr. Mills follows the wanderings of a flock of Rocky Mountain sheep. For years he has observed their habits, sitting silent and solitary to watch them make their dizzy plunges down precipitous walls, trailing them mile after mile from one feeding ground to another, studying their ways in Summer and Winter. So, when he takes his readers with him to see the actions of a special group, he has a fund of intimate knowledge to draw on in explaining what he sees.

"It is," he says, "intensely thrilling to watch a leaping exhibition of one of these heavy, agile, alert, and athletic animals. Down precipitous places he plunges head foremost, turning and checking himself as he descends by striking his feet against walls and projections—perhaps a dozen times—before alighting on a ledge for a full stop. From this he walks overboard and repeats the wild performance."

Far up among the high slopes and precipices of the Rockies we sit, author and reader, and watch the members of a flock hurl themselves down, one after the other, ending with a couple of lambs. From the top to the low-lying feeding ground of Thatch-Top they leap, a breathless, varied performance, during whose perilous chances the leading ram slips and injures himself, but keeps gamely on. "The leaps of flying squirrels and the clever gymnastic pranks of monkeys are tame shows compared with the wild feats of these masters of the crags." Incidentally Mr. Mills once again nails an error the often-repeated statement that the rams land on their horns in these plunges. They do, indeed, do so once in a while; but when that happens they do not rise again.

One of the enchanting papers in this book tells the adventures of the trees of the Forest Frontier, the timber line in the mountains. Here we are given a real conception of the immense battles of nature. The trees against the wind and snow! It is a romantic, a gallant spectacle. No bit of protection offered by ledge or sheltering crag but is seized on by the intrepid pines and firs, aspens and black birches of the heights. Where they cannot stand up they lie down. Here and there, boldly facing the worst, their tattered boughs streaming behind them, a narrow fringe along one side only of each tree, a few heroes stagger up beyond their fellows. For hundreds of years the stout, if crippled and dwarfed soldiers of the green world, keep up the bitter struggle. One pine found by Mr. Mills had a trunk that was but "six-tenths of an inch in diameter, its height twenty-three inches, and its limb spread thirty-one. Its age was sixty-seven years." Another of these amazing trees, twenty-eight years old, was but two inches high, with a limb spread of four inches. At other times trees will grow along the ground for sixty or seventy feet, unable to lift their heads against the fierce onslaughts of the mighty winds that blow almost incessantly. Few along this line of combat ever reach a height greater than twelve feet.

An experience that few live to tell of, at least, is to join in the mad rush of an avalanche, but in "Associating with Snow Slides," Mr. Mills tells how he did it, riding the tearing, screaming giant with his snowshoes, in a welter of flying snow, trees snapped short off, and whirling boulders. The journey was not a voluntary one, but the rider accomplished it unhurt, though almost suffocated.

Not only trees and snow and sheep, but mountain lion, grizzly, and wolf come under observation, and even into companionship. Mr. Mills never travels with a gun. Far and near he ranges, spending whole months on the trail, always unarmed—and, from our cossetted point of view, unfed. He mentions casually going without food for two or three days at a time, engaged meanwhile in the most strenuous exertions, and is quite in the habit of starting for a tramp of many days with little but a handful of raisins and some tea in the larder of his pocket. There is more than a good word for the grizzly. Evidently he is something of a pet with Mr. Mills. "The grizzly is not ferocious. On the contrary, he uses his wits to keep far away from man. * * * A grizzly acts so promptly in emergencies that he has often been misunderstood. He fights because he thinks he has to, not because he wants to."

The whole paper on the grizzly is of the greatest interest. There are so many misconceptions concerning this animal, quite as many in the West as in the East, that the truth told by a man who has carefully studied and observed the only two species of bears, the black and the grizzly, known in America is well worth meeting. The varying color of the grizzly is the source of many errors, as are the inaccurate and hastily come by conclusions of hunters and tourists. Whatever Mr. Mills tells is based on the closest kind of work extending over long periods of time; he finds the truth more interesting than surmises, and though there is a strong strain of the poet in him, there is nothing of the romancer.

Now that America is the only playground left for the busy vacationist, this book should be greatly in demand, for all travelers to the West will find it a companion of the most satisfactory type. There are some alluring descriptions of Estes Park, now the Rocky Mountain National Park, the wonderful place whose dedication to the people was accomplished almost entirely through Mr. Mills's personal exertions and untiring determination. Whoever reads of this park will want to go there; those who cannot go will at least be glad they can read of it, and see glimpses of its noble peaks and solitary lakes, its wild forests and wild animals in the very beautiful photographs taken by the author, which illustrate a valuable, interesting, lively, and sympathetic account of a magnificent portion of our country.

THE WEEK ON THE VARIOUS WAR FRONTS IN EUROPE

Interest Centres in Operations on Eastern Front, Where Germans and Austrians Are Still Trying to Cut Off Retreat of Russians Behind Warsaw—Persistent Attacks by Italians About Gorizia—French Gain in Alsace, While Germans Resume Offensive in Verdun Region.

By a Military Expert.

IN reviewing the operations of the past week that led up to the fall of Warsaw, a division of the fighting front into sectors, similar to that of several weeks ago, will again be made and followed. Although the ultimate objective of all the Teuton armies on this front was naturally Warsaw, each of them had a function to perform in regard to a particular objective, and it was a combination of this that was to effect and did effect the fall of the Polish capital. Therefore, the various steps taken can, in their relation to the whole, be best understood by following the operations of each of the various armies.

In the extreme northern sector, that of Courland, the army of General von Bülow is operating, his left being at some point on the Gulf of Riga, his right extending down into Suwalki Province in the neighborhood of Augustowo. The operations of this force have not been strictly against Warsaw itself. It seems rather a heavy raiding force, which, in addition to its offensive operations, prevents the turning of the German left, as was done by the Russians in the earlier campaign against Warsaw.

Von Bülow's operations have been largely against the principal Russian cities in Courland and the railroad running from Warsaw through Grodno and Vilna to Petrograd. This army has met with considerable minor successes. It has taken the town of Mitau, is seriously menacing the important gulf port of Riga and, although stubbornly opposed, has fought its way forward some little distance toward the railroad. But the railroad is still a long way off and it will probably be a month at least before it can be reached, if it ever is. Some of its branches have been and probably will continue to be cut, but the main stem is intact.

The importance of this road is not primarily that it feeds Warsaw, for Warsaw being now in German hands need no longer be considered in this connection. But the Russians will of necessity fall back to a new line, fighting as they retire, and it is the right flank of their new line that will be dependent on it for supplies. In so far as the rest of the new line is concerned it would be but little affected by the success of von Bülow's operations, as the roads through Siedlce and Volkovysk, and through Brest-Litovsk, with their numerous branches, can bear sufficient traffic to bring up the necessary supplies. In so far, therefore, as von Bülow's force has influenced the fall of Warsaw it cannot be said to have done more than to have effectively guarded the flank of the forces operating in the next sector, that of the Narew from Lomza to the confluence of the Narew and the Bug at Serock.

Although the Narew is only about 200 yards wide it is guarded, as are most of the rivers of Poland, by a wide marsh belt on both sides. It, therefore, makes an excellent defensive position. In addition to its natural strength its defensive possibilities have been greatly augmented by the construction of permanent fortifications at various points within supporting distance of each other. The principal ones are Lomza, Ostrolenka, Rozan, Pultusk, and Serock.

The Narew between Lomza and Serock screens three railroads radiating from Ostrolenka, all of which are branches of the Warsaw-Petrograd road. It is, therefore, entirely logical that such heavy fighting developed along the Narew front, as the cutting of any of the three roads would almost certainly result in the isolation and consequent capture of the Russian forces occupying at least one and probably more of these fortified places.

What has been stated repeatedly in these reviews must be remembered—the objective of the German Army must be not territory, but men, the Russian Army itself. Grant's victories in the Wilderness, at Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, and Petersburg, gave him only territory and otherwise left him empty-handed. It was only when Lee surrendered at Appomattox and the Army of Northern Virginia ceased to exist as a fighting entity that Grant's "hammering campaign" could be put down as a success. It is with an understanding and realization of this fact that we must view the German operations against Warsaw.

During the week beginning July 24 the Germans threw an overwhelming force against the Russian line on the east bank of the Narew near Rozan and succeeded in forcing a crossing with a considerable force in the neighborhood of Rozan. But the Russians, reinforced at this point, put a sudden stop to the German advance by a severe counter attack, drove back some of the troops that had crossed the river, and held the others in the heavy forest just east of the Rozan bridgehead. Official reports from Berlin have daily mentioned this sector, and every report emphasizes the severity of the fighting, but no report was made of a successful crossing other than that noted.

The fall of Warsaw will, however, force the Russians to retire from the Narew to their new line. The situation is somewhat confused at present, but the probabilities are that a strong Russian rear guard is holding the bridge heads at the various fortified points while the main Russian army occupying the front is retiring. The fighting will be desperate, naturally, as troops engaged in such a rear-guard action will be entirely sacrificed, if necessary, in order to retard the advance for a sufficient length of time for the main army to make good its retreat. Even when the advancing Germans force the bridgeheads their work is not done, and the Russian rear guard can still make effective resistance by reason of the marshes and deep forests with which the eastern bank of the Narew is fringed. The only question is, and this applies to all the forces in the sharper part of the Warsaw salient: Knowing that ultimate retirement was inevitable, have the Russians commenced the retrograde movement in time?

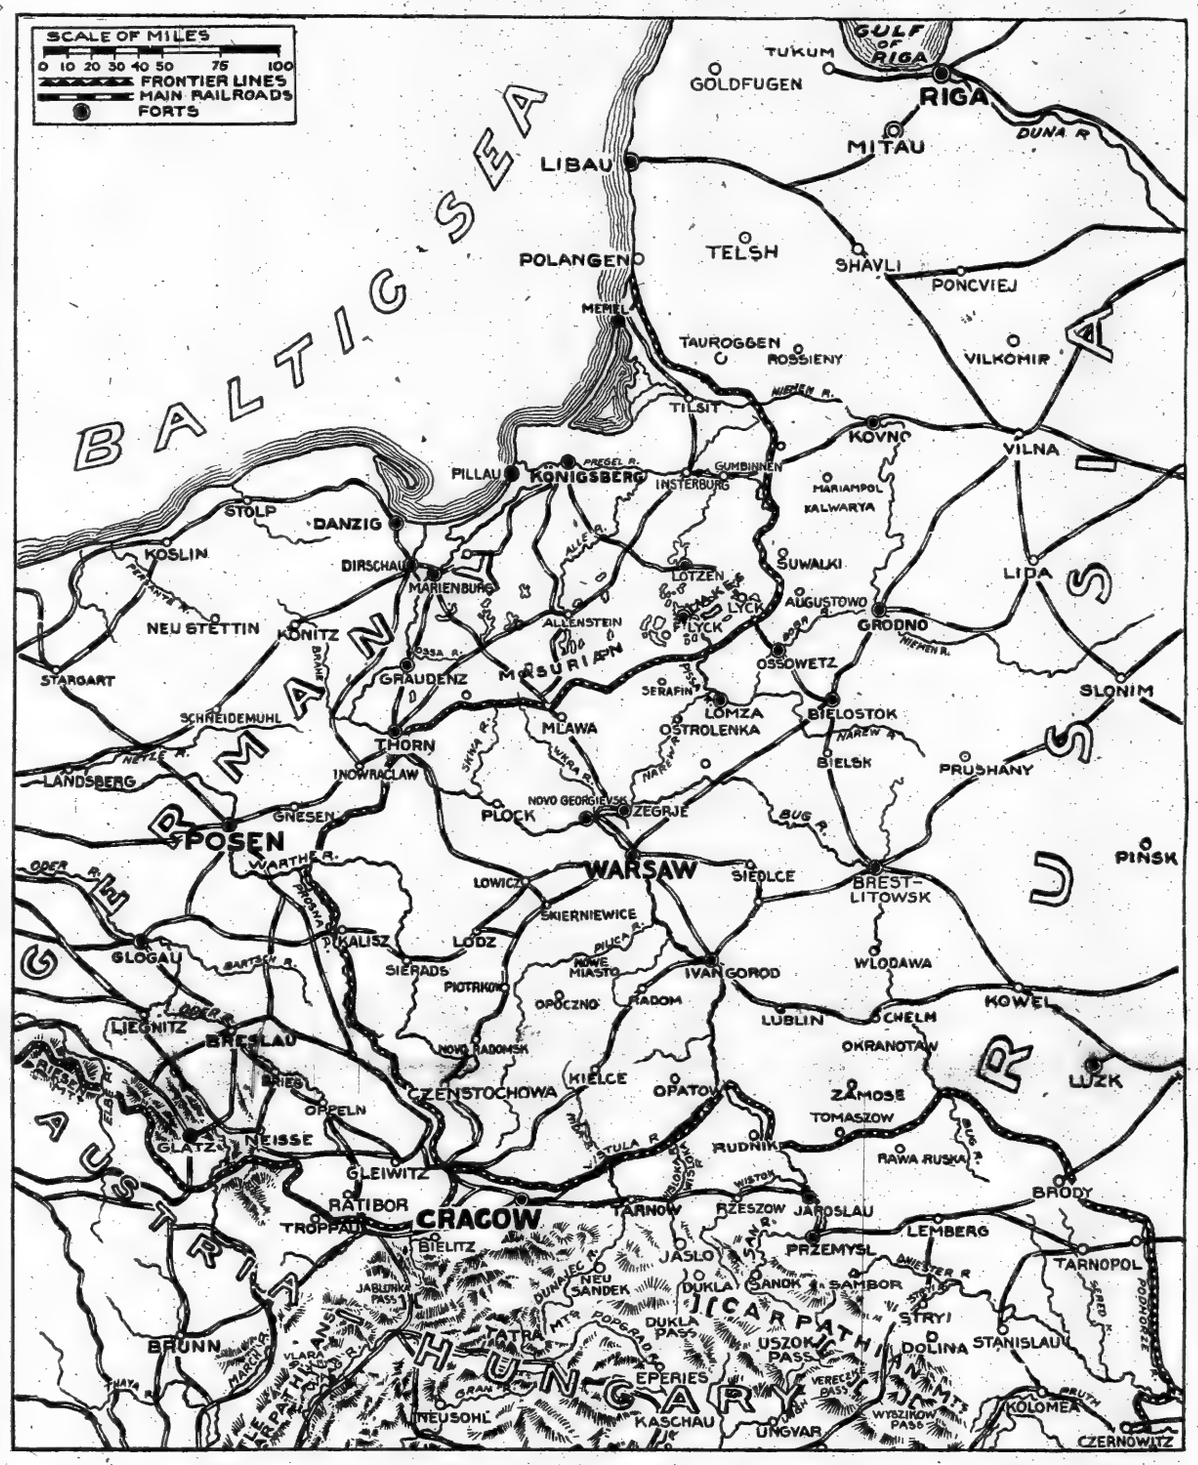
In the next sector, that immediately west of and encircling Warsaw, von Hindenburg drove forward by frontal attacks against fortified positions along the outer line of defensive works of the city. To the north, in the region of Novo Georgievsk, almost continuous fighting of the most severe character did not shake the Russian resistance. But the fall of Lublin and Chaten and the consequent abandonment of a considerable section of the railroad decided the operations in the Warsaw sector proper, and on Wednesday Petrograd announced a retirement from the Blonie-Nadarzyn position to the defenses of Warsaw itself. This move brought the end into plain view. It was but a question here, as on the Narew, of the Russians delaying by rear-guard fighting, while the main army retreated behind the Vistula.

On Thursday Berlin announced that the Russians had retired across the Vistula bridges at Praga and Warsaw was occupied by German troops. Here, as along the Narew front, the situation is for the time being somewhat confused. Reports referring to the Russian evacuation speak of the Russians still holding the front along the Narew and the Bug and pivoting on Novo Georgievsk. The situation that would be created by such a manoeuvre would seem too fraught with danger to be possible.

Another salient would thus be created with Novo Georgievsk as its apex and only a few miles wide at the base. If this fortress is still held, the force garrisoning it must be a small one, intended only for temporary occupancy in order to cause delay.

Although Warsaw has fallen it cannot be expected that the fighting will suddenly cease. On the contrary, for some days, until the Russian retreat in safety is assured and until it can adjust itself to a new position, the fighting may be just as intense as during the last three weeks. Russia has taken a terrible toll from the Germans in return for the city she has lost, and will doubtless supplement her pound of flesh before her retirement is complete.

Running southeast from the sector around Warsaw is the sector of the Vistula extending along the railroad from Ivangorod to Cholm. It was the successes along a section of this line that, more than von Hindenburg's activity near Warsaw itself, caused the evacuation. On Sunday the Austrian troops, who are sandwiched in between Generals Woyrsch on the west and von Mackensen on the east, seized Lublin and forced the Russians to abandon practically all of the railroad between Nova Alexandria and that place. The absolute need of this railroad to the Russian position at Warsaw has been explained in former reviews. It will therefore be understood that this success sounded the death knell to Russia's continued retention of the line she then held.



The Vast Theatre of Operations on the Eastern Front. Latest Dispatches Make It Apparent That the German and Austrian Armies, Having Driven the Russians from Warsaw and the Line of the Vistula, Are Trying to Prevent Them from Taking Up New Positions Along the Kovno-Brest-Litovsk Line.

Following close on the capture of Lublin, von Mackensen, having the week previous, in the battle of Krasnostow, forced the passage of the Volika and seized the heights between that river and Cholm, advanced against the latter city, drove the Russians out, and occupied it. Thus practically the entire railroad from Cholm to Nova Alexandria was in German control.

In the meantime the Russians west of the Vistula, between Nodorzyn and Nova Alexandria, were being hard pressed. Around the strong fortress of Ivangorod the pressure was particularly heavy and has resulted in the capture by the Germans of a number of the ring of forts that surround the central position. As a matter of fact Berlin reports that this position is two-thirds surrounded, so that it does not seem possible that it can hold out. It is the troops garrisoning this stronghold that are in more serious danger of capture or annihilation than those of any other section of the front. London and Petrograd are trembling with anxiety lest the time for the retreat of these troops has passed, and openly express the opinion that their capture is extremely probable.

Northwest of this fortress the Russians have occupied a line considerably in advance of the Vistula. They are being gradually forced back, however, and partly because of the pressure on their front and partly through the danger of being flanked by reason of the German occupation of Warsaw will soon have to fall back behind, if not beyond, the Vistula screen. Should the Russians elect to give battle behind the Vistula on this front the Germans are apt to find the forcing of the river a serious operation, for, as explained in other reviews, the steep banks, the depth, width, and the swift current combine to make the Vistula the strongest defensive barrier in eastern Europe.

On the rest of the front, from Sokol, along the upper Bug, the Zlota Lipa and the Dniester to Bessarabia, there has been but little change. Von Linsingen, who is in command of this section of the Teuton line, is playing a rôle similar to that of von Bülow in the north. His function is not to attack, but to hold, so that the German right flank and lines of communications may be safe. This he has succeeded in doing while his fellow leaders north and west have driven their attacks home.

As to the significance of the fall of Warsaw in its relation to a possible peace, no one can say. It depends largely how our sympathies lie as to what conclusions we draw. At the same time an event of two years or more ago may be appropriately recalled in this connection. About that time a friendly protest was lodged with Russia by France over the fact that, in constructing her main line of defense against an attack from the west, Russia fortified the Kovno-Grodno-Bialostok-Brest-Litovsk line, apparently being willing to concede the impracticability of the defense of Poland. France contended that, with the Russian line of resistance so far removed, an overwhelming force could crush her before Russia could offer any diversion. The correctness of this reasoning has been amply demonstrated. Russia therefore advanced her line of defense to the Warsaw line of the Vistula, the Narew and the Niemen. It is evident that, whether correctly or incorrectly, Russia does not regard Poland as being an essential part of her defensive plan. If correct in this belief, Warsaw, provided the Russian army escapes, simply means so much more territory for German occupation. If incorrect, only time can show the result.

In the other war theatres but little has happened during the week on which to comment.

Italy has been pushing her attack against Gorizia, and the battle that is being waged for this stronghold is one of the hardest-fought of the war. The artillery duel is incessant, and incredible quantities of ammunition are being expended. Although nothing conclusive has yet been claimed by either Vienna or Rome, it seems that Italy is steadily moving forward and approaching the heart of the Austrian defenses. It is reported unofficially that Trieste is being evacuated and consequently the capitulation of Gorizia is expected almost daily.

The fighting at a number of points, which for a time seemed to have almost stopped, has again blazed out—Malborghetto, Tolmino, and Trentino about Rovereto, are again being subjected to attack. But official news is meagre and offers nothing on which to base a reasonable conclusion as to what is really being accomplished.

On the western front the French are consistently maintaining the offensive in the Vosges Mountains that they initiated several weeks ago. The principal line of attack is along the Fecht Valley from Metzeral to Colmar. Although the Germans claim to have regained some of the positions taken from them last week it seems that the more important of them are still in French hands, those under French control commanding the most important avenues through the valley. At the same time this French movement is not of sufficient volume or importance to indicate that there is any idea of turning the German left and following it up the Rhine. On the contrary the impression created is that these operations are merely a continuation of Joffre's efforts to wear the Germans down.

Along the Yser Canal front the Germans launched a spasmodic attack in the vicinity of Hooge, using fire projectors in advance of the attacking force to clear the trenches. The attack, however, was short-lived, and this section of the front settled back to its usual more or less quiet state.

In the Verdun section, both in the Argonne and along the Meuse heights, the army of the Crown Prince has blazed out against the French Verdun position. As this section of the battle front will probably receive considerable attention in dispatches a brief description of the essential elements of which it consists, together with a résumé of what has been accomplished there recently, may prove of interest.

The principal feature of the Argonne is a clay ridge about forty miles long. This ridge is thickly covered with undergrowth, and across it transversely run the French lines. The part of the forest traversed by the battle lines is included between the roads between Varennes and Clermont on the east, and Vienne-le-Château and Binorville on the west. It is along this front that the German attack was launched several weeks ago, and it was again attacked by the Crown Prince this week. The total front covered by the last attack was about six miles, extending from the small village of Bagatelle to a point on the ridge locally called La Fille Morte, about four miles southeast of Varennes.

The total net gain made by the Germans was greatest along the road from Four de Paris to Varennes. In depth it measured not more than 500 yards. Its importance, therefore, is not great. The latest attack has been along the same section of the line, being supplemented by the attacks along the Meuse heights and on the Les Eparges front.

It is becoming more apparent every day that the strong probabilities are that neither the Allies nor the Germans can make any important headway against the other on the French front. The intrenchments that have been constructed since the present lines have been taken put any decisive action beyond the bounds of reason. It must be a question of agreeing to quit or one side wearing the other out.

It is very generally expected that, after the campaign against Warsaw has been concluded and the Russians driven beyond the Vistula and the Bug, the Germans will fortify their own positions as they have done in the west, leave enough troops, and only enough, to keep the Russians where they are, and, strongly reenforcing their western front, institute a drive against some predetermined point between the North Sea and the Swiss frontier. This will probably be the case, at least in part. The doubtful element being the number of troops that can be spared from the east. The eastern front is very much longer than the western, the country much more variegated in its topographical features, and the battle lines therefore susceptible of much more mobility and consequent display of more acute military strategy.

The Russian Army is, as far as we now know, still intact, and, once its supply of ammunition catches up, will have a striking power of great moment. These factors will control the available troops that Germany can detach for a western offensive. It is almost certain, however, that some reinforcements will reach the west, and that as a result the Allies will be made aware of the fact by increased pressure at some point—probably in the Ypres section. The operations of the next two weeks will therefore have an added interest.

HERE AND THERE IN THE WAR NEWS

THE King of Bavaria has appointed the German Emperor a Field Marshal of the Bavarian Army, and the Emperor has accepted the appointment, so it is reported from Amsterdam. The incident is stated to have caused keen interest in Germany, as it has been often held that the Emperor alone had the power to appoint Field Marshals. Bavarians have recently been in favor of their King asserting his position, because of the prominent part Bavarian troops are playing on the battlefield.

American Red Cross doctors and nurses will be withdrawn from the battlefields of Europe on Oct. 1 because of a lack of funds to keep them there longer, according to a statement made last week at Washington by Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Chairman of the Red Cross Relief Commission. It is possible that the two units in Belgium, where the greatest need exists, will be continued, but the other fourteen detachments will be recalled on the date mentioned, when the American fund of $1,560,000 will be exhausted. In the work of cleaning up Serbia the Red Cross has used 358,783 pounds of sulphur, 700,000 bichloride tablets, 7,000 gallons of kerosene oil, 5,600 pounds of formaldehyde, 12,200 doses of cholera vaccine, 500 whitewash brushes, 70 bathtubs, 50 stepladders, and 11 automobile trucks.

Violet Heming in "Under Fire"—Hudson.

THE FIRST-NIGHT CALENDAR.

"THE BOOMERANG," a new comedy in three acts by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes. At the Belasco Theatre Tuesday evening.

"SEARCH ME," a new farce in three acts by Augustin MacHugh. At the Gaiety Theatre Wednesday evening.

"UNDER FIRE," a new play in three acts by Roi Cooper Megrue. At the Hudson Theatre Wednesday evening.

"SOME BABY," a new farce in three acts by Jules Simonson and Zellah Covington. At the Fulton Theatre Thursday evening.

BROADWAY will be quite itself again by the end of the fortnight which begins tomorrow evening. More and more every year is August being given over to new productions, and already the electric signs proclaim the coming of the plays. This week will see the doors open at the Knickerbocker, the Belasco, the Gaiety, the Hudson, and the Fulton.

"The Girl from Utah."

The Knickerbocker Theatre will reopen for the season Monday evening with the return to that playhouse of "The Girl from Utah," the three-star Frohman production which held the boards there last Autumn. The stars are as before—Julia Sanderson, Donald Brian, and Joseph Cawthorn. Alfred De Manby and Eleanor Henry of the original London cast have joined the American production, and it has been further adorned by new songs and new dances. A new trio, enlisting the services of the three stars, is among the numbers on the present program.

The engagement is for three weeks only, the final performance being now set for Aug. 28. Then "The Girl from Utah" will head for the road, to visit the cities that were not reached in last season's tour.

"The Boomerang"

The doors of the Belasco will be thrown wide for the season unusually early this year, for the evening of Tuesday, Aug. 10, has been marked off on the theatrical calendar for that occasion. The first Belasco production will be "The Boomerang," a new American comedy in three acts, by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes. From the advance accounts, it may be gathered that "The Boomerang" is a comedy of jealousy.

Not often in recent seasons has any Belasco production called for so large a company as that assembled for the new play. The cast numbers nineteen. Among them are such well-known players as Arthur Byron, Wallace Eddinger, Martha Hedman, Ruth Shepley and Mrs. Harriet Otis Dellenbaugh. Mr. Eddinger reappears on the stage here for the first time since the long run of "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Miss Hedman is to be seen as a trained nurse, and should be a vision in the trim uniform. Miss Shepley played here all last season as Mary Grayson in "It Pays to Advertise."

Others in the long cast are Gilbert Douglas, Richard Malchien, William Boag, John Clement, Josephine Parks, Dorothy Megrew, Robert Wynn, George Spelvin, Clarence Max, James Ward, Margaret Cadman, Cecil Dwight, Betty Dwight, and Helen Marche.

"Search Me."

Wednesday evening has been appointed for the reopening of the Gaiety, when Moffatt and Pennell will present a new mystery farce, in three acts, called "Search Me." It is the work of Augustin McHugh, who wrote "Officer 666," the merry farce which had so long and so prosperous a career at the same theatre. The box office opens tomorrow morning for the sale of seats.

The new play has as its setting the country seat of a retired English barrister, not far from London, and, with the exception of the American playwright and his servant, the characters in the story are all English. The action, which is said to be lively and abundant, is compressed between the hours of 6 and 11 in one evening. The company includes Howard Estabrook, who made a favorable impression here as Laurie in "Little Women," and Montagu Love, who first came to New York with Cyril Maude and appeared to advantage here last season in "The Adventure of Lady Ursula" and in the various Shaw comedies revived by Arnold Daly. Others in the cast are Charles A. Stevenson, Fred H. Graham, Ethel Gray Terry, Wilfred Seagram, Ruth Allen, Rollo Lloyd, A. P. Kaye, Gordon Burby, Stanley Groome, and George Gaston.

"Under Fire."

Wednesday night has also been selected for the resumption of business at the Hudson Theatre, and "Under Fire," by the author of "Under Cover," describes the occasion. It is the work of Roi Cooper Megrue, that indefatigable playwright who wrote the melodrama which stayed all last season at the Cort, and who helped to write "It Pays to Advertise," the farce at Cohan's, which is enjoying the prestige of having been in town longer than any other play on Broadway. The new piece scheduled for production by the Selwyns at the Hudson is one of several Megrue works destined to meet the public in the near future.

"Under Fire," as its name suggests, is a war play with the present European struggle as the background for its three acts. It is described as "part comedy, part romance." Though one scene is in a trench and another in a field hospital, which, like the Kaiser's headquarters, is "somewhere in Northern France," it is promised that there are no Zeppelins, no liquid fire, and not so much as a single gun shot.

The advance details suggest a huge production. The company numbers 150. There are fifty speaking parts. Among the players are William Courtney, late of "Under Cover"; Frank Craven, the famous Jimmy Gilley, last seen here in his own play, "Too Many Cooks"; Violet Heming, who played here last season in "The Modern Girl," "The Lie," and "Under Cover"; Felix Krembs, who was the hapless playwright in "The Show Shop"; Henry Stephenson, the fine old commandant in "Inside the Lines"; Norman Tharp, who was so good as the silly ass in "Diplomacy"; Phoebe Foster, Dorothy Abbott, Malise Sheridan, Edward Mawson, McKay Morris, F. G. Robinson, Walter Kingsford, Edward Hicks, Frank Morgan, and Robert Fisher.

"Some Baby."

Thursday evening comes "Some Baby" to the Fulton Theatre. It is a new three-act farce, to be presented by the estate of Henry B. Harris. Jules Simonson and Zellah Covington wrote it and Percival Knight revised and staged it.

"Some Baby" concerns an old professor who thinks he has discovered the real elixir of youth after all these years and applies it forthwith to his own daughter and to an elderly General with results so amazing that it takes three acts to tell about it. The advance notice bursts out with the following:

"'Some Baby' may be described as a dramatic elixir composed of love and laughter, spiced with a dash of danger, and making a most seductive potion."

The cast is headed by Frank Lalor, affectionately remembered for his amusing work in "The Pink Lady" and "Ioie." Others in the company are Francine Larrimore, Jessie Ralph, Ernest Stallard, Sam Edwards, John Arthur, Beth Franklyn, Sara Biala, Gilbert Clayton, and Robert W. Lawrence.

Next Week.

The rush of new plays to Broadway will continue through the following week with the arrival of "Common Clay" at the Republic, "Rolling Stones," by Edgar Selwyn, at the Harris, and a somewhat altered and refurbished "Chin-Chin" at the Globe.

COHAN'S—"It Pays to Advertise."
LIBERTY—"Birth of a Nation" (film).
COLUMBIA—Summer Burlesque.
LONGACRE—"A Full House."
NEW AMSTERDAM—"Ziegfeld Follies."

"Chin-Chin" for Three Weeks.

Beginning a week from tomorrow, there will be three more weeks of "Chin-Chin," reassembled after a brief vacation.

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

STRAND—Blanche Sweet in "The Secret Orchard."
VITAGRAPH—"From Out of the Big Snows."
BROADWAY—Pauline Frederick in "Sold."
BRIGHTON BEACH—"The Birth of a Nation."
BRIGHTON BATHS—Rocking-chair Movies.
EIGHTY-FIRST STREET—Mme. Petrova in "The Vampire" and Harry D. Carey in "Just Jim."

SARAH BERNHARDT first invaded the movies long ago, but now we are to see a two-reel exhibition of her home life. The subject is promised for early release by the Photoplay Releasing Company, and accompanying the announcement is the statement that for posing for these pictures the divine Sarah did not receive a single sou. The sum paid over—and it is said to have been considerable—was given outright to the Belgian relief. This, it was said, was the only condition under which Mme. Bernhardt would consent to admit the camera man to her estate.

In the grave words of the announcement, while motion-picture operators ground out 2,000 feet of film, "the divine Sarah consented to submit to the ordeal of acting natural in and around her home."

"The Secret Orchard" is the photoplay for the week at the Strand. It is the picture version of the play by Channing Pollock, which, in turn, was the dramatic version of the story by Agnes and Edgerton Castle. Blanche Sweet is the star, for this photoplay is a Lasky production. Also in the program is an introduction to ancient Egypt and a movie taken at the aquarium in Brussels before the war.

The feature film at the Vitagraph this week is "From Out of the Big Snows," a story of adventure in the Canadian Northwest, written by Ben Cohn and played by James Morrison, Dorothy Kelly, and others. "The Goddess" serial has reached Chapter 14. Maurice Costello and Leah Baird appear in "The Dawn of Understanding," there is a film from the West and more of the Jarr family difficulties.

Charles Ruggles, who is to be seen at the Harris shortly in Edgar Selwyn's new play, "Rolling Stones," has just returned from a moving-picture excursion to California, where he appeared in films with Cyril Maude, George Fawcett, and Maclyn Arbuckle.

Pauline Frederick, who made a striking movie début as Donna Roma in "The Eternal City," is again a screen star, this week at the Broadway Theatre, where she has the principal rôle in a new five-reel photoplay called "Sold." It is a Famous Players product. The remaining program includes a Charley Chaplin effort, some more South American film and the Pathé Weekly.

The program for this week at the Brighton Baths includes Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot," Irving Cummins in Harold McGrath's "The Lure of the Mask," Mary Ryan in "Stop Thief," and "Who's Who in Society."

The Famous Players' study is now busy with the preparations for the motion picture version of "Bella Donna," the Robert Hichens story in which Nazimova appeared when its dramatization was first presented. For the screen, the leading rôle will be played by Pauline Frederick, her fourth screen characterization.

Clifton Crawford plays the part of the war correspondent in the film version of Richard Harding Davis's "The Galloper."

With the statement that Shakespeare is not dead but sleeping, Robert Mantell has betaken himself to the movies.

Tully Marshall, who will be remembered for a number of vivid characterizations, particularly those in "Paid in Full" and "The City," has been engaged by the Reliance-Majestic studios, with which D. W. Griffith is now associated as producer. Mr. Marshall will make his screen début in a picturization of Horace Hazeltine's novel, "The Sable Lorcha." The story is a Chinese mystery tale, and to provide local color for its scenes a Chinese street is being constructed at the company's studios.

Arnold Bennett's mystery story, "Hugo," is to be made into a picture by Pathé. "Hugo" is in a vein quite unlike that in which any of Mr. Bennett's other works are written, unless it be "Buried Alive," and it is admirably adapted for motion-picture purposes.

Coney Mardi Gras.

The Mardi Gras at Coney Island will be held this year from Sept. 13 to Sept. 18, with pageants for the first five evenings and on the concluding Saturday afternoon.

New Burlesque House.

The Yorkville Theatre, at Eighty-sixth Street and Third Avenue, after complete alterations, will open next Saturday evening as a burlesque theatre, with two performances a day and a new program each week. The opening bill is Frank Calder's "High-Life Girls," and this will be continued throughout the week beginning Monday, Aug. 16.

Orphans' Day at Steeplechase.

Friday, Aug. 20, will be Orphans' Day at Steeplechase Park, when the entire inclosure will be turned over to as many thousands as the institutions send. Everything will be free, and the children are invited to come early and stay late.

WEBER AND FIELDS APPEAR AGAIN IN THE VARIETIES

AFTER eighteen years, Weber and Fields are returning to the variety stage. For the first time since they played in Buffalo before the Spanish-American war they will do a vaudeville turn tomorrow afternoon at the Palace Theatre, the first of an engagement. In that long interval they have done many things. They grew in fame in their own music hall of blessed memory and since its closing have tried twice to re-establish it. Fields has starred, sometimes with music and sometimes without, but always without Weber, while the littler partner of the famous team has set himself up as a manager, quietly acquiring such rich but not gaudy properties as "The Climax" and "The Only Girl." Now they have come back to vaudeville, and in this return there is a good deal of sentiment and a great deal of profit. Of the return some little account might be given in terms of each.

As for profit, the curve of their ascending fortunes is so startling that it would make even Irving Fisher dizzy to compute it. It is a long, long way from the salary of $6 a week for the team to the figure which the Keith office says is the largest ever paid for a vaudeville act any time anywhere. But that is what it amounts to. Years ago, before most of the headliners now flourishing in vaudeville were ever heard of, when Weber and Fields were playing in Boston, Paul Keith led them into the office of the theatre there, got out the books and showed them how the price had been jumping even then. Twelve years before, they had played at the old museum at 565-567 Washington Street. Had they not cheerfully played eight times a day and paid their own expenses for $40 a week? They had. Then ten years after that they were charging $500 a week and two years later $1,000.

"When," asked the younger Keith, in mock indignation, "when is this going to stop?"

"Who said it was ever going to stop?" retorted Fields cheerfully, and gave vent to his emotion by poking Weber in the eyes.

Apparently, it hesn't stopped yet.

So much for profit. As for sentiment, you could have found lots of it any day last week that you had succeeded in getting past the watchman into the dark and dusty playhouse that was once the great little music hall. Once the Keith people had hunted up Fields, and he in turn had hunted up Weber, the two adjourned to their old house to get things in shape. The old pool table had to be dragged out onto the stage and Weber's old stuffed suit had to be found and sent to the cleaner's. There was no manuscript to be taken out and pored over, for there never was any book of a Weber and Fields act. Their music hall was ever the little temple of "ad lib."

It was after the rehearsal and they were sitting in the back of the theatre talking of the old days. The team was formed when they were only 9 years old, both lively attendants of the Allen Street school. They would warble and dance in the neighborhood children's shows that were given in the cellars and for which as much as 2 cents admission was charged sometimes. It was not long before the arrival of the Elks Serenaders gave them a chance to come up in the world, or at least to come out of the cellar. They appeared as a blackface team.

"Do you remember," said Weber, "how the first time our mothers came and sat in the front row with a bouquet and how the curtain was rung down on us before they had a chance to throw it? But at the dance afterward we each took turns carrying that bouquet."

"Yes," said Fields, "and do you remember how the next place we played they were so anxious to get the flowers on in time they threw them at the wrong blackface team? My, that was awful."

The first pay engagement came at the old Chatham Square Museum, when they were each paid $3 a week to do their turn eight times a day. By the time they reached that engagement in Boston, at the princely salary of $40 for the team, they were already Dutch comedians with a tendency to clog.

"And we tore tidies," said Fields.

That needed explanation for the younger listeners. It seems that while dancing they would deftly tear folded sheets of paper till all manner of fancily designed tidies emerged in beauty—much coveted by the housekeepers out front.

"Why don't we do that next week at the Palace?" suggested Fields. "Bet I can tear one faster than you."

Whereat they divided an evening paper between them and the last seen of them they were standing side by side, reminiscently tearing tidies.

BAR HARBOR'S GAYEST WEEK

Many Dinners and Dances in Spite of Bad Weather.

BAR HARBOR, Me., Aug. 7.—In spite of rain and a pall of fog, which has hung like a wet blanket all along the shores, this has been Bar Harbor's busiest week. The auction bridge tournament was held on Monday at the Kebo Valley Club, the annual golf tournament began the next day, and the tennis tournament for the championship of the State also occupied the athletically inclined. There were also several musicales and many informal dinners and dances.

Notable among the affairs of the week was the meeting in the interests of Hampton Institute, held Friday morning at the Summer home of Mrs. John S. Kennedy. The negro and Indian boys made the trip in their coasting schooner, a fine example of the Chesapeake Bay "bugeye." Among the speakers was Miss Anne Beecher Schoville, a granddaughter of Henry Ward Beecher, who interpreted plantation melodies and explained their origin and meaning.

Among the patronesses were Mrs. Alfred Anson, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Miles B. Carpenter, Mrs. Alfred M. Coates, Mrs. Edward Coles, Mrs. Ernesto G. Fabbri, Miss Mary U. Hoffman, Mrs. John S. Kennedy, Mrs. Walter Graeme Ladd, Mrs. John Callendar Livingston, Mrs. John T. Linzee, Mrs. Warner M. Leeds, Mrs. John Markoe, Miss Minot, Miss Morrill, Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris, Mrs. Sheffield Phelps, Mrs. William B. Rice, Mrs. John S. Rogers, Mrs. W. H. Schieffelin, Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin, Mrs. Edgar Scott, Mrs. Ernest Schelling, Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, Mrs. Charles H. Sherrill, Mrs. Adolph F. Schauffler, Mrs. Frank Fremont-Smith, and Mrs. A. Murray Young.

Taxes came out the last of the week, and the rate compares favorably with past years. The total valuation of the town of Eden this year is $8,659,220, of which the Summer resident portion is $3,885,284.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor is in Newport this present week as the guest of Mrs. George D. Widener. She plans to return to her Bar Harbor cottage some time during the coming week.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt came Friday to occupy the cottage on West Street, owned by Mrs. George Lee Thompson.

The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. William D. Mann of Trinity Church, Boston, are the guests of the Misses Morrill at Redwood. The latter have entertained several times in their honor at a dinner given Tuesday. The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Starr and President and Mrs. George Harris were among the guests.

Mrs. William P. Draper gave a luncheon Wednesday, her guests including Mrs. Sheffield Phelps, Mrs. Lewis L. Delafield, Mrs. Walter G. Ladd, Mrs. Charles Sherrill, Mrs. Miles B. Carpenter, Miss Eloise Derby, and Miss Gertrude Cramer.

Among those entertaining Wednesday were Mr. and Mrs. Lyman B. Kendall, Mrs. Robert W. Chanler, Mr. and Mrs. R. Hall McCormick, and Mrs. John Aspegren, the latter having fifty guests.

Others entertaining during the week were Mr. and Mrs. Warner M. Leeds, Mrs. Sheffield Phelps, Prof. Rudolph E. Brunnow, Mr. and Mrs. A. Murray Young, Mrs. C. A. Herter, Mrs. William W. Card, and Mrs. G. Quincy Thorndike.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Hall McCormick gave a dinner dance of sixteen covers Friday night at Mizzentop.

Mrs. Miles B. Carpenter entertained at lunch at her Summer home on Eden Street Friday.

Howard O. Sturges entertained twenty-one guests at a dinner dance at Eagle Lake Thursday night, a pouring rain failing to put a damper on the enjoyment.

The sweet pea show held Saturday and Sunday demonstrated that Bar Harbor can grow some of the finest flowers anywhere in the country. At the show of the National Society to be held next Summer local gardens are expected to carry off many of the honors. The Kennedy, Blair, Cushman, Gurnee, and Scott estates were largely represented, and carried off a great many awards. In the opinion of expert gardeners it was the best exhibition of its kind ever given here.

Preparations are rapidly being made for the annual hospital entertainment on Aug. 20. It will take the form of vaudeville of various kinds, and will be given as usual at the Casino. It is the big event of the year, and will provide enthusiasts in amateur theatricals with something to keep them busy for the next few weeks. Already rehearsals are well under way. While the details of the performance are being kept under cover, it is known that there will be some notable surprises.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernesto Fabbri entertained fourteen at a dinner at their Summer home Saturday evening, followed by a "movie" show, for which others came in afterwards.

A series of concerts by the Schroeder trio will be held on Tuesday mornings in August at the homes of various social leaders. The first was given Tuesday at the home of Mrs. Walter Graeme Ladd; others will follow at the homes of Mrs. Warner M. Leeds, Mrs. A. Murray Young and Mrs. A. Howard Hinkle.

On Wednesday afternoons beginning Aug. 11 another series of musicales will take place at the Building of Arts, when Fritz Kreisler and Ernest Schelling will give Beethoven sonata recitals. Howard Sturges is acting as the impresario.

Jacob H. Schiff and family, and Otto H. Kahn arrived this week. The Schiffs have one of Philip Livingston's cottages.

Miss Helen Hamilton is the guest of her grandmother, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Sr., at the Jaques cottage.

Mrs. Gouverneur Morris and Mrs. Francis L. Wellman gave a large dinner dance Friday, one of the largest affairs of the Summer.

Mrs. Benjamin C. Tilghman entertained a party of ten at luncheon on Thursday.

AUGUST NUMBER of CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE

(Published by The New York Times.)

Maurice Maeterlinck—

Belgium's greatest man of letters, in the name of Belgium, brings to Poland "The Homage of a Martyred Nation to the Nation Crucified."

Compton Mackenzie—

The brilliant English novelist, paints a vivid picture of "Gallipoli's Shambles" in an account of the murderous fighting now in progress at the Dardanelles.

George Bernard Shaw—

Whose "Common Sense About the War," published in the first number of Current History, is the most widely commented on piece of literature evoked by the war, asserts that "I Am the Gravest Danger" to England in a diverting and characteristically perverse statement.

Friedrich Curtius—

Who collaborated in the preparation of the Hohenlohe Memoirs that burst on Germany like a bombshell a few years ago, discusses "The Psychology of Neutrals."

Sven Hedin—

The noted Swedish explorer and writer, violently assails England in an article entitled "The English Falsehood."

H. H. Asquith—

Prime Minister of Great Britain, recently made a frank declaration to the British public on the financial aspect of the war. The text of his "Silver bullets" speech in the Guildhall, London, is reproduced.

Pierre Loti—

Has recently visited the fast crumbling "Rheims Cathedral." He describes the present condition of the shattered monument in a mournfully beautiful lament.

John Galsworthy—

Many of whose clear-sighted articles upon the war have already appeared in Current History, in a "Note on the Principle of Nationality," contends that Europe's only defense against a recurrence of war lies in the democratization of Germany and Austria-Hungary.

William Archer—

The noted English dramatic critic, pays a graceful tribute to Italy in "Evviva l'Italia."

Arnold Bennett—

One of the foremost of English authors, vigorously belabors the pessimists among his compatriots in an article entitled "Depression—Common Sense and the Situation." He intimates that England is secretly preparing a momentous and possibly decisive enterprise.

Theodore Roosevelt—

Ex-President of the United States, vigorously asserts the necessity of America's arming for possible conflict. His speech at San Francisco on "American Preparedness" will be found in this number.

In no other publication can be found assembled the writings upon the European war of so large and impressive a group of celebrated personages as those quoted above. Yet their articles form only a small part of the rich contents of the August Number of Current History, which covers interestingly, authoritatively and impartially all the phases of the great struggle in Europe. WAIST LINE IS NOW OMITTED

Straight Front and Back, Slightly Curved Sides, with Gown Hanging from the Shoulder, Is One Fashion Seen in the Early Arrivals from Paris.

IT may sound silly to talk of furs in August, but those who deal in them are discussing the subject with vim.

There is much to be said of peltry at this moment. The war has caused serious changes in the handling of it. The order given out by the Russian Government to cease the export of furs from that country has caused two sets of opinions here. Many furriers are delighted that America will have the chance to supply an enormous quantity of peltry and that her trappers will not face a bad Winter. Last season they came near starvation through an order to suspend work for some technical reason connected with the handling of so many skins without a market.

It is said that much of the stock of last year was depleted, although the retailers do not agree with this view, because the brilliancy of the American Winter of 1914-15 with its even temperature did not occasion a wide demand for heavy furs, and the scarcity of money, or, rather, the hoarding of much of it, influenced women to be more economical than they have been for a quarter of a century.

All Prepared in France.

There is no doubt that the cessation of fur exports from Russia to England and France will give the Canadian and Alaskan trappers a busy season, but in normal years such a condition, so advantageous to our commerce, would have had a highly stimulating effect. Now, however, we must reckon with the fact that it was France that prepared the furs for the world, no matter in what land the animals were trapped and skinned.

We were quite content, along with the rest of the fur-wearing peoples, to let Paris shape and dye the skins until they were suitable. Here the fashions in shading and shaping were evolved; here the length and breadth of peltry formation were determined, and no one has so far questioned the annual verdict as it was issued by the French houses, which for decades have been the masters in this kind of work.

It may seem strange to the layman, especially the one that always cries out for American things for American people, that in a peltry-producing country we wait on France to send us back the finished product; but Africa does not cut, polish, and shape its diamonds into the settings that fashionable women prefer. That, too, is done in Paris. One must look at the thing from the point of view of fashion: it is the ruling one.

Furs are not desired in the manner that our far ancestors wore the skins of beasts as a covering. Half the world cares little whether the fur keeps them warm: the object of peltry wearing these days is to add another pound of fashionable clothing to the person for loveliness.

Unless furs are as fashionably shaped as one's frock, they are useless in the shops. No one is more bitterly aware of this than the merchant, who must invest in the new shapes and peltries while thousands of dollars' worth of such merchandise lies in cold storage.

The furriers see to it that the shapes change as often as does the silhouette, or oftener, and this keeps women either buying or altering. The profits are fine, no matter which way the wind blows to those who prepare furs and who are skillful enough to rearrange peltry without much additional expense to their staff.

Fur shaping is a serious business. The majority dislike the work and prefer to give it over to the men who do nothing else. Fur buying is a serious business, because no amount of money invested is a guarantee that the garment will last out the season. As to its being possible for the next Winter, there is rarely any hope. Because of this condition, the dealers in semi-precious furs have reaped a harvest during recent years. Women of wealth would prefer to put their money into a well-dyed-and-shaped piece of peltry whose value did not prevent its being thrown away when its fashion was over. If they avoided the overpopular pieces, such as the colored foxes, the pony skin coats, the stamped moleskin, their semi-precious furs would make a good showing during a short Winter season. These inexpensive furs were not of Paris. They were made here, and some were well made by foreign furriers, who found trade and high wages in this country.

Argentina Looks to Us.

The precious furs from nearly all over the world always went to France, and found their way back to the hands that had produced them. Whether or not Paris can take care of this trade this Summer remains to be seen. She has handled the clothes question with all her old-time skill and not left the rest of the world in doubt concerning the silhouette or materials to be adopted, although she will not attempt to produce her usual immense personal trade for the women who have always gone to her for their clothes. This work she leaves practically to America, the only country, except Argentina, where fashionable clothing is sought and bought. It may be that America will supply Argentina, and it is rumored that several of its buyers are coming to New York to buy French models or their copies.

The non-freedom of the seas has kept the great bulk of American travelers away from France, and there is no reason to doubt, therefore, that the women will buy all their clothes, including furs, from the American merchants who have representatives now in France going their usual two-a-day rounds of the dressmaking houses.

Callot and Cheruit, the two houses that always have a significant influence on American fashion, are not yet open. The latter house always defers its openings until the others have finished their business, although some of the buyers do not wait for the event. It is quite safe to assert, however, that when this is the case the buyer who leaves will receive all the Callot models he desires.

A Chance for Economy.

So, as the huge auction sales in London are not held this year and the Paris openings are not over yet, the furriers here are uncertain which way the wind will blow by October, and this may be the reason that even the most important fur houses here are selling fur garments at unusually low prices. It is a good time for the purchaser who merely wants fur; but the woman who fears being saddled with a garment that is not in keeping with the fashions will go warily about buying peltry now.

Yet there is hope even for her. The world is full of excellent furriers who cut and fit a fur garment with skill, and the price of their work, added to the low price of precious fur now, would not total the amount a woman would have to pay for a new garment or neckpiece when October comes, and she would probably get far better value for her money. She should look at that side of the question when she is asking herself whether or not to buy some of the alluring pieces now offered.

If the experiment of dyeing furs in this country succeeds, it will open up a highly important branch of a big industry and give employment to many skilled workers. It may reduce the price on all fur pieces if, as likely for a year or two, the animals from which the peltry is taken are caught in America and Canada.

The whole dyeing question is so disturbed and so closely related to all branches of women's apparel that no one in the business of selling clothes can fail to discuss it. In the beginning of our trouble in getting the necessary dyes from Germany we started one (or maybe more) dyeing establishment here for the purpose of tiding over the deficiency and avoiding a serious shortage in this country, but, so it is stated, the trade in producing high explosives was so much more lucrative than producing dye for clothing that the latter object was entirely given up. Coal tar products are used for dyes and shells, and one pays far more for one than the other today, so we still face a famine in dyes because no one will allow the chemical products to be diverted from one channel to another.

Who knows if, under these conditions, we may not soon be compelled to wear natural furs as our ancestors did, and white clothing. Wonderful luck for the laundry woman!

Another Change Predicted.

The milliners in Paris, and consequently here, are feeling the scarcity of plumage as their sisters, the dressmakers, are feeling the famine in new cloths. No European woman would wear aigrettes today, not from a sense of belated tenderness toward the birds whose torture they countenanced as did the Americans by making the aigrette fashionable and high-priced, but from a sense of sadness that expresses itself in sober dressing. To wear jewels, gayly colored clothes, aigrettes, flashing and conspicuous novelties, would be in the worst of taste. Even the gayest and most irresponsible set of women in Paris and Vienna would not so offend public opinion; it is certain that such influence must have its weight on the feminine apparel in the world.

Therefore, aigrettes are barred in Europe, also other high-priced plumage. The milliners have turned to simple effects, as they have been doing off and on for several years, but this season the simplicity is not accompanied by soaring prices. There is moderation. Whether or not America will follow their example no one can tell but the milliners here. It is probable that the same truly terrible valuation will be put on French hats or their copies with the explanation that the war risk of getting them adds to their monetary value. If the expensive plumage is lacking and only ribbons or bows of satin prevail, such as the French are wearing now, then it will be difficult to demand a hundred dollars for one hat, as has been done so often that the wealthy pay the price without cavil.

Very High Turban Is Back.

The very high turban, by the way, appears in the new Paris millinery. It is the kind that was exploited two years ago and looks remarkably strange in contrast with the flat shapes we have accepted. When several bows of wide ribbon are added, upstanding, then we seem to be giants. The French have always liked this style of hat far better than the so-called English shapes which have dominated recent millinery, and it is not unlikely that they will swirl them back into first fashion.

Mlle. Forzanne and several leaders of fashion over there are using this hat to the exclusion of all others, even for the theatres, and the Galeries Lafayette are featuring them; so let us look for them.

The shapes are not exaggerated in any of the fashionable hats. They are not even first cousins to those curious things that were adopted by the smartly dressed to their satisfaction and by the badly dressed to their undoing. You remember the hats of yesterday that needed the most skillful posing and perfect coiffing for their success? How many unfortunates went down to their sartorial deaths wearing those shapes! All that was demanded by the hat was missing from their features and expression.

The women in New York are adopting the tiny hat with enthusiasm, probably because they realize that it may be their last chance to get the good out of it. It, too, is unusually becoming. Unless there is exactly the right set of features beneath it, this tip-tilted hat with its foolish little brim is exceedingly trying. It does not need a beauty to wear it; few fashions have been designed with that asset in view. It needs that quality more difficult than mere beauty—indisputable style. This asset is the fetich of our women, not loveliness. All the beauty in the world today only receives the tribute of this remark—how lovely she would be if she knew how to wear her clothes!

NEW MODEL BY PAQUIN.

This coat suit by Paquin is made of green cloth, trimmed with green velvet and braid.

Belted Tunics for Frocks.

It would seem as though that well-known model from France that came over last Spring, with straight front and back and slightly curved sides, is to be the chosen one for early Autumn wear. It is featured by many of the best houses over here, made of silk and of serge, combined with satin. The lines from shoulder to hips are quite straight, chemise-like, with the sides either belted or curved to outline the figure.

They are usually called redingote gowns, because they suggest the new redingote tunic that Cheruit is putting out this Summer. The one-piece frock that carries out the same effect of an unbroken line from shoulder to heel is better than a two-piece suit, which gives more material to be a burden to the figure.

These belted tunics, as the dressmakers often called them, were offered in vain to the majority of our women last March and April, but they were looked at askance as being too unconventional. Now they have become the chief stock of some of the houses that make a practice of dressing the woman who wants to be in the swing of a popular fashion. They are the most convenient type of gown that one can wear. They do not confine the figure at any spot, and cover the surplus of flesh that may give too much of a curve to the figure for agreement with the modern standard.

The majority are of dark blue and many have an acceptable touch of scarlet, either through embroidery or worked buttonholes, through which is run the lacing of ribbon that holds the gown together down the front or back. This omission of hook and eyes or buttons and the substitution of ribbon or silk cord run through prominent buttonholes heavily ornamented with a colored silk is accepted on all sides.

A hostess at a tea, a woman who always has the last thing from Callot or Cheruit, wore a white chiffon frock that swung gracefully away from the figure, and was laced up half its length with white satin ribbon.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

Readers of The Times are particularly requested to read the following before sending queries to the Query Department:

No answers can be given regarding legal or medical matters, card problems, propriety in dress, correctness of English sentences, and values of stamps and coins, nor to questions of a trivial character or of concern only to the questioner.

To receive attention every question must bear the name and address of the person sending it. This does not necessarily mean that the name will be published when the question is answered; only the initials will be used if the questioner so desires. No attention will be paid to queries to which the name and address of the sender are not appended.

Hundreds of letters are received by this department, so that it is obviously impossible to answer all of them immediately. In many cases there must be a certain amount of unavoidable delay.

Poster Stamps.

In answer to Leo H. Laidemar several letters have been received, also the following from the Poster Stamp Club, 327 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The first poster stamps were produced in Germany just as were the first fancy post cards. Picture post cards had become almost a part of the German national life before they were introduced into America, and so it has been with poster stamps. Several German cities are claiming the honor of having originated the poster stamp, among them Nuremberg, Frankfort, and Cologne. It has been said also that the first poster stamp was produced to advertise the Olympic Games of 1910. Certainly there was such a stamp which was printed in sixteen languages, and these stamps affixed to letters sped to the four corners of the globe, each bearing its message in an artistic and forceful manner. Probably poster stamps originated from several sources at approximately the same time, for what could be more natural than that the German, with so many artists famous for their ability to create striking and commanding posters, should use those posters in some reduced form, and in what more natural form than as stickers.

That these bright and attractive little pieces of gummed paper should carry such a message as the date and place of the Olympic games or the date and place of a turn verein or festival, not only throughout Europe but to remote corners of the world, suddenly appealed to several astute manufacturers who already had posters by famous artists in which they had invested large sums, and forthwith the first business advertising stamps were produced. That started it. Municipalities, hotels, tourist resorts, cafés, manufacturing houses and big merchants began using stamps to advertise the virtues of almost everything imaginable from a world's fair to a village festival, from a steamship line to a new toothpaste.

In Europe there have been countless shops where poster stamps were sold, singly, in strips, in sheets, or in packages. There have been shops devoted entirely to the sale and exchange of stamps and periodicals devoted to stamps and stamp collecting. No exposition was complete without its poster stamp. Municipalities competed with each other through poster stamps distributed in great quantities through business houses, through steamship agents, railroad ticket offices, travel bureaus, and hotels. Even charitable institutions realized large sums by selling their official stamps at a few pfennigs each.

From Germany the use of poster stamps spread into Austria, Denmark, Switzerland, Holland, and Italy, and before the war broke out the craze was invading France and had crossed the Channel into England. As proof of the adaptability of the poster stamp to any propaganda, the war has brought forth new uses, and today poster stamps are being sold throughout the British Empire for the benefit of the British Red Cross Fund, the Prince of Wales's Fund, and other relief movements.

In America the steamship companies were among the first to use poster stamps in their advertising campaigns, transplanting the movement from Europe to our own shores. The idea spread, and is spreading here just as it did abroad. Many thousand sets have been issued by advertisers quick to see the advantages in this new medium. Collectors of these stamps have become so numerous that organizations have been started to supply their demands. Poster stamp albums are being manufactured by the thousand, collectors' clubs are being formed, and poster stamp exhibitions have already been held in several principal cities, while everywhere art instructors are beginning to use poster stamps in their class work.

With this tremendous demand for poster stamps it is natural that many should be printed and distributed which are entirely unworthy of a place in any collection. In the beginning poster stamps were simply miniature reproductions of large posters drawn by talented artists, posters so big and forceful in idea as well as execution that they could be made little and still remain impressive, gaining in the reduction an additional quality of fascinating piquancy.

Earning While Learning English.

CH.—Lochiades sends the following:

"I read in the Query Column that Emy Mantilous and Podo Kapoglou were anxious to continue their education, but were unable to attend school on account of ignorance of English and lack of financial means. Beside the Mount Hermon School which you mention, I would propose the American International College, Springfield, Mass.

Direct Route from N. Y. to Shanghai.

Mrs. GRACE SUGG.—There is no direct steamship line sailing from New York to Shanghai via the Panama Canal. Steamships sail from San Francisco.

Difficult Pronunciations.

P. K. B.—Please give pronunciation of Ypres, Przemysl, and mobilize.

The Globe almanac gives the pronunciation of Ypres as Eep'r; Przemysl as Pschem'ishl, the P in this word is, however, silent and it is pronounced more like Schem'ishl; the Century Dictionary gives mo-bil-iz, as the preferred pronunciation of mobilize, the o as in old, accent on the first syllable, first i short like e, last i long as in hide.

Milch Goats.

J. HERBERT ROGERS.—Please tell me who is the leading authority on milch goats.

"Keeping Goats for Profit," by A. Barnes, published by United States Agricultural Department Year Book of 1898, pages 421 to 438; "Milch Goats," by Thompson, published by Animal Industry Bureau, Washington, will probably give you the best information on this subject. Write to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., for prices, &c., of these publications. Both these works, and the following may be consulted at the New York Public Library if you do not care to buy them: "The Goat," by J. Bird, in Farm and Garden Hand Books; "Milch Goats and Their Management," B. Hook, and "The Book of the Goat," H. S. Holmes.

Lottery Ticket.

M. A. P.—What is the value of a United States lottery ticket, by resolution of Congress, dated Nov. 18, 1776?

The above question is referred to THE TIMES readers.

Annual Korean Report.

JOSIAH STRONG.—Where can I procure a copy of the report of the Government General of Korea?

You may consult the last report, 1912-13, at the Public Library, Public Documents Room, No. 220. Ask for the Annual Report on Reforms and Progress of the Residency General in Korea, compiled by the Government General of Cho'seu, which is the native name of Korea.

Pensions to Widows of Spanish-American Veterans.

M. R.—Pensions are granted to widows of Spanish-American war veterans.

New Designs for Gold Coins.

SUBSCRIBER.—What, if any, was the reason given for the change in the design upon our gold coins?

The Report of the Director of the Mint for 1905 gives the following:

In response to a popular demand for the improvement in the designs used on our coinage, the President took steps early in the year 1905 to accomplish this result. * * * It was decided that the first change be made in the gold coins, and St. Gaudens was employed at the request of the President to prepare models for all denominations of gold coins. Double eagles and eagles in limited quantities were coined from the new designs.

Later Dr. William Sturgis Bigelow asked Bela T. Pratt of St. Botolph Studios, Boston, to make designs illustrating the principle of depressing the design below the surface of the coin in order that the flat surface should take the wear and thus protect the design. Mr. Pratt prepared models, using a real Indian head wearing a war bonnet on one side, and the President selected a standing eagle as the device for the other side. The results pleased the President, who ordered coins to be struck at the Philadelphia Mint.

Fortifications of New York Harbor.

L. VAN A.—Please tell me what has been done to fortify New York Harbor against a hostile fleet.

The narrow approaches to the harbor have made the fortification of it a simpler matter than usual. On Sandy Hook is Fort Hancock, with an artillery garrison; on the Narrows Fort Wadsworth, artillery garrison; on the Staten Island side Fort Tompkins; across the Narrows Fort Hamilton.

The older Fort Lafayette, between Forts Hamilton and Wadsworth, is now used as a storehouse. On Governors Island are Fort Jay, infantry; important barracks, and the New York Arsenal of the Ordnance Department. Castle William is now a military prison. Fort Totten, artillery post, is on Willet's Point, and directly across from this battery is Fort Schuyler. On Sandy Hook is the proving ground of the Ordnance Department. A signal corps is stationed at Fort Wood, Bedloe's Island.

State Debts.

E. H. WOOD.—Are any of the States free from debt? When, if ever, was New Jersey free from debt?

All the States, except West Virginia, have State debts. In Pennsylvania the sinking fund exceeds the total debt by $126,351. The public debt of New Jersey is $642,069. A record has not been found of a time when New Jersey was free from debt.

Montessori Training School.

IONA HERRING.—There is no Montessori Training School for Teachers in New York at present, although one may be opened in the Fall. The school is at present established at the exposition at San Francisco. Write to the Montessori Educational Association, 1,840 Caloma Road, Washington, D. C., for their plans for next season.

Trade School for Deaf-Mutes.

J. S.—There is no trade school exclusively for adult deaf-mutes in New York, but you might arrange to receive instructions at some deaf-mute school.

Hopkinson Smith.

H. M. B.—Will you tell me about the Hell Gate engineering work of Hopkinson Smith and anything you can about other work done by him and about his family?

F. Hopkinson Smith was born in Baltimore on Oct. 23, 1838, the son of Francis Hopkinson and Susan Teackle Smith. His father was born in Norfolk, Va., in 1812, served in the Confederate Army, and was Professor of Mathematics in the Virginia Military Institute in Lexington, Va.

His son began life as a clerk in a hardware store at $20 a year. He had been destined for Princeton, but the civil war caused financial reverses in the family and he had to go to work.

He was always interested in painting and received some hints on the subject from an old gentleman in the neighborhood. He was, however, practically self-taught as an artist. He was soon made Assistant Superintendent of his brother's foundry.

From there he went to New York and found a position in an iron business. At twenty-five he determined to become an engineer. He studied and worked, and finally went into business for himself.

His first contract was the construction of the stone ice-breaker around Bridgeport Light. He then constructed the breakwater around Block Island, the cities at the mouth of the Connecticut River, and the sea wall around Governors Island.

In 1870-71 he built the Racerock Lighthouse off New London. Meantime he continued painting and lecturing upon art. He was 35 before he wrote a line for publication. His "Colonel Carter of Cartersville" was the first of a long list of literary successes. No record has been found of any engineering work at Hell Gate.

Block Island.

MRS. M. J. POWERS.—Can Block Island be reached by boat direct from New York? Where can literature regarding the island be procured?

The Sag Harbor and Block Island Route boat leaves New York, Thirty-fourth Street, East River, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 5:30 P. M. and Saturdays at 1 P. M. In July and August a steamer also leaves Fridays at 5:30 P. M.

Information and literature may be obtained from the Montauk Steamboat Company, Pennsylvania Station, New York City. The Passenger Department of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad also issues a booklet on Block Island.

Ivanovici the Composer.

HARRY PERLIS.—Kindly give me some information about Ivanovici, the composer of the "Danube Waves" waltz.

The name of Ivanovici, which seems to be Rumanian, is not found in any of the musical dictionaries. His works, all light dance music and songs, have been published in Germany and Hungary since 1886.

Bankers' Club.

A READER.—Will you kindly let me know, through your esteemed paper, on what date the Bankers' Association will occupy their new headquarters in the Equitable Building?

The Bankers' Club in the Equitable Building was opened on June 30.

World Building Fire.

C. L. L.—Can you give me an account of the burning of the old World Building, giving the date and name of paper published in the building at that time?

The fire occurred on Jan. 31, 1882. The building was a large, brownstone structure on the north side of Beekman Street. Several lives were lost, and terrible scenes took place while the occupants struggled to escape. The loss of property was nearly one million dollars.

The building was owned by Orlando B. Potter, and was known as the World Building because it had formerly been occupied by that paper. Several papers were published there at the time of the fire—The Turf, Field and Farm; Observer; Manufacturer and Builder, Scottish American, and Evening Press. The adjacent TIMES and Evening Mail Buildings were damaged. Faulty construction and trouble with boiler flues were given as the causes of the disaster. About three hundred men, women, and children were daily employed in the various offices.

"Freedom of the Seas."

GRANDMOTHER.—Can you tell us just what is generally meant by "freedom of the seas"?

"Freedom of the seas" is a phrase which has been much used in the present war. It is more or less of a catchword, as there are no restrictions imposed upon the seas by one nation at the expense of the others.

Prisoners and Spies.

F. L. N.—Is the death penalty inflicted upon prisoners of war who try to escape from a detention camp or aid others to escape? Are women spies treated like men?

A prisoner of war, according to The Hague regulations, in attempting to escape does not commit a crime. It is his duty to escape if a favorable opportunity presents itself.

It is equally the duty of his captor to prevent his escape, and he is justified in resorting to any means, not punitive in character, best to secure that end. A prisoner of war may be killed in attempting to escape. If recaptured his confinement may be made more rigorous than before.

For being a spy the punishment is death. To be proved a spy, however, a person must be caught seeking clandestinely, in disguise, or on false pretenses to obtain information in the zone of operations of the belligerent, with the intention of communicating it to the hostile party.

No distinction is drawn technically on account of sex, and women spies caught in the act have been put to death.

Arming Merchant Vessels.

J. P. ANDERSON.—Is a merchant vessel mounting guns for defensive purposes classified under international law as a war vessel?

The position of the United States as to armed vessels, was set forth in a statement of the Department of State on Sept. 20. In that statement these paragraphs related to this particular subject:

A merchant vessel of belligerent nationality may carry an armament and ammunition for the sole purpose of defense without acquiring the character of a ship of war.

The presence of an armament and ammunition on board a merchant vessel creates a presumption that the armament is for offensive purposes, but the owners or agents may overcome this presumption by evidence showing that the vessel carries armament solely for defense.

The statement also defined in detail the course necessary to establish that a merchant vessel was not armed for offensive purposes.

The matter of determining what constituted an armed vessel was made necessary by the action of the German Government early in the European war in complaining that the steamship Adriatic, then at New York, was armed, and that to permit her to clear would be a violation of neutrality. The United States Government ascertained that the Adriatic's armament consisted of a gun mounted in the stern for defensive purposes, and Secretary Bryan ruled that to be so armed was proper and that clearance of the vessel would not constitute a violation of American neutrality.

American Citizens.

W. L. WOOD.—Does the fact of a male child being born in the United States allow him to vote at the age of 21?

England and the United States claim all children born within their territory as citizens no matter what may have been the nationality of their parents. The term "native-born citizen" has caused considerable discussion, however. The children born in this country of aliens, who have a permanent domicile or business in the country, are citizens of the United States, and entitled to the privileges of citizenship.

Voting After One Year.

HENRY SIMMONS.—In certain States, those who declare their intention of becoming citizens are allowed to vote after one year. Does this privilege include the right to vote for all candidates, including national and State officers?

Any one who may vote for a State election may vote for a national election also.

Books for Moving Picture Plots.

M. B.—When a writer wishes to adapt a published book for the moving-picture screen, is it necessary to procure the permission of the author? What is the procedure in the case of a book written by an author no longer living?

The permission of the author is necessary when his work is copyrighted. Film companies usually buy the rights to a book and give it to their scenario writers to be adapted.

An original copyright lasts for twenty-eight years, and may be further secured by will or extension by the original publishers or heirs of the author for a further period of years, making fifty-six years in all. After this period the book is "free."

General Jeffries.

JOHN C. STILES.—A recent article stated that General Jeffries was a graduate of West Point. I cannot find his name in Heitman's and would like to know if Heitman is in error.

General Jeffries's name does not appear in the Biographical Register of Officers and Graduates of the United States Military Academy from 1802 to 1890.

France's Great Guns.

HENRY C. BRIDGES.—Will you give me the dimensions of the French gun as compared to the 42-centimeter of the Germans, and advise me if it is true that the French gun is more efficient and larger than the German?

There is a 37-centimeter gun manufactured at Le Creusot by Schneider & Co., the French Krupps, which, although five centimeters smaller than the German 42, is said to be more deadly, as it fires a larger shell. It is called the Conqueror and has a 14½-inch bore.

The Astor Family.

R. D. Z.—Will you kindly tell me whether the ancestors of the present Astor family were Dutch or German? When did they come to this country, and was the original Astor in the fur business?

John Jacob Astor, who came to America in the latter half of the eighteenth century, was born at Waldorf, Germany, in 1763, and married Sarah Todd, a cousin of Henry Brevoort, in New York in 1785. There are thus both Dutch and German strains in the Astor family, although the first American John Jacob Astor was born in Germany. He died in 1848. His son was William Backhouse Astor, born in 1792, who married Margaret Alida Armstrong in 1818 and died in 1875. The present younger generation of Astors are the great-great-grandchildren of the John Jacob Astor who was born in Germany. Your last question is not quite clear.

Compulsory Military Service.

A. M. H.—Will you kindly tell me where I can obtain a list of foreign countries having compulsory military service?

Great Britain is the only one of the "powers," and the only European nation which does not have compulsory military service.

Ulster.

C. PRICE.—Are there more Protestants than Catholics in Ulster County, Ireland? Is Ulster the richest county?

Ulster is not a county of Ireland, but one of the four provinces into which the island is divided, the others being Leinster, Munster, and Connaught. Ulster contains nine counties. It is the largest and richest Province of Ireland, and Protestants predominate in its population. Among its counties, however, only the counties of Antrim, Down, Armagh, and Londonderry have preponderant Protestant populations. There are more Catholics in Donegal, Fermanagh, Tyrone, Cavan, and Monaghan, but the Protestant counties are all large counties, and Antrim, including the Borough of Belfast, is the largest county in Ireland, and Down is exceeded in population only by Dublin and the County and Borough of Cork, besides Antrim.

Mongolian Citizenship.

L. M.—Will you please tell me whether Chinese and Japanese may become citizens of the United States, and if so, how long they must be here before applying for papers?

The naturalization of Chinese as citizens of the United States is expressly prohibited by the law of 1882. Although the naturalization of Japanese has not been expressly prohibited by any national law, naturalization has been commonly denied Japanese along with Chinese. A few isolated cases of Japanese naturalization have occurred, but in general their naturalization under present law may be said to be practically impossible.

Antwerp.

J. S. F.—Will you kindly decide the following: A says that the Germans took Antwerp on their march to Paris; B says that they did not take Antwerp until after their retreat from Paris. A says that the first battle or fight the English took part in was the defense of Antwerp; B says that they took part in the war on land before the defense of Antwerp. Which is right on each of these points?

The Germans began their retreat from Paris early in September; Antwerp fell Oct. 9. British troops for the relief of Liége landed in France Aug. 8. By Aug. 15 a juncture had been effected of the French, Belgian, and British troops, when the main German army attempted to turn the Allies' left flank. Aug. 24 an Anglo-French force was driven back, in battle before Mons and Charleroi. British forces formed the left of the Allies' northern army facing the main German advance in the retreat near St. Quentin Aug. 24, 25, and 26. It was announced Aug. 25 that the British casualties already amounted to more than 2,000. It is not necessary to trace British activities on until the siege of Antwerp, as the record of August participation shows that B's contention was correct.

English Aid for San Francisco.

CONSTANT READER — Will you please tell me how much the English contributed for the relief of the sufferers from the great San Francisco earthquake?

Aid from foreign countries, generously offered after the San Francisco earthquake, was refused by the President. Japan was the only country that sent a contribution in spite of the refusal.

"The Star-Spangled Banner."

W. E. D.—Will you kindly inform me whether "America" or "The Star-Spangled Banner" is our national anthem?

It is "The Star-Spangled Banner," and not "America," which has been popularly accepted as our national anthem. The tune of "America" is of course the same as "God Save the King" and other national songs and hymns.

The Neutrality of Belgium.

A. M. G.—Will you kindly inform me through the medium of your paper whether the United States at any time entered into any agreement or understanding at The Hague with France, England, and Germany for the neutrality of Belgium?

The United States has not entered into any treaty for the protection of the neutrality of Belgium. It was a signatory to the provision of The Hague conference declaring the territory of all neutral nations inviolable.

Direct Election of Senators.

D. I. P.—How is it that in New York State the United States Senators are now elected by the people directly, while the Constitution of the United States states that Senators shall be elected by the Legislatures of the various States? Are there any other States in the Union in which Senators are elected by the direct vote of the people?

By an amendment to the United States Constitution all United States Senators, in all parts of the country, are elected by the direct vote of the people. This amendment, which is known as the Seventeenth Amendment, was declared in force May 31, 1913, having received the necessary ratification of two-thirds of the States. The amendment was ratified by all the States except Alabama, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, and Virginia.

Weston's Record.

J. R. B.—I have made a wager that Weston has walked thirty miles for seven days—that is, 210 miles within seven days. Would you be kind enough to give me some records that would decide this wager?

If you mean to wager that Weston walked thirty miles a day for seven consecutive days you are wrong, for Weston, in his scheduled feats, never walked on Sundays. The best walk he ever did was from New York to Los Angeles, 3,483 miles, from Feb. 1 to May 2, or seventy-seven actual walking days.

The Area of Manhattan Island

READER.—Will you please tell me the area of Manhattan Island, width and length?

The area of Manhattan Island is twenty-one square miles. The area of New York City, all boroughs, is 314¾ square miles.

Wines in Europe.

JUNIUS S.—Will you kindly tell me the production and consumption of wines in France, Germany, and Italy during the years 1910-1914?

It is impossible to give the annual figures for the years you mention, as they are not yet fully available. The following figures of wine production, which may be taken as a fair average, are for the year 1913: France, 1,166,885,278 gallons; Germany, 26,417,00 gallons; Italy, 1,366,524,993 gallons. The available figures as to the consumption of wine are for the year 1909, and are as follows: France, 1,541,406,000 gallons; Germany, 74,602,000 gallons; Italy, 1,011,982,000 gallons. These figures are, of course, for the production and consumption of wines only, and do not include malt liquors or alcohol.

National Legislation.

A. R.—Will you kindly tell me what the Clayton act refers to, also the Trust Commission bill and the Shipping bill?

The Trust Commission bill and the Shipping bill are practically self-defined, in so far as what they refer to is concerned. The Clayton act is the latest bill for the control of trusts, and differed from previous legislation and from other acts proposed chiefly in exempting the "labor of man" from legislative control as a "commodity." The Shipping bill aimed to set up a basis for the establishment of a national merchant marine.

Contributions to the War

C. F. W.—Can you inform me if the Mother Church of the Christian Science body, in Boston, has made, at any time since the present war began, corporate and stated contributions to the relief of any of the suffering or sufferers? If so, what amount and when and where applied?

The Query Column cannot publish the facts you ask, or answer questions regarding the finances or benefactions of the Christian Science Church or other religious body. We would suggest that you refer to the church offices direct.

The Commission on Industrial Relations.

RAYMOND QUICK.—Knowing your paper to be the most reliable for its editorials on modern topics, I would like to ask you to kindly give me some information about the United States Industrial Relations Commission, or tell me where I could obtain such information, taking its use, origin, progress, and accomplishments.

The Commission on Industrial Relations, which has its official headquarters at Washington and its field headquarters at Chicago, was organized according to an act of Congress, approved Aug. 23, 1912. The section having to do with the outlining of the commission's work was as follows:

"That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employes; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employes and the provision for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employes; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage-earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employes; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employers and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor, and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the method by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendations as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon."

Frank P. Walsh of Kansas City is Chairman of the commission, the members of which are Professor John R. Commons of Madison, Wis.; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman of New York City; Harris Weinstock of Sacramento, Cal.; S. Thruston Ballard of Louisville, Ky.; John B. Lennon of Bloomington, Ill.; James O'Connell of Washington, D. C.; Austin B. Garretson of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Lewis K. Brown, Secretary.

The places, time, and subjects of the commission's meetings in 1914 were as follows: Washington, D. C., April, general industrial conditions, collective bargaining, &c.; New York City, May and June, employment offices and unemployment, the American Federation of Labor, the Socialist Party, and the Industrial Workers of the World, State mediation and arbitration of industrial disputes, the building trades of New York City, industrial education and apprenticeship, and the administration of the child labor laws, the men's garment trade of New York City, the cloak workers of New York City, the department stores of New York City; Paterson, N. J., June, industrial conditions and relations, in Paterson; Philadelphia, June, general industrial conditions and relations, the co-operative plan of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, the metal trades of Philadelphia, the women's garment industry, industrial education and vocational training, the glass and pottery industries; Boston, July, the smuggling of Asiatics into the United States; Chicago, July, industrial conditions and relations in Chicago; Lead, S. D., August, industrial conditions in Lead; Butte, Mon., August, industrial conditions in the mining industry; Seattle, Wash., August, general industrial conditions, logging camps, &c., Asiatic smuggling; Portland, Ore., August, general industrial conditions and the fishing industry; San Francisco, August, open and closed shop, seasonal labor problem, unemployment, labor conditions in construction camps, collective bargaining, industrial accident compensation; Los Angeles, September, general industrial conditions in Southern California. The commission has recently been investigating the Colorado miners' strike.

Samoa and Our Islands.

LADY.—Can you tell me where I can find particulars of the Samoan Islands? I wish to know how the United States acquired Manua and what it is good for, and whether we own any other island.

Information as to the Samoan group of islands may be found in any good encyclopedia or geography. The islands form an archipelago in the Pacific Ocean, on the direct line between San Francisco and Auckland. The group is about 4,200 miles from San Francisco. There are fourteen islands, the German group being made up of Savaii, Monona, Apolima, Upolu, Fanua, Capu, Muutele, and Muulua; the American of Tutuila, Anua, Ofu, Oloseuga, Manua, Tau, and Rose. The principal islands of the group are Savaii, 660 square miles; Upolu, 340 square miles; Tutuila, 54 square miles, and the Manua group. The total population of the islands is about 39,000, of whom 500 are white. Rose is an uninhabited coral island.

The others are fertile in soil and beautiful in scenery. Copra and cocoa beans are their chief exports. The American Islands came into our possession by virtue of the tripartite treaty with Germany and Great Britain in 1899. Tutuila possesses the most valuable island harbor in the South Pacific, and, perhaps, in the entire Pacific Ocean. Commercially the island, with its attendant islets, is unimportant at present, but is very valuable in its relations to the commerce of any nation desiring to cultivate trans-Pacific relations. The civil Government is administered by a Governor, a naval officer nominated by the Navy Department, and appointed by the President. The American Navy Department has jurisdiction over the civil affairs of the American islands.

Sex Ratio in Population.

E. J. V., Jr.—Please tell me the latest recorded proportion of males to females in the United States.

By the census of 1910 the general proportion was 104 males to each 100 females. Females are in the majority at the present time in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maryland, North and South Carolina, and the District of Columbia.

The Straits of Gibraltar.

J. S.—The Straits of Gibraltar, which are thirty-six miles long, are fourteen and a half miles wide at their narrowest point, the eastern end, and twenty-four miles wide at their western entrance.

Copper Mines.

A. F. G.—German copper mines are in the Mansfeld district of the Prussian Province of Saxony and near Arnsberg in the Sauerland. Austria-Hungary has some copper mines in Hungary and the Salzburg region.

A French Title.

C. D. P.—Will you kindly let me know if there was ever a Marquise de Poleon, and if so please give me a brief account of the title?

We have found no mention in French records of this title.

The Boer War.

SUBSCRIBER D.—Will you please inform me what was the attitude of the prominent American newspapers toward the Boers during their war with England?

With a very few exceptions the attitude of the American press during the Boer war was that of a strict impartiality. Many prominent newspapers showed a feeling of real sympathy with the Boers, coupled with a sense that their organization stood in the way of progress and must inevitably be "forced to the wall." This sympathy, however, did not denote any anti-British feeling, and there was a notable absence of side-taking.

Adelina Patti.

J. S.—Adelina Patti was born in Madrid of Italian extraction.

Southern States.

R. S. GARRISON.—Will you kindly tell me if there has ever been a negro Governor of any Southern State, and if so of what State?

No Southern State has been governed by a negro.

Discolored or Spotty Skin Easily Peeled Off

The freckling, discoloring or roughening to which most skins are subject at this season, may readily be gotten rid of. Mercolized wax, spread lightly over the face before retiring and removed in the morning with soap and water, completely peels off the disfigured skin. Get an ounce of wax at any druggist's. There's no more effective way of banishing tan, freckles or other cutaneous defects. Little skin particles come off each day, so the process itself doesn't even temporarily mar the complexion, and one soon acquires a brand new, spotless, girlishly beautiful face.

EDITORIAL

We Quote the "Denver Post" Today:

"The privilege of ordering goods and then returning them to the sender is one that is part of the plain, forthright system of trusting the good faith of the customer upon which our national business has prospered and grown. Nevertheless any excellent thing may be spoiled by abuse. And this privilege of 'return' is unquestionably being abused by thousands of housewives who do business with our great retail stores. Many of them do it thoughtlessly. They are so used to the courtesy extended by the merchant that they order things without any real intention of keeping them. The result is that the store loses the cost of delivering and calling for the goods as well as the display of them for sale during a day or two."

It is indeed true that our national prosperity is due to liberality. It is not only true, but typically American. As The Post says, "Any excellent thing may be spoiled by abuse." The return privilege, which for decades past has been fostered by every store, is now proving to be a very serious menace.

For five or six years past the "return goods evil" has received more than its share of consideration at merchants' meetings and elsewhere, where business matters are discussed. Some merchants have gone so far as to LAY DOWN STRICT RULES governing the return of goods sent on approval. For the most part, however, nothing has been done except fume and fret and WATCH THE ABUSE GROW.

A few weeks ago we conceived the idea of laying this phase of our business before the tribunal of the buying public. We published an article in which we outlined the insidious effect of the "return goods evil." We asked your support—moral and otherwise. We were frank with you and, in turn, you have been FRANK with us. Many of our best customers have pledged their support. They have taken up the cause of "BUY WHAT YOU WANT AND KEEP WHAT YOU BUY." We confidently believe we have accomplished a great deal.

"Talk it over with your friends."

HAPPENINGS IN MOTORDOM DURING THE WEEK

SCENIC TOUR GIVES 1,000 MILES OF GOOD MOTORING

Route Through Most Beautiful Portion of New York State, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania Is Marked by Much Fine Highway.

The Scenic Tour, embracing some of the most beautiful sections of New York State, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, is aptly named and presents a powerful appeal to discerning motorists in the remarkable variety of the scenery included within its compass and the gratifying proportion of good road surface. Perhaps in no other part of the world could an itinerary be drawn up to include so much that is of interest within a distance of about 1,000 miles.

The tour traverses fair districts like the Delaware Valley, the Valley of the Susquehanna, and the Finger Lake region, each famed for the alluring nature of its beauty in gentle contrast to the wonders of Niagara. Not less attractive are the Catskills, through which the route rambles on the homeward stage; there is a softness and a friendliness about this wooded wilderness along the Hudson that draws large numbers of motorists.

The route, as laid out by the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America, enables the motorist to enjoy, on his run to the Delaware Water Gap, the charm of northern New Jersey at its best, as the first 84 miles are covered by way of Montclair, Morristown, and Hackettstown. A particularly pleasant side run on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware extends to Milford and back to the Water Gap along the woody banks of the river, before beginning the second day's run over Pocono Mountain and Bear Creek to Wilkes-Barre on the Susquehanna, or to Scranton. From New York the distance to Scranton is 163 miles.

Northward from Scranton the attractive and typical scenery of northern Pennsylvania is enjoyed up to the State line, just south of Kirkland, and at Binghamton a west turn once more along the Susquehanna River leads through Owego, Waverly and Elmira to beautiful Watkins Glen.

Though not as imposing as the famous Ausable Chasm in the Adirondacks, Watkins Glen is graced with a characteristic beauty of its own, and is visited on that account by thousands of travelers from all parts of the world, either bent on pleasure or in search of health through the agency of its medicinal springs. Watkins, a mileage of 308 from New York, is a centre from which a number of delightful trips may be made through the Finger Lakes, including such noted sheets of water as Seneca Lake, Cayuga Lake, and, on the west, Canandaigua and Keuka Lakes. Not only is this section richly endowed by nature in the matter of scenic attractiveness, but advantage has been taken of the fertility of its soil to establish some of the most valuable vineyards in the State of New York upon its hillsides.

Running north, parallel with Seneca Lake, the route joins the main road to the west, between Geneva and Flint, and, swinging west, passes through a district noted for its rich pastoral land, conspicuous features of the landscape being its prosperous looking stock farms. At Batavia, on the way to Buffalo, an interesting reminder of earlier days is the collection, preserved in the Holland Purchase Land Office, of relics of western New York's pioneer times.

Buffalo, the extreme westerly point of the tour, lies 137 miles from Watkins Glen, by way of Flint, Canandaigua and Batavia, and 575 from New York. A magnificent new boulevard leads from Buffalo to Niagara Falls, rendering a visit to the grandest and most impressive of the natural wonders of America a matter of the greatest ease. Several days' stay may conveniently be made here, as the neighborhood of the Great Lakes is full of interest and well repays a visit.

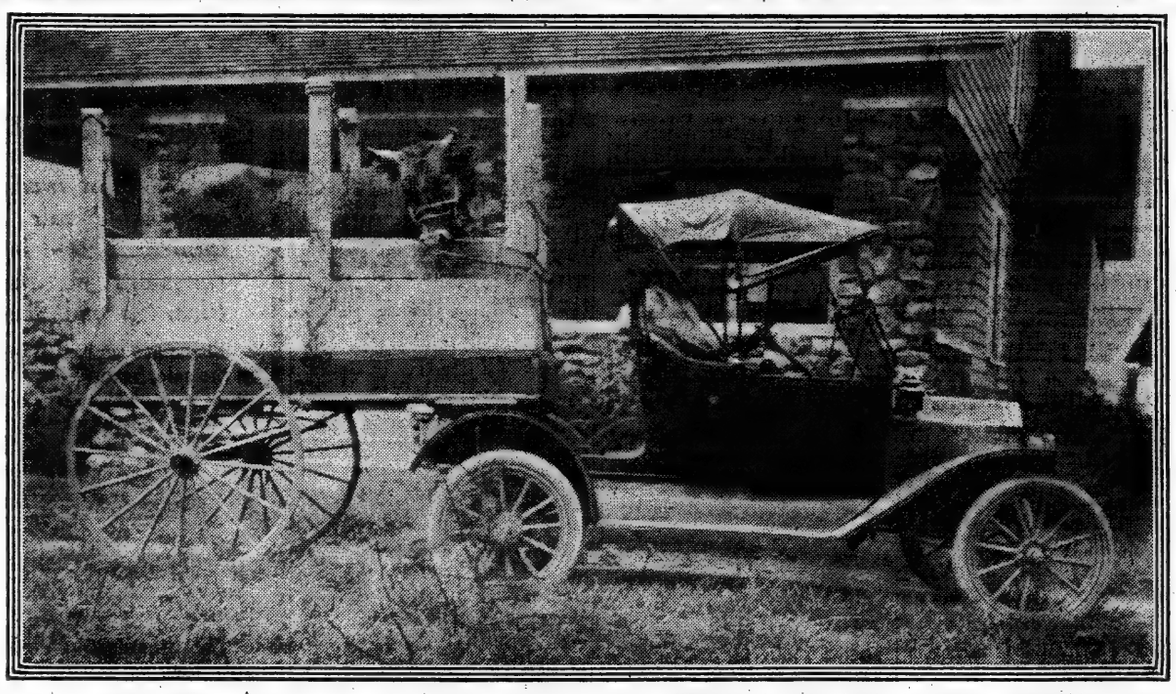
Retracing its steps through Batavia and Canandaigua the route passes Geneva, a pleasant little city at the northern end of Seneca Lake, noted for its extensive horticultural nurseries and for the New York State Experimental Farm maintained there. Keeping north of the Finger Lakes, the city of Auburn, 130 miles from Buffalo, is suggested as a suitable stopping place for the night.

A charming bit of country succeeds, as the road passes south between Owasco Lake and Skaneateles to Cortland, and the fertile dairy-farming section of New York State is traversed to Richfield Springs and Cooperstown. This interesting town on Lake Otsego, 130 miles from Auburn, possesses a special charm for all lovers of Fenimore Cooper's narratives of forest life, not a few of his most living scenes being laid in this picturesque neighborhood.

As the route leaves Cooperstown and proceeds through Milford and Davenport to Stamford, the subtle spell of the Catskills begins to be evident, as the soft expanse of wooded vale and swelling hilltop emerges into view.

Threading this unrivaled section of New York's vacation land, the route passes through Grand Gorge, Arkville, and Shandaken to Phoenicia in the heart of the Catskills, and follows the course of the Esopus River to historic Kingston, passing on the way the giant Ashokan Reservoir. Through the foothills of the Catskills, by Napanoch, Wurtsboro, and Cuddebackville, the road once more reaches the Delaware Valley and crosses the river at Port Jervis on its way to the pleasant little town of Milford, 174 miles from Cooperstown.

Back again by way of Port Jervis, Slate Hill is passed through to Goshen, a place noted for its stock farms, on which many a speedy exponent of the typically American trotting style has been raised. Through Chester and Tuxedo, famed for its beautiful residential park, the route runs south to Suffern, where an easterly turn is taken for the Hudson at Nyack. Crossing the ferry to Tarrytown, the 1,000-mile run is completed by the final spin down the Albany Post Road, through Irvington, Hastings, and Yonkers, to New York by way of Broadway.



EVEN ON THE FARM THE TRACTOR PRINCIPLE IS USEFUL NOWADAYS.

This shows how James H. Jones of South Hadley, Mass., a retired automobile engineer, uses a Ford roadster with a 1,500-pound capacity spring wagon. The two are coupled together with a Martin rocking fifth wheel. This method of utilizing the trailer idea gives plenty of weight for traction, and the wagon can be backed to any position. It can be disconnected in a few minutes and the car used as a runabout. The picture shows Mixter Demonstrator, a Guernsey bull, recently bought by Mr. Jones.

MOTOR EXPORTS DOUBLE IN A YEAR

Value for Eleven Months Ended with May Was $46,889,835—Truck Shipments Jumped.

For the first time since the beginning of the European war a year ago the exports of passenger automobiles from the United States for May last show an increase both in number and valuation over the exports of a corresponding month in 1914. They were, in fact, larger than ever before in any one month since the beginning of the industry. This shows a remarkable recovery of the foreign trade in pleasure cars following its demoralization last Fall.

The phenomenal development of motor truck exports, which began last September, still continues, the shipments in May nearly doubling in value the foreign shipments of passenger cars. Figures for May, 1914 and 1915, as given by the Department of Commerce, are as follows:

	May, 1914		May, 1915.
	No.	Value.	No.	Value.
Commercial	99	$127,024	2,426	$6,583,912
Passenger	3,157	2,857,601	4,821	3,971,488
Total	3,256	$2,984,625	7,247	$10,555,595

Figures for eleven months indicate that when the Government report for the fiscal year ended June 30 is issued it will be found that the value of automobile exports for the twelve-month was more than double that of the preceding fiscal year. Comparative figures for the eleven-month period are:

	1914.		1915.
	No.	Value.	No.	Value.
Commercial	694	$1,061,354	11,006	$30,561,880
Passenger	26,324	23,522,081	19,462	16,327,955
Total	27,018	$24,583,435	30,468	$46,889,835

While an analysis of official returns made by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce shows that exports of passenger cars for the first five months of this year were a little less in number and valuation than during the corresponding period last year, this decrease will have been considerably more than made up when the figures for June, completing the first half of the year, are available.

UPHOLSTERY GIVEN CAREFUL THOUGHT

Great Demand for Leather and Its Advantages—Planning the Seats.

Market conditions, whether due to a scarcity of hides or manipulation, did not deter some of the larger automobile manufacturers from specifying the retention of leather upholstery for the new models recently announced. The leather to be found in some of the new models is all hand-buffed, bright finish, with straight grain. This meant an additional expense, since the straight grain leather does not cut up so well as does the pebble-grain finish from an economical standpoint. It serves, however, to give the car a character both striking and distinctive.

Being soft and pliable, leather does not crack in handling, nor does it soil easily. Leather will not absorb moisture; hence, should a car be caught out in a rainstorm without the top raised, water would not soak into the cushions, rendering them unfit for use until thoroughly dried out.

For filling the cushions a long curled hair has been found to give the cushions springiness and to help materially in retaining shape. Other materials commonly used for filling purposes in upholstery work have been found to knot and flatten, very frequently giving the cushions an appearance of lumpiness with a consequent uncomfortable hardness. These facts are always to be taken into consideration by persons who pride themselves on the appearance of their car as much as they would on the looks and state of their household furnishings or the piano.

Another improvement in the seats for new models to which one manufacturer has directed attention is the new type of wire frame, fully braced, to which the springs are tied. This also helps to keep the cushions in their proper shape. Slightly tilted seats, with the back of the driver's seat shaped, have not only been found comfort-adding, but the latter improvement serves to permit the operator of the car free and unrestricted movement in handling the wheel.

The automobile manufacturers using leather upholstery from necessity placed their orders several months ago. The tanners insist on the placing of orders at least six months in advance of requirements. This is due to the fact that from two to three months' time is required for bringing the hide from its rough to its finished state, and also for the reason that sufficient time may be had for securing the supply. The United States is now dependent upon foreign countries to a large extent for its requirements in the matter of hides. This is due in a measure to the fact that the great ranges of the West are being cut up into small farms. Long continued droughts also deprived the stockmen of feeding grounds, so that, finding it becoming unprofitable, many have abandoned the industry, marking the passing of the cowboy as an institution other than in the "movie" pictures.

Then the European war has had the effect of closing some of the markets upon which the United States has been dependent for making up its deficiencies, although Argentina has been of considerable help in supplying the heavy demands of manufacturers of automobiles, boots and shoes, harness and other leather goods. When it is considered that one large automobile manufacturer will alone require something like 200,000 hides for the 1916 production of motor cars the extent of the demand for leather can be somewhat appreciated.

CAN WATCH "MOVIES" MADE

Motorists on Fine Short Run to Bear Mountain Pass Outdoor Stages.

Practically every one has a desire to see the stars and lesser lights of the film world at work before the camera. The automobilist can satisfy this desire and incidentally cover a one-day trip that from a standpoint of good roads and beautiful scenery would be hard to excel. The trip in question is from New York to Bear Mountain, the park under the control of the Palisades Interstate Park Commission, and a part of the gift of Mrs. Mary W. Harriman, widow of E. H. Harriman, together with $1,000,000 for the establishment of a "playground for the people."

The route is as follows: Riverside Drive and Lafayette Boulevard to Dyckman Street, turn west, crossing the Hudson by the Dyckman Street Ferry. On the Jersey side ascend the Palisades by the new road which has recently been completed by the Interstate Park Commission, considered one of the finest pieces of road engineering in the country, and about a mile in length.

From the top of the Palisades the way continues directly west on Palisades Avenue, one mile to corner of Engle Avenue, (bank building on right.) At this point a sign will be found reading "Bear Mountain Inn 35 miles," with red arrow pointing north. From this point to Bear Mountain the road is plainly marked with similar signs at all corners. Route is through Tenafly, Cresskill, Demarest, Closter, Norwood, Northvale, Tappan, Orangeburg, Blauvelt, West Nyack, Valley Cottage, Congers, Haverstraw, Stony Point, and Tompkins Cove to Bear Mountain.

When the motorist reaches the neighborhood of Blauvelt and West Nyack very frequently he will be treated to the novel sight of the "movie" stars making a "scene" along the highway. In this section there are two motion-picture companies and interesting spectacles are often seen in the vicinity; the "make-up," stage settings, &c., always arrest the attention of the passing motorist. At Tappan the route goes right by the old stone house in which Major André was confined after his capture across the river near Tarrytown.

TRIES TO SELL TRADE-MARK.

Agent for Autos in Argentina Causes No Little Trouble.

A striking instance of trade-mark misappropriation in Argentina has just been brought to the attention of the Department of Commerce, and is cited here for the benefit of American manufacturers who may have neglected to obtain the registration of their trade-marks in that country. Some years ago the trade-mark of a prominent American automobile company was registered in Argentina by an unauthorized person and was subsequently bought up by the agent of that concern. The agent is now demanding a large sum of money for transferring to the manufacturers their own trade-mark and is threatening to prevent the sale of the automobiles bearing that mark unless his terms are met.

The situation confronting the company is the payment of an exorbitant amount for the privilege of using its own mark, with the alternative of an expensive litigation and crippled business. Such experiences emphasize the necessity of early registration in countries where registration and not prior use gives ownership in a mark.

IMPORT TAX ON OUR CARS IN ENGLAND URGED

British Motor Authority Wants Duty of 45 Per Cent. Put on American Product to Prevent Loss of Entire Market at Home.

Some agitation for an import tax on motor vehicles is to be noted in England at present. On this head H. Massac Buist, writing in The London Morning Post, says:

"Whereas our motor factories cannot produce cars for supply to the public because they are wholly engaged on war work, the American industry is importing duty free into this country just as many motor vehicles for sale to the public as it can book shipping accommodation for, such accommodation having been already arranged for sailings in February, 1916.

"Every penny paid for such imported vehicles goes out of the country as absolutely as the money we are spending for ammunition from America. But on the one import there is no use imposing any duty, because the nation pays for the ammunition, and on the other import there are many reasons for imposing a duty at such a juncture as this.

"The best reason of all is that with the monopoly of the world's markets and through the enormous scale on which it has now established itself, the highly protected American motor industry is able to supply motor cars, vehicle size for vehicle size, at anything up to 50 per cent. cheaper than our own unprotected industry, hampered by labor conditions and so forth, would be able to do if it were today in the position of being free to offer cars for sale to the public.

"Therefore, though we are at war and though the British citizen requiring a motor vehicle today cannot purchase anything that will give employment to British labor, but must instead buy a machine which represents money sent abroad, he is nevertheless in the position of having his requirements fulfilled for anything from three-quarters to only half the cost of a home-made machine that would do equivalent work.

"At the moment I am not entering into details of design, of engine efficiency, and such like technicalities, but am only considering car size and equipment against car size and equipment; in other words, an American machine that will serve a given purpose well enough against a British one that will also serve that purpose, to which end nice points like freedom from vibration in the working of the machinery, flexibility, and similar qualities are of no account in war-time. Why, therefore, are these foreign vehicles still imported into this country in ever-increasing quantities without any tax being imposed on them, though America has still a tariff wall of 45 per cent. established against our attempt to export cars to the United States?

"Let us at once put a war tax of 45 per cent. on all American cars imported into this country during the war, and still it will be no hardship on the individual in these islands who must possess himself of a motor vehicle at this juncture, because he will be buying a completely equipped motor car capable of doing the work he requires, which, after the import duty has been paid on it, will cost him no more than a similarly equipped British-made vehicle of equal size and capacity."

PLAN UNIFORM SYSTEM FOR MARKING HIGHWAYS

Authorities in Several States, Says Hugo, Are Devising a Scheme to Make Signs Alike in Character and Well Distributed.

By FRANCIS M. HUGO, Secretary of State.

During the past few months comprehensive plans have been formulated by the highway authorities in some of the adjoining States for marking the prominent touring routes. The scheme suggested, which, by the way, promises to be the most extensive official road-making project ever undertaken, contemplates establishing a system of uniform sign posting along the principal routes through these States, giving names of places and distances.

For years motorists touring upon the public highways have been impressed by the chaotic conditions of road sign posting throughout the country. They have realized the inadequacy and total absence of uniformity of the signposts, such as have been erected by local authorities, usually lacking in any intelligent system of anticipating the needs of motor tourists. In some districts these signs have been numerous, while in others practically absent.

The scheme now proposed is to be a development of a system already in use by a few local motor clubs. By marking fences, telegraph poles and signposts along the principal routes with bands of uniform colors, much improvement has been accomplished over the old system, which it was necessary for motor tourists to examine closely before they were certain as to their route. With the new plan they will have no difficulty in finding their way whenever touring through these sections.

As far as is known, none of the states included in the plan now proposed have undertaken anything toward the adoption of a uniform system of marking their highways. From time to time certain motor clubs have advocated the appropriation of the public moneys toward this project and in some Commonwealths already the localities have been required by law to mark out their roads with signposts, but these highway markers have not been made uniform,

It has been suggested before that if a small appropriation could be obtained for the purpose of inaugurating some uniform system, the State, cities, villages, and local motor clubs would join in posting the various routes through their precincts. As the details of these plans are all that remain to be agreed upon, motorists in a short time will probably cease to experience inconveniences and delays.

BALANCED WEIGHT BRINGS LIGHTNESS

Proportion of Load Above and Below Car Springs Big Factor in Modern Autos.

In the early days of the automobile industry, heavy weight was deemed necessary to hold a car to the road, but experience and experiment have done much to explode this idea and to create the present tendency toward light weight.

Holding the road, it has been found, depends on the proper relation of the weight of a car above and below the springs, and the type of spring suspension. On this principle, light weight properly distributed and properly supported is better suited for holding the road than heavy weight. In the case of a heavy car going over the road, its heavy axles and wheels strike obstructions with greater force than in the case of a light car, with the result that the corresponding rebound off these obstructions is greater than with a light car. This condition naturally keeps the wheels in the air a greater length of time, so that the heavy weight of the car as a whole is given the chance to swing the car from side to side, since it meets no resistance from the road.

Light weight in parts below the springs makes it easy for the pressure of the springs to hold the wheels in contact with the ground. With the axles and wheels being light in weight the pounding effect against the springs from below is not as great as if these parts were heavy, and the effectiveness of the springs in resisting this pounding is so much the greater.

Few people realize the fine point involved in the use of the proper weight above the springs. This must be chosen in order to produce the proper amount of pressure to help the spring action in holding the wheels to the ground. If this weight is made too great, it will, in turn, make it necessary for the axles and wheels to have greater weight, which is undesirable. If it is too light, then the proper pressure through the springs will be affected.

Locomotives of the modern type are examples of what spring suspension means in holding the road. No engineer would run a locomotive around curves at the speeds commonly made, were it not for springs that permit side sway. This sidewise flexibility in an automobile will permit the body to swing from one side or the other with relation to the chassis. Springs that are rigid in this sidewise direction permit the weight of the body and passengers to pull the chassis with it, producing skidding, while lateral flexibility allows the body to move to the side while the chassis remains in its course.

EXPECT DEMAND FOR PARTS

Foreign Army Officer Says Truck Makers Will Need Them Later.

American manufacturers of motor truck parts should prepare now for the end of the war, according to an officer of one of the belligerent nations who is now in this country on business connected with the shipment of munitions and motor trucks. His statement was made in answer to a question concerning the effect the end of the war would have on American truck makers, many of whom have been busy in recent months with war orders. In explanation, the officer continued:

"Here in America motor trucks are turned out in such great quantities that the making of separate units of construction such as axles, motors, and transmissions has become an industry in itself. The business has developed to such an extent that the truck manufacturer need not make all these parts for himself. In Europe, however, the tendency has not been that way. Every manufacturer of motor trucks has made as many of the parts that entered into his truck as he could. As a consequence the parts business in Europe has never reached the prominence it has in the United States.

"But with the end of the war there will be a tremendous demand for trucks in every European country and many manufacturers in France, Germany, Austria, and England who have heretofore made the entire truck will, if they wish to hold their trade in their own countries, be forced to buy motor and axle units outside and become to a large extent assemblers. There is where American parts makers will come in. I have outlined this situation to several makers of internal gear drive axles already, as that is the type of motor truck axle that is most popular in Continental Europe, and the experience during the war, I am in a position to say, has strengthened makers in their advocacy of it."

Canada Building Motor Road.

The Canadian Government is constructing a motor road to the summit of Mount Revelstoke, which will be completed this year and opened for traffic next season. Mount Revelstoke is 6,000 feet high, and when completed this route will be a popular trip for motorists. Golf links and a ski course have been laid out on the mountain. There is a ski club at Revelstoke, which will be the centre for Winter sports for this province.

BIG ROAD CONGRESS AT OAKLAND, CAL.

Leading Authorities on Highway Building and Administration Are to Speak.

Nelson P. Lewis, Chief Engineer of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of New York City, has been selected by the Program Committee of the Pan-American Road Congress to present a paper on the subject of "Highway Indebtedness; Its Limitation and Regulation." Other New Yorkers who will take part in the Congress are George W. Tillson, Consulting Engineer, Borough of Brooklyn; H. E. Breed, First Deputy, and S. D. Gilbert, Auditor, of the New York State Highway Department, and Henry Welles Durham of New York City.

The advance official program of the Congress shows that twenty-seven separate subjects will be discussed during the ten sessions, these subjects covering practically the entire field of road and street construction and maintenance and the organization and administration of highway affairs. The method pursued is to secure the preparation of a paper on the subject assigned by the committee by some authority actively engaged in the particular class of work concerning which his paper treats, and thus bring to bear the fullest possible presentation of the problems connected with the subject.

The Pan-American Road Congress will convene at the Municipal Auditorium, Oakland, Cal., Monday morning, Sept. 13, and continue until Friday night. The opening address will be made by Governor Charles W. Gates of Vermont, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Congress. He will be followed by Governor Johnson of California, Mayor Davis of Oakland, and Director of Congresses Barr of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, who will deliver addresses of welcome. Addresses in response will be made by George W. Tillson, President of the American Road Builders' Association, and Fairfax Harrison, President of the American Highway Association. The Congress is to be held under the joint auspices of these two associations, assisted by the Tri-State Good Roads Association of California, Oregon, and Washington, and the Pacific Highway Association.

For those who desire to make the Congress the central feature of some weeks of sightseeing a special train will be provided. This train will leave Chicago on Sept. 2 and proceed by easy stages to allow for visiting points of unusual interest, reaching Oakland Sept. 12. Returning after the Congress the train will leave Oakland Sept. 19 and reach Chicago Oct. 2. This train will carry every convenience that modern travel can suggest for the comfort of its passengers.

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE AUTOMOBILE TRADE

After considering 105 reports sent in by dealers from many parts of the country who participated in the Saxon "Six" economy drive, judges of the contest have awarded first prize to C. F. Seaward, Jr., of Kokomo, Ind., who covered the distance from Detroit to Kokomo, 327 miles, at an average of 20.2 miles per gallon of gasoline. Only one quart of oil was used. Over half the way the roads were in bad condition. The total distance covered by the 105 dealers was 26,377 miles, each dealer averaging 252 miles. The average mileage on gasoline was 21 miles to the gallon and on oil 152 miles to the quart.

All the tires used on the automobiles in the service of the New York City Fire Department for the next six months will be the product of the Empire Rubber and Tire Company of Trenton, N. J. A contract was awarded last week.

R. H. Spear, General Manager of the Scripps-Booth Company, reports that the contract with Peters & Sons of London for 5,000 cars is being filled at the rate of ten cars a day. The first shipment started last week and shipments will be made weekly until the contract is filled.

Announcement was made last week that The Horseless Age, the first automobile journal published in the English language, would hereafter be issued semi-monthly instead of weekly, the change being one of the steps taken by the new management which took over the publication on May 1. The paper will be considerably enlarged and will be issued on the 1st and 15th of each month.

Announcement has been made that the new Studebaker salesrooms in Broadway, near the corner of Bedford and Atlantic Avenues, will be ready for occupancy in about a week. The company is showing the 1916 models at the salesroom it has occupied all season.

The Winton Company has taken over the Kinkrouna Automobile Company, at 380 Central Avenue, Newark, N. J., and will operate the establishment as a sub-branch under New York, with A. T. Herbert as manager.

Every part for every make of automobile, from the smallest washer to the body of the seven-passenger pleasure cars, may be found in but one establishment in the United States. That establishment is the Puritan Machine Company, located at Lafayette Boulevard and Tenth Street, Detroit. The catalogue of this company contains more than 2,000,000 items of automobile parts and accessories, many of them for motor cars, the manufacture of which has been discontinued.

Driven by Walter G. Collins of Los Angeles, a Dodge Brothers' touring car recently established a new record on Mount Tamalpais, one of California's highest peaks, by climbing eight and one-half miles over the railroad ties to the summit.

Joseph H. McDuffee a few months ago was chosen by John N. Willys to take charge of the newly formed Willys-Knight division of the Willys-Overland Company in the marketing of the sleeve valve motor cars produced by that company. Now comes the news of his appointment as Assistant Sales Manager of its entire organization.

Harry N. Allen has been elected Secretary of the Wyanoak Publishing Company, which has a separate department for the reproduction of automobile photographs.

President Clarke of the Kent Motors Corporation, Eastern distributers and export agents for the Abbott-Detroit and Marion cars, announce a reduction in the price of the 1916 Marion roadster with Ruttenber six-cylinder engine from $1,250 to $1,185. The roadster has a seat broad enough to comfortably take three passengers.

Until recently the exhaust steam from the numerous engines and vulcanizers throughout the factory of the Federal Rubber Manufacturing Company of Milwaukee was wasted at atmospheric pressure, with the exception of a small percentage which was used for heating through vacuum systems. The company now has installed a 1,000-kilowatt low pressure exhaust steam turbine, which utilizes the waste steam from reciprocating engines, vulcanizing tanks, and other sources. The steam is collected at atmospheric pressure, passed through the turbine into a condenser, and develops approximately 1,500 horsepower from material that was formerly absolute waste.

The Chalmers Motor Company has announced the promotion of C. Snyder to the position of superintendent of manufacturing. In his new capacity he will have complete charge of the manufacture of all parts from the rough stock to the finished car.

Because of perfect combustion, its twelve-cylinder motor yields a greater mileage per gallon of gasoline than previously has been expected from cars of corresponding capacity and power.

Because of its perfect mechanical balance, and its smooth flow of full-bodied power, its operation is free of appreciable stress, resulting in a longer life for all moving parts, with consequently reduced repair bills and a greater tire mileage.

The Only Thing Between You and Fortified Tires Is This Flimsy Net of Indifference

Compel Them to Fortify Your Tires

Our plea is for fairness to yourself and to us.

What we do to fortify Goodyear tires could be mostly done by all. It is mainly a matter of expense. The Goodyear extras will cost us this year $1,635,000.

You deserve these extras in the tires you buy. Any maker whom you favor should be forced to give them to you. He will when you require them.

Goodyear Extras

We give you our No-Rim-Cut feature. Others don't. We give you rubber rivets to combat loose treads.

We give you the costly "On-Air" cure to save needless blowouts. No other maker goes to that expense.

To make the tires secure we put 126 braided piano wires in each tire base.

Our All-Weather tread is made double-thick. Many anti-skids are ordinary treads made rough. We could save a million dollars this year if we did that with All-Weathers.

Don't Ignore Them

Don't ignore these vital things in tires, else you will never get them.

These are hidden features. Their lack is not apparent. But the things you see are not nearly so important. These extras mean long mileage, less trouble, lower upkeep.

Insist on tires as good as Goodyears. That is all we ask. If others can supply them at Goodyear prices they deserve to share your trade. Until then, the only way to get these extras is to get the Goodyear tire.

Our June tire sales, as compared with last year, increased over 67 per cent. That shows how fast new users are coming to Goodyear—long the largest-selling tire in the world. There is a Goodyear Service Station near you to supply you. (2579)

The Best Way

The General Fire Extinguisher Company, operating a great fire prevention system, determined on an expenditure of thousands of dollars to appeal to the business men of New York and the nation, and consulted the Erickson Company, advertising agents in New York City, who have many important clients, as to the best way to reach them. The Erickson Company prepared a striking and convincing series of large advertisements, and advised their exclusive publication in THE NEW YORK TIMES. This recommendation was approved.

An announcement headed "A Word to New York Business Men" over the signature of the Erickson Company on July 20th contained the following:

"We said to our client—The General Fire Extinguisher Co., of Providence—you have a real 'Garcia message' to the New York business men. You have a fact basis for your proposition as complete and convincing as we have ever met with in our advertising work. Our investigation shows that conditions here are ripe. Send your message now to this great city of progressive men!"

*"The result is a series of advertisements running in The Times. * * * We feel we are helping in a public service."*

Intelligent and discerning advertisers who have a message for the financial, mercantile and industrial world almost invariably choose THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A SUMMER DAY'S OUTING BESIDE THE KILL VAN KULL

It Will Introduce You to the Pleasant Neighborhood Where Skinner the Loyalist Fought and Where Many an Old Seafarer Is Living Far from Ocean Storms and Hardships.

By Sarah Comstock.

YOU may go further and fare worse in respect to both breezes and history, than in a little half-day's jaunt along the shore of the old Kill van Kull. A queer name, that of the serpent-like line of water which snakes its way between Staten Island and Bayonne. We've always known the Kills—they're as familiar as the Battery, to be sure, or Grant's Tomb, or the Brooklyn Bridge. And yet how many of us know the old Dutch origin of their names? Hands up! And there's room aplenty at the head of the class!

Years of tongue-twistings have tied in a hard knot that name given by the early settlers—"Het Kill van het Cull," meaning "the stream of the bay," and "Kill van Kull," is the knot. William T. Davis, in his volume, "Staten Island Names: Ye Olde Names and Nicknames," traces the corruptions of many early phrases, another of which is "Arthur Kill" for the early "Achter Cull." We really do handle historic names badly here in America; there's no use denying the fact. But on the whole the Kills have fared pretty well by comparison with others—think, for instance of "Throgs Neck" from "Throckmorton's"!

Suppose that it is Sunday and that the roast chicken has gone the way of all roast chicken and the ice cream and coffee of the midday dinner have been served—it's time to start. You couldn't do better than to hie to the Battery and thence set sail for our neighboring borough of Richmond.

That voyage across the Upper Bay is far better than your electric fan which blows shop-worn hot air at you within your own city apartment. Up through the Narrows, riding full-tilt, come the breezes of the good old Atlantic, ready for a bout with you. By the time you reach the far shore of Staten Island you'll be fanned to such good temper that you'll be ready to walk the rest of the way instead of waiting for a trolley.

However, in case the day be especially warm and walking be not your penchant, you will find an Elizabethport car toward the right as you leave the ferry, and this will carry you along that northwest shore of the island where you will find history of the Revolution, of our nineteenth-century literature, and of Henry Hudson, all growing as thick as the berries on this August's loaded bushes.

Richmond Terrace is the street which skirts the shore of the Kill van Kull and leads you on your way. It follows the line, approximately, of the early Staten Islanders' footsteps, for this part of the island was settled in comparatively early years, and across the kill early ferries used to ply. In fact, some of the crossings were frequented by the Indians, and later on the whites used the same trails across the waters. Several ferries were operated in long-ago days at Port Richmond, whither you are bound: Decker's Ferry existed as far back as 1777, and others followed it. From Staten Island to Elizabethtown Point, still further west, a ferry was operated by Adoniah Schuyler in 1762. For many years this water trip to Elizabethtown was the favorite route to Philadelphia from New York.

The trolley will bear you on to the west, past points which you may visit on your return journey, through New Brighton and into West New Brighton. To your left, some pompous old dwellings rise, once "palatial residences" of suburbanites; now, for the most part, considerably down at the heel. Yet we can't wonder, as we look out over the blue stretch of water fronting them, that wealthy New Yorkers of the last century found this an "elegant" vicinity for their dwellings. If the pressure of money-weighted commerce had not borne down upon this part of the beautiful island, we might today be finding weary multimillionaires reposing here upon verandas, surrounded by chintz cushions and light literature, or their wives serving ices upon these gone-to-weed lawns.

On whirs the trolley, past the Sailors' Snug Harbor, with its immense stretch of groomed lawns and scarlet geranium beds; swinging around the many curves which outline the shore of the Kill van Kull, and at last, at the corner of Davis Avenue, you must leave it to begin your prowl.

Walk on past the corner house, and just beyond it looms a big, white, overgrown dwelling place, deserted these days, its yard all tangled and unkempt, but with a certain dignity which the utmost shabbiness cannot destroy. This is the Kreuzer-Pelton house, familiarly known as the old Pelton Homestead, and its date is placed as early as 1722. Lonely and silent, it stands here beside the Cove, giving no hint of all its stirring past. But in the pulsing days of the seventeen-seventies, this old white house played its part, and learned many a tale.

According to Ira K. Morris's "Memorial History of Staten Island," the building was erected in 1722 by Rolph, the head of a once influential family. It was before the Revolution, however, that it passed into the hands of the Kreuzers, (variously spelled Kruzer, Cruzer, and Cruser—a family of Dutch descent,) and during that war it was occupied by "The Widow Kreuzer."

Now, the British, as you will remember, took unto themselves the occupancy of Staten Island early in the war. Howe enjoyed the hospitality of the Rose and Crown Inn, while his troops encamped not far away and his fortifications were erected upon various heights. So when General Cortlandt Skinner, in command of his "American Loyalists," or "Skinner's Brigade," looked about him for a comfortable headquarters, he naturally found Staten Island a convenient and sympathetic locality. This house looked agreeable to him, with its wide-spreading wings, and here he determined to install himself.

You can realize even now, in the period of its decay, how luxurious the dwelling must have been at an earlier time. It stands at some height above the street and the Cove, is surrounded by a goodly, although degenerate, lawn; and is amply designed. At the west end is a low wing of one and one-half stories; originally there was a corresponding wing at the east end, but this was removed later on to make room for the two-story wing which now stands. Thus the curious old building seems to be three attached houses.

Morris refers to the "Kreuzer vault, which has repeatedly been the subject of romance and history," a little to the south of the dwelling.

Around him Skinner's troops were stationed, and warm were the affairs they waged with the American soldiers over in New Jersey, just across the water. During the Spring and Summer of 1777 they continually made little excursions into Jersey, to obtain forage which they supplied to the British Army. They made themselves useful in this and many another way to the enemy upon our shores.

In November, 1777, General Philemon Dickenson undertook to subdue them forcibly. He was in command of the New Jersey militia, and he started with about 1,400 of these men one early morning, before the sun was up, to see what worm the early bird might catch. Quickly and quietly he embarked from Halstead's Point, crossed, divided his men into three groups to advance by three routes, with orders to gather at a point named—and thence set out to rout the enemy.

The plan was neatly made and skillfully followed, but, alas! it had been revealed to the watchful Skinner, and before the clock struck three he had withdrawn most of his Tory troops from the Island. A few remained to be punished by Dickenson; Morris says that five or six were killed and twenty-four taken prisoner, but on this occasion, as on others, the wily Skinner came out ahead. For long he remained a great disturbance to the patriot forces.

Dr. Frank Bergen Kelley, in his "Historical Guide to the City of New York," mentions among the old house's claims to distinction the fact that Prince William, who later became King William IV., was entertained here, the guest of General Skinner.

Another remarkable event within these weather-beaten and stanch walls was the arrival of the stork which bore in its beak Cruzer the infant, who later became Cruzer the Lightning Calculator, made famous by Barnum.

In 1839 the homestead passed into the hands of Daniel Pelton, and by the name of this family it is best known. Pelton's daughter married General Duffié and for many years lived here.

Opposite the Cove, where you now stand, a small boat sent by Henry Hudson from the Half Moon was halted on the 9th of September, 1609. Hudson's vessel then lay in the Narrows, but he wished to explore the Kills; he, therefore, sent this boat forth in command of an English sailor by the name of Coleman. It passed into the Upper Bay, turned west into the Kill van Kull, and penetrated as far as the water opposite this Cove, when a sharp attack from Indians upon the shore brought the expedition to an abrupt end. Coleman was slain by an arrow and his body brought back to the Half Moon with mourning. "Coleman's Point" at Sandy Hook marks where he is buried.

Turn back now to the corner of Davis Avenue and notice the large house which you passed when you left the car. It stands above the street, with spreading grounds around it. This was the home of Francis George Shaw, that well-known philanthropist, and was later the home of his famous son, Robert.

Robert Gould Shaw enlisted as a private in the Union Army in 1861 and the following year he was promoted to the rank of Captain. Just two years after his first enlistment, in April, 1863, he became Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts, the first colored regiment from a free State to go forth to serve the Union. Shaw and his regiment both distinguished themselves in our civil war, and his death was as gallant as his life. He fell in July, 1863, in the assault on Fort Wagner, South Carolina, against which he was leading his regiment's brave attack.

A daughter of Francis George Shaw married George William Curtis, and you may visit the delightful old Curtis residence, within a few blocks of the corner where you are now. Turn up Davis Avenue to Henderson, cross one block to Bard Avenue, and you will find it in the midst of flowering shrubs and green sweeps.

Here, during many years, some of the most brilliant minds of America and Europe gathered from time to time, at the hospitable bidding of the distinguished owner. Mr. Curtis's home was always a centre for those interested in literature, art, and important public works. He had been a close friend of Emerson, of Thoreau, of Hawthorne, and the others of that famous New England group of literati, and one of the Brook Farm dwellers, before he turned to Staten Island for the home of his later years.

His death in 1892 broke a charmed circle. He had drawn many around him with his multitudinous interests—he had devoted himself to far more than literature, entering political life on Staten Island in 1856, when he worked for the success of General Frémont.

Why not return to Richmond Terrace and walk back toward the ferry, taking in Sailors' Snug Harbor on the way? Well as we know the name, often as we have seen those magnificent grounds and substantial buildings, there's much about this old seamen's retreat that most of us don't know.

As we enter the gate and walk up the path to the door, we pass the monument and burial spot of Robert Richard Randall, that curious old bachelor who left his vast estate to found this institution. To our right, beyond all those scarlet flower beds, rises the statue of Randall, by Saint-Gaudens, while, buried in Clute's old history of Staten Island, is the delightful account of that gentleman of a century ago, and how he came to endow a home for old and disabled seamen.

There have been popular traditions to the effect that he was some sort of an adventurous pirate, cruising on the briny deep, plundering and even murdering to gain his greedy ends. Upon his death-bed, the tale-tellers have related, he was seized with dire remorse, and thereupon bequeathed his all to charity. But Clute explodes these theories and relates the authoritative account of Isaac Bell, who had been foreman of the jury at the suit to break Randall's will—not a successful attempt.

The old Pelton Homestead.

It seems that this Robert Randall was by no means a pirate, or even an adventurer, but a retiring old bachelor who lived in New York City. His father was Captain Thomas Randall, a daring privateersman, who had gained his immense wealth through years of seafaring. He left his property to this son, Robert, who, in what is now the heart of downtown New York, lived a quiet and lonely life.

He is strangely unremembered. Clute comments on the absence of any anecdotes about his life. But this much is known: when the time approached for him to die he sent for Alexander Hamilton and Daniel D. Tompkins to prepare his will. When they had arrived he began, item by item, to lay before them his intentions.

First, there were small legacies to various relatives. There were his gold sleeve buttons and a life annuity of £40 to go to his faithful housekeeper. He gave his gold watch and £40 down to his overseer. His servant was to receive £20 down, and his knee and shoe buckles—Clute draws an imaginary sketch of the bachelor as wearing "his hair powdered and in a queue, and [himself] dressed in silk hose and breeches, with silver shoe and knee buckles, and broad-flapped coat and vest."

Then, having gone through a list of minor items, he stopped.

"But the bulk of your vast estate!" queried the lawyers.

Randall frowned. "That's what I can't decide upon," he said. "What do you think about it?"

Upon this Hamilton questioned him as to how he had amassed his property.

"It was my father's," Randall replied.

"And how did your father acquire it?" persisted the lawyer.

"By honest privateering," came the response.

And then this idea occurred to Hamilton—the great thought of a home for weather-beaten and luck-beaten seamen, a fitting memorial to the father who had been one of them and who had acquired his wealth upon the seas. The idea suited Randall to a tee, and thus another vision of that wonderful constructive mind of Hamilton's—the mind that visualized American industry, and gave it birth in the mills of Paterson—was conjured into being. It took many years for the completion of the work; the institution was founded in 1801, but litigation delayed the laying of its cornerstone for thirty years.

Once launched, however, it has sailed a smooth and prosperous sea. It opened its doors to forty-six inmates, and now accommodates nearly 1,000. Buildings have been added from time to time, and the Minto farm, which was Randall's Manhattan property, has grown in value so fabulously that the annual income from rentals amounts to somewhere in the neighborhood of $400,000. This land lies from Fourth to Fifth Avenue, and from Sixth to Tenth Street.

So these jolly old disabled seamen live in luxury, strolling about their park-like grounds, gossipping and reading newspapers where they gather, on the benches, beside the goldfish pond. They work at many crafts to keep their hands busy, but "We don't have to," they proudly inform the visitor. "We do it because we like to, and we're paid for it." Hammocks and netted bags and, in fact, anything that can be made of cord comes from their workrooms, and great is the delight of any small boy who becomes the possessor of one of the marvelous boats built by these old sailors—boats which lie at anchor all day in the goldfish pond, a miniature fleet of lazy sails.

Curious treasures of the past are collected in the reception rooms of the main building. One of these is a tiny and perfect model of the Constitution, which was made by an inmate 91 years of age. Portraits of Alexander Hamilton and others connected with the remarkable history of the institution are hung on the walls.

Just after you have left the entrance gate of the Snug Harbor and have turned east, on your way along Richmond Terrace to the ferry, you will see, at the corner of Tysen Street, what appears to be a modern wayside inn offering its liquid refreshments to the public at large.

Its front is of the present, but only its front. It is, in fact, a century and a half old, or within five years of this venerable age; it was erected in 1770, and is substantial today and looks good for another century and a half of a useful life.

It is "the Old Stone Jug" to all around.

"Do you know any other name for it?" I inqufred of one of the oldest of the disabled seamen, who came toddling cheerfully along the street.

"Stone Jug. That's all the name I ever hear for it. That's all the name it's got. That's all the name it'll ever have. Stone Jug—ain't that good enough for anybody?"

Therefore Stone Jug let it remain.

PROMINENT EDUCATORS DISCUSS PREPARATORY SCHOOLS

They Tell The Times What They Think of Classroom Methods, Relative Importance of Classical and Vocational Subjects, and the Merits of Military Training.

HEREWITH appears the third installment of letters to THE NEW YORK TIMES from university and college Presidents about preparatory school conditions.

The educators were requested to send their opinions of methods and courses, subjects too much or too little emphasized, the sort of schools preferred for boys and girls, and the desirability of military training. Scores of answers have been received. They represent all sections of the country. The writers' views vary from those extolling the public high schools to those which place the old-fashioned academy in the first class. It has been interesting to note that advocacy of the high-school system has centred largely in the Western States, while most adherents of private-academy methods have been Eastern educators.

Learning How to Study.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In my judgment the change most needed in secondary school work for the boy or girl who is to attend a university is a greater emphasis on how to study. Not that formal instruction in how to study should be given in secondary schools, but that the method of teaching in all branches should keep this purpose in mind. To learn how to study means to learn how to think, and the chief test of a student's fitness for university work turns upon whether he knows how to put this and that together so as to reach a rational conclusion. A large amount of the mortality in the freshman year of college and university is due to lack of ability to study, and this is not wholly due to lack of native capacity.

As for the content of instruction in secondary schools, that should be determined largely, if not wholly, by considerations as to what is best for a pupil of high-school age, regardless of whether he will attend a university or not. Youth is the humanistic age, and languages, human institutions, practical (not technical) science, and mathematics of a kind that helps to accurate solution of the concrete problems of life should constitute the major part of his study. Not information, not the covering of ground in these studies, should be the aim, but insight, appreciation, and control of the student's resources and discovery of his own capacities and aptitudes.

As for military training in secondary schools, that should be confined to drill, leaving the study of military science and tactics to the university. Such drill does not tend to the development of a military spirit, but gives form and control to the movements of the boy in the awkward stage. More important, however, for the high-school boy is play of appropriate sort, teaching co-operation, developing social insight and leadership and the spirit of sportsmanship.

President University of Missouri.

New Ideals Are Needed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

That it is the chief purpose of preparatory or secondary schools to prepare boys for college is, to my mind, a great source of weakness. Many of our schools are not places wherein a boy's latent powers are drawn out, his intellectual, physical, and spiritual character formed, his self-control cultivated, so much as cramming institutions. This is because all the boys of the school, no matter how diverse their faculties and however much they may be handicapped in one way or another, are all made a part of one rigid system, with one inevitable end in view. A boy goes into the third form, we will say, at 14; he must get into the fourth at 15, the fifth at 16, and the sixth at 17. No matter whether he has learned what the third form has to teach him or not, he has to go out of that and into the fourth in one year, and so on.

Hence the necessity of tutors and Summer coaches, and hence the superficiality of the knowledge of the ordinary boy when he leaves school for college. Hence, also, many of the difficulties of the colleges. In my judgment the boy should stay in a form until he has assimilated all that that form has to teach him.

Also, our boys begin their serious studies altogether too late. It is ridiculous to hear a boy say that he is to "take up" Latin, for example, when he is 14. Also, there is too much textbook work. Teachers should themselves teach, and not merely hear recitations. But teaching, real teaching, seems to be almost a lost art.

How these difficulties are to be overcome I cannot say. But one thing is sure, viz., that parents and those who have the care of boys and girls must begin to acquire a different conception of the real end of education and the purposes for which schools and colleges exist.

Tendency Toward False Ideals.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My own experience with results of preparatory school training leads me to think that the attitude of students toward their work leaves much to be desired. As a rule, the preparatory school can get them ready for examinations, but they seem to do little more. The whole thought of a general education is subordinated to the college entrance examinations. I have seen few young men of 18 or 19 who have much power of expression. Even the handwriting of the majority of graduates from preparatory schools is weak.

There is one aspect of the high-school training that to me is deplorable. That is the tendency to cribbing. I think this is on the increase throughout the country. The recent experience of the Naval Academy is one indication of that. I cannot assign a cause to it unless the general commercial expansion of the country has a tendency to give young men false ideals. Perhaps the multiplicity of subjects usually taught in the preparatory schools has something to do with the whole general attitude of mind of the students.

With regard to military training in the secondary schools, I believe the setting up part of the military training would be an excellent thing. If it could be made to teach obedience and self-control at the same time, the whole country would benefit from putting military training in every school or college. IRA N. HOLLIS,
President Worcester Polytechnic Institute.
Worcester, Mass.

Too Little Attention to Classics.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am in hearty sympathy with the general forward movement that is being made in the secondary schools looking toward a better preparation for the students for a particular side of life, and I am thoroughly convinced that a very serious mistake is being made in many of the public schools by emphasizing too strongly the vocational subjects to the neglect of the subjects more generally recognized as cultural.

I think it is a very serious mistake that the classics, Latin and Greek, are being so neglected. I also regret that greater emphasis is not placed upon the forms of expression rather than the hastening of students into the interpretation of literature.

A few years of military training, in my opinion, would be helpful to the young men of our country.

Individual Child's Needs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a cordial believer in the democracy of our public-school system. There is, in my judgment and experience, an unwarranted waste of time in the graded schools and in the high schools. Much has been said and written recently of the sub-normal child, all of which is tending in the right direction. There is need, however, for consideration of the child who has inherited strong mental powers and who has opportunities for intellectual training not found in many good homes. While we pay just attention to the sub-normal child and make splendid provision for the average, little is done for the child of special privilege. I am in grave doubts as to the wisdom of the elaborate courses of study provided in our secondary schools. More attention devoted to the care of the individual child and less to the multiplicity of courses offered will, in my judgment, result in stronger men and women for the colleges and for life.

President Parsons College.

Too Many Subjects Taught.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the Middle West nearly all students are admitted to college upon the presentation of a certificate of graduation from a public high school or private secondary school showing that the student completed fifteen secondary school units. In some of our colleges the units which can be accepted for entrance are pretty definitely fixed; but there is a constantly growing tendency toward the admission of a student with any fifteen units.

There may be reasons for the broadening of the scope of college entrance requirements; but such a procedure gives opportunity for some abuses. For instance, the student who would take advantage of the wide option on college entrance requirements to offer fifteen units in fifteen different branches of study could not be expected to be as thorough a student as the one who has offered his fifteen units in five studies. The jumping about in a high school from one branch of study to another for the purpose of getting a superficial knowledge of many things does not develop that student quality which is the basis of thorough work and knowledge in higher education. Therefore, it is to be hoped that our secondary schools, in opening many courses of study, will arrange them in groups, so that students may do a few things well rather than many things poorly.

The splendid work of inspection of public high schools which has been carried on by the State Departments of Education and by our State universities gives to the high school probably an advantage over the private secondary school. It is easy to see, also, that the high school is much more democratic than the private school. In fact, many of the latter aim at an aristocratic ideal; the college ministers to the development of the ideals of the nation. The very fundamental principle upon which this nation has undertaken to set up a government over itself is the one of equality of individual opportunity—democracy. Therefore the student coming into college from a public high school finds himself more in accord with the spirit of the institution than the student coming from the private school.

The relation between the college and the high school grows closer each day. Fifty years ago there was a break between the grammar school and the high school. Now the gap has been closed, and a public school student is not expected to drop out of his course at the end of the elementary study. He goes naturally into the high school. The result is that our high schools have grown tremendously. Just so it is becoming more and more natural, as it is easy, for a student to step from the high school to the college. So it happens that our colleges are having large and rapid growths also.

President Western College for Women.

Effect of "Practical" Courses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The most marked current change in American education is a very strong swing to "practical" or utilitarian courses. This tendency is to be noted in secondary schools, colleges, and universities. It is due in part to the spirit of the age, and in part to the democratic advance of education.

While this is a desirable movement, especially in so far as it leads multitudes who would not otherwise do so to remain longer in school, the educational need of the hour is the discriminating conservation of a modernized cultural education for the few. In the end, a large proportion of our leaders will probably come from the few who are able to get a general as well as a specialized education.

Applied science and early specialization is at once the glory and the danger of the present movement in education.

Co-education seems to be successful in the colleges and universities of the Middle West, but co-education during early adolescence in our high schools is open to serious question.

Military training is admirable as a form of gymnastics for boys in their teens, but this has nothing to do with national defense. Serious military training for national defense has no proper place in infancy—i. e., before the eighteenth or twentieth year.

WILLIAM ORVILLE ALLEN,
President Doane College.

For Long Years of Training.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At this season, when parents are studying or should be studying and planning the education of their children, permit me to speak a word for a general scheme not new or radical, but in danger of serious assault from certain tendencies of our present educational movements.

The general scheme is this: Let a boy or girl—for I believe decidedly that co-education is in line with the future development of democracy which will be characterized by the advancement of woman—let a boy or girl start in at 6 and complete the grammar grades at 13 or 14, preferably the earlier year, and then take a four years' high school or academy course, graduating at 17 or 18. Then the liberal arts college course of four years should be pursued, graduating at 21 or 22. On top of this general training should be built the professional or technical education, which should include four years in most cases, turning out the liberally educated and technically trained citizen at the age of 25 or 26.

Living the sanitary and efficient life known to the modern, this citizen should, barring accidents, wars, and those microbes not yet mastered, render fifty years of active professional or technical service to the community, retiring from work at the age of 75 or 76 to spend the rest of his days in the restful solace of a cultured mind.

By way of comment on this general scheme, let me add that the high school course should confine itself to four years' work. Trying to expand the high school into a so-called "junior college" is a mistake. The junior college is a batlike creation, neither bird nor mouse.

It takes four years to give a high school course, and it requires four years—not two nor three—to make a college man or college woman. There are psychological reasons for building a separate course on the years 13 to 17. The colleges of America have generally recognized this and have separated the academy or high school studies from the college. For a time the colleges, recognizing the need of separation, ran academies with different Faculties and management. That is good as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. The academy should be banished from the college campus. Students of academy or high school age require a different régime from those of college age. The high school has not gained by aping the college. I am glad to see a certain revolt of the high school against the dominance of the college. The revolt should be against collegiate methods of student activities, government, and life, rather than against the curriculum suggested by the college entrance boards. The high schools of commerce and technical high schools are expedients of our poverty.

Let the high school take the boy or girl between the ages of 13 and 17 and put him or her through an educational process adapted to the adolescent period, the psychology of which has become the recent possession of educators.

Then the same thing is true of the college age. That age, from 17 to 21, requires entirely different treatment both from the academic period and the university period. The combination courses between colleges and technical schools are eliminating that glorious circle of studies in the senior year of college, thus reducing the college course to three years and robbing the student on the threshold of "being his own man" of those most cultural and reflective studies best calculated to reveal his own aptitudes and to help him find himself and his life's calling. The alliance of the college and the university or technical school is incestuous.

Just as the high school has suffered by importing collegiate methods, so the college has suffered by importing university methods of instruction. For instance, the college professor who uses exclusively the lecture method in recitation or the research method and emphasis, both appropriate in the university, will find that his college student is too immature and lacks the mental application and sustained attention presupposed by these advanced methods. The college program and régime give these powers. I would like to see the universities abandon the liberal arts work and confine themselves to professional and technical training of the citizens of the age of 21 to 25 and over. I plead for the integrity of the liberal arts college, separate from both the academy and the university; also that the college of liberal arts may continue to have four full years in which to do its work.

In a democracy are our leaders competent to lead before they are 25 years old? Then why try to fly in the face of psychology and turn them out earlier? Of course this plan is ideal, and it must be recognized that economic pressure forces many to take technical training very early.

W. H. McMASTER,
President, Mount Union College.
Alliance, Ohio.

Thoroughness First.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I should say that the important thing now is not so much what subjects are being pursued as with what degree of thoroughness the work is carried on and through what period of time. Most of our students come from the public schools of the Central West, and our experience is that there are no better college preparatory schools. The college should not dictate with too much detail what work the high school is to do. If the student offers three or four units of English, three or four units of a foreign language, three units of mathematics, one unit of social science, and one unit of laboratory work in physics, chemistry, botany, or zoology, he should be allowed to submit as the rest of his entrance work, up to a total of fifteen units, any work that is carried on in an accredited high school for a full year.

The disadvantages in fostering the military spirit would far outweigh the advantages if military training were introduced into the secondary schools. America should stand for peace and sanity.

ROBERT L. KELLY,
President Earlham College.
Richmond, Ind.

"Ideal Preparatory School."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I take it for granted that your questions about the best type of preparatory school have reference solely to the problem of preparation for college, excluding the far larger problem of secondary school work for boys and girls who do not go to college. To the question in this narrow form my experience suggests a few quite definite answers:

The ideal preparatory school should be located in the country, with plenty of chance for wholesome outdoor life.

It should rigidly limit its numbers. Any school that runs beyond 200 pupils seems to me to lose more than it gains by the increase in size.

Except for boys whose home training has been markedly deficient, and who need special disciplinary treatment, the non-military school is more effective educationally and more economical in time and expense.

The course of study should by all means avoid scattering. Concentration on a few subjects—language, literature, mathematics, one or two natural sciences, history, with special attention everywhere to the use of good English—makes the best preparation for college. So far as language training is concerned, nothing else can take the place of Latin and Greek. From the point of view of college preparation, the most unfortunate recent change in the secondary school has been the rapid disappearance of Greek from the course of study.

In the internal life of the school there should be a large measure of self-government.

Finally, everything depends on the quality and the spirit of the teachers. The school must be prepared to pay good salaries, so that it may gain and retain the services of first-rate instructors.

President Lake Forest College.

NEWPORT PLANS.

All In Readiness for Dog Show and Other Interesting Events.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 7.—The marriage of Miss Margaret Frances Andrews, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul A. Andrews, and Morgan Belmont, youngest son of August Belmont, will be celebrated a week from today at the residence of the bride's parents, Rockery Hall. The Rev. James Ward, pastor of St. Mary's Church, will officate.

Miss Andrews will have as her bridesmaids the Misses Marie Taller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee Taller of New York; Miss Helena Fish, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Fish, Jr., of Garrison; Miss Katherine W. Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. Wyman Porter of Tuxedo; Miss Ethel M. Huhn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Huhn of Philadelphia, a cousin of the bride; Miss Dorothy Gordon King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon King of Newport and New York; Miss Caroline Hulbert of Cincinnati, Miss Angelica S. Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Brown of New York; Miss Rhoda Fullam, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. William F. Fullam; Miss Dorothy Watts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Watts of Newport, and Miss Hannah Randolph, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. P. Randolph of Philadelphia and Narragansett Pier.

Raymond Belmont will act as best man for his brother. A bridal luncheon will follow the ceremony. Later there will be a general reception at the house, after which the couple will depart on their wedding trip.

The bride has received many beautiful gifts from all over the country, especially from here, where so many friends of the couple are spending the Summer.

The navy captured the cups for the dancing contest held at Marble House, the home of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, last Saturday afternoon. Lieutenant John J. London, United States Navy, attached to the U. S. S. Wyoming, and referred to as the best dancer in the navy, with Miss Katherine G. Knight, daughter of Rear Admiral Austin M. Knight, United States Navy, President of the Naval War College, were adjudged the winners.

Among the children Miss Kathlyn Vanderbilt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, and Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., were adjudged the best dancers.

The gathering about the terrace where the dancing took place resembled old Newport days. Among those there were Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.; Mrs. Oelrichs, Mrs. Charles A. Childs, Mrs. Frederick Neilson, Miss Alice Preston, Mrs. Charles Frederick Hoffman, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, Miss Maria de Barril, Mrs. I. Townsend Burden, Mrs. Charles Mae Oelrichs, and Mrs. J. J. Mason.

All is ready for the Newport Dog Show on Saturday next at the Griswold estate on Bellevue Avenue. There are many entries and numerous special prizes, including those given by Mrs. R. T. Wilson, Mrs. Henry Barton Jacobs, Mrs. William Watts Sherman, Mrs. T. Shaw Safe, Mrs. George D. Widener, Mrs. French Vanderbilt, Mme. Bakhmeteff, wife of the Russian Ambassador; Mrs. Frederick Neilson, and Mrs. William Grosvenor.

The drawing room of Mrs. J. J. Wysong's estate on Ochre Point was filled yesterday afternoon for the musicale given by Miss Ada Sassoli, the harpist, who was heard previously in Mrs. Oelrichs's ballroom at Rose Cliff on the occasion of the entertainment for the Secours National. Miss Loraine Wyman, an America girl, who has studied in Paris, with Yvette Guilbert and does the same sort of work, sang old French and English songs in costumes.

The cruise of the New York Yacht Club reached Newport this week, and the next day held the races for the cups given by Captain Vincent Astor. There was plenty of entetaining in the Summer colony on the two nights when the yachtsmen remained in Newport waters.

So successful has been the first season of Hill Top Inn that Mr. Walton H. Marshall, the managing Director, has had plans completed for a good-sized hotel, which is to be started during the early Fall and completed in time for opening next Spring as an all-the-year-round hotel. Saturday evenings especially, it seems as if the great portion of the Summer colony was entertaining there.

Mrs. Richard Stevens gave a dinner and informal dance there Wednesday evening with her daughter, Miss Elsie Stevens.

Many of the Summer residents who have planned to remain after the Newport Horse Show will attend the county fair in Middletown on Sept. 21, which will include a horse show, fruit, vegetable, and flower show, and many other attractions.

Arrangements have been completed for the flower and fruit show, with dancing, tea, and music, to be held under a huge tent on Bellevue Avenue Aug. 12, 13, and 14, under the auspices of the Newport Garden Club. Mrs. Charles Frederick Hoffman, Mrs. Pembroke Jones, and Mrs. Lawrence L. Gillespie are the leading spirits, being assisted by the Newport Horticultural Society.

Quite a number of the younger men, including Mr. George I. Scott and Mr. Cyril Hatch, have started for the business men's camp at Plattsburg.

Mr. James J. Van Alen has cards out for a dinner for Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor at Wakehurst on Wednesday next.

Mrs. Fletcher Ryer was a dinner hostess this evening, and will be again tomorrow night.

Mr. Alexander Morten of New York is at the La Farge Cottages.

Mrs. Roger Winthrop of New York was the guest of honor at a dinner given Sunday night by Mr. and Mrs. William Payne Thompson.

Mrs. William Wickham of Baltimore has been the guest of Lieutenant Commander and Mrs. Franck Taylor Evans at the Training Station.

Members of the Summer colony and townspeople will assemble in the old State house on the night of Aug. 16 for the annual Summer meeting of the Newport Historical Society. Vice President Frank K. Sturgis will preside in the absence of President Daniel B. Fearing. Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, will speak on "Patriotism." The committee in charge consists of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence L. Gillespie, Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, Mrs. Frank K. Sturgis, Miss Edith May Tilley, Mrs. Alfred Tuckerman, Mrs. Thomas A. Lawton, Mrs. French Vanderbilt, Mrs. George L. Rives, Mrs. Charles L. F. Robinson, Mrs. Harold Brown, Mrs. Richard C. Derby, and Mrs. Daniel B. Fearing.

During the week the Newport Garden Association held its annual meeting and elected Dr. Roderick Terry for another term as President; also Miss Dorothea Watts as Secretary, and Mrs. William Grosvenor as Treasurer. Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James was elected First Vice President, and Mrs. Charles Frederick Hoffman, second Vice President. The Executive Board consists of Mrs. Hamilton Fish Webster, Henry A. C. Taylor, Harford Powel, Ernest Howe, Mrs. William E. Glyn, Mrs. Paul A. Andrews, Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Miss Wetmore, and Mrs. Arnold Hague.

Members of the New York Yacht Club were pleased to find upon their arrival last Tuesday a handsome model of the proposed new station of the club here, which has long been needed. It will be ready next Spring, through the efforts of Commodore George F. Baker, Jr., and Commodore Arthur Curtiss James.

Mrs. John Jacob Astor arrived Sunday to visit Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Widener for two weeks. Mrs. Widener gave a dinner for Mrs. Astor earlier in the week and other pretty affairs. Mrs. Astor is playing tennis each morning at the Casino.

Mrs. William F. Fullam, wife of Rear Admiral Fullam, in command of the naval cadets' squadron now in the Pacific, and Superintendent of the Naval Academy, with her daughter, Miss Rhoda Fullam, who will be one of Miss Andrews's bridesmaids, are at Miss Bokee's. Mrs. Fullam is in deep mourning, owing to the death of her mother last Winter.

The Rev. Edward Dudley Tibbits of Hoosac, N. Y., is visiting his cousins, Rear Admiral and Mrs. French E. Chadwick, at Twin Oaks.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Reynal will give a dinner on Aug. 19.

Mrs. John R. Drexel will give a luncheon Aug. 12 and a dinner on the 17th.

AS WOMEN KNOW THEMSELVES

A Discussion of Their Sex Biologically, Chemically, Politically, Artistically, and in Relation to the Androcentric Regime.

STAMFORD, Conn., Aug. 4, 1915.
To the Editor of The New York Times:

Change is a law of nature which no one would deny. Nothing is exempt. The law of evolution, which every thinking person believes in today, may readily be traced through the entire woman question. Nature's laws are inexorable. The suffrage movement will stand or fall by its natural right.

The question of suffrage is fundamentally the same in all countries. The earnestness of the women who are seeking the franchise does not come from any fad of the moment. The deep underlying law of progress, evolution, is bringing to view the power of expression which is bound to come forth as the human mind naturally evolves. The female sex is evolving out of the conditions under which the androcentric régime has caused it to be so long.

The same reason which brought a wider outlook, a deeper vision of life to man, is bound to bring results to woman as well. Man is the only animal that changes his environment, and as it is the mind of man which is the cause of this, so women, when they become better educated and learn to think, will also follow the law of evolution and seek a broader, wider view of life's meaning to them.

The function of motherhood is the fundamental law of woman, and only ignorant women overlook this most demanding law of nature. It is not that the intelligent, awakened woman wishes less to be a mother, but it is that she sees in suffrage a step toward the natural demands of her sex, and in those demands a new and better justice for the human race.

The question of suffrage falls back upon the power of government, and we ask ourselves, what is government? We must answer: "Government is the agent of society." This is not only concise, but definite and complete. Government being the simple agent, and agent only, of society, should at all times do the will of the people. Whatever it does more than this is usurpation, whatever less is dereliction.

Now what is society? Throughout all organic life we find "male and female created He them." In society are the two elements, man and woman. The sexes are about equally divided numerically, and from the biological law we find certain natural functions for one entirely distinct from the other. These distinctions are perfectly understood by all, and the advantages of their combined effort in forming, refining, developing, and perfecting society are every day acknowledged and accepted by all classes. It is through this beautiful harmony of elements that society rises and grows ever into finer and better conditions.

The forces in society represented through the man and the woman may be comprehensively distinguished by the terms mental and moral, rational and sympathetic; these are the principal general differences suggested; these are qualities necessary in society for the advancement and perfection of social beings. They are of equal importance and readily act as a check upon each other. In society man has represented the thinking force, and woman the feeling force. So far in history it has generally been shown that man represents the quantity of human progress, and woman the quality; man the head, woman the heart; man may be called the centrifugal force, woman the centripetal. Man is the radical, woman the conservative element. Now in the complex character of society, and in government, its agent, the natural and just form is to reflect the true character of society, in all its fullness.

Society is like a tapestry; it should have every fibre, every thread interwoven to make a design of richest and most beautiful harmony. The Government must not have one tiny stitch that may be dropped, for then something is missing.

There are subjects which appeal naturally to women more than men, and judgments which should be balanced by the woman's comprehension of her own sex and its vicissitudes, which make it reasonable and natural for woman to add her share of weaving into the warp and woof of the Government. If it be said that man represents woman, it will be seen to be impossible, from the qualities that nature herself has given to woman. If it be argued that some women do not want the ballot, it shall be seen that society itself shall enforce the woman to lend her qualities to the benefit of all, for nature shows that no perfection can arise where but half of her values are used.

The whole combined energy of the human race should help the realization of a Government that shall represent in the future a society which will evolve according to the natural, immutable laws of progress, and the sooner humanity awakes to see the process necessary will it rise to a higher plane of living for all.

Suffrage is only a pushing onward of that creature who has slowly evolved from monotreme to man; and the female has been sometimes the larger, sometimes the smaller, but always the companion and worker with the male. Her greatest of all functions, motherhood, is nature's stamp of her sacred worth.

True government should call upon woman to come and perform her duty, by sharing in thinking and acting regarding the questions of society, of which she is so large a part, and demand that she should take the responsibility which falls justly upon her as well as upon man.

No longer may the issue of being unable to go to war be used against the franchise of women; as the present disaster, shedding its horrible mantle over humanity, has proved the marvelous soldiers women are capable of being in the very activities of the awful tragedies compelled by this war.

It is the Government that will see far enough ahead to realize the natural claim of the female to add her part to the immutable law of all life's progress, that shall in the future be the most advanced of all nations.

A CIVILIZATION FOR MEN.

An Upheaval Predicted When Woman Awakens Her Latent Forces.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since it seems only natural that a woman should stand up for her sex, (I have known men to do the same under provocation,) may I say a word or two in reply to the letter of Patrick H. Aylett? Whether the country is too feminine or not feminine enough depends upon the use of the word feminine. That civilization at present is very much under the management of women few feminists or anti-feminists will deny. Whether it is run by women of the best type is a matter for consideration. I have known a little Polish peasant girl 7 years old to become tense with ecstasy over a reproduction of a famous "Ascension of the Virgin." I have known an uneducated scrubwoman to see beauties in a Rodin's statue condemned by many an Anthony Comstock.

There are hundreds and thousands of women scattered throughout the country with such latent appreciation of all that is best and beautiful in art, education, philosophy and religion. They are not agitators, however, they are likely to be humble minded, too often succumbing to the snubs of their superior-seeming sisters. In the millennium these women, who are not all uneducated, will awaken to their responsibilities, realize their power, get together and demonstrate what the word woman really means. But when that great and glorious day comes, man must keep his hands off. It is commonly enough understood that great men arise in groups. Heretofore the world's grouping has been a grouping of men and by men. Women have been grouped largely according to the achievements or character of their fathers, brothers and husbands. True equality between men and women will exist only when a man will say to his wife or daughter: "I keep the secrets of my societies and the confidences of my fellow men. Do you keep the secrets of your societies and the confidences of your fellow women, and we will still meet on common ground as human beings." GERTRUDE E. KNOX.
Jamestown, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1915.

FINER ARTS IN AMERICA.

They Are Not Feminine, and, Anyway, We Have Done Other Things.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since the general awakening to the fact that women occupy about one-half of the inhabited world and are therefore an important factor in its history, various crimes have been attributed to them. The latest seems to be the rendering of the U. S. A. "womanish," letters having appeared in your columns to this effect.

Mr. P. H. Aylett sees this manifested conspicuously in literature and art. With the greatest respect for the U. S. A., I would ask what he means by American literature. If he is thinking of magazine stories or the latest novel, I agree they do "mince along through nurseries and boudoirs, &c." But Mr. Aylett surely does not call this literature. They make their appeal naturally to the weaker side of women who read them as a relaxation much the same as the burlesque and musical comedy shows appeal to the weaker side of men who go to them as a relaxation. There are of course fine American writers, but they are hardly numerous or great enough to have yet created a distinctive American literature, to be judged as such, and I fail to see how woman can influence either well or ill what does not exist.

As to art, I might write much in regard to the American artist pursuing his studies in Europe well out of the reach of the American woman, but will write only of what I have seen produced. I have looked in vain on exhibition walls for the "subject picture," the picture with a story. Such pictures undoubtedly pander to sentimentality—one of woman's great weaknesses. I believe, but the American artist seems almost entirely to taboo them. As to general technique, that of the American artist seems to me to be particularly vigorous and masculine. I fail to see anything effeminate in the virile work of, for instance, Winslow Homer, (but recently deceased.)

But in all the arts, (including music,) as in literature, America's great things have yet to be accomplished, so that it is rather premature to pass judgment on them and to say whether or not they are effeminate.

So far the great minds of America have been occupied in founding immense cities, building railroads, and in scientific discoveries. If American women have had to do with such conditions their influence can hardly have rendered the men effeminate, or how could these things have been accomplished?

In the latter part of his letter, Mr. Aylett goes into much detail as to the characteristic faults of women in general without showing very clearly how these make for the "womanishness" of the U. S. A. in particular. Women in common with men are not exactly perfect and, fortunately, nowadays they are publicly told so, in spite of Mr. Aylett's assertions to the contrary. In the days when David Copperfield wooed his Dora, it was the fashion to call all women angels, but we have improved since then. The frank criticism of women by men, and vice versa, which is found particularly in America, is conducive to the best development of both.

I will pass over all the terrible faults attributed to women by Mr. Aylett, for, as before pointed out, we are none of us perfect. I can only say from the close personal experience of the women of two other great nations that I do not see where the American women are any worse than their sisters. They cannot, therefore, exercise a more baneful influence over their country than the women of these other, presumably less womanish, countries do over theirs.

As to the sad object of pity calling forth the letters referred to—the American man—I don't think he has much cause to worry. If women have influenced him too greatly he need only to look around on this remarkable country and see what he has accomplished in so short a time, to know that at least this influence has not rendered him effeminate. As a personal tribute to this same poor American man may I say that I would feel safer from molestation on Broadway at midnight than on Regent Street or the Grand Boulevards at 6 o'clock in the evening. Does this show unmanliness in the American man? AN ENGLISHWOMAN.
New York, Aug. 1, 1915.

A MAN PROTESTS.

Says His Kind Possess the Same Faults They Criticise in Woman.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I did not see the letter of Edward L. Wood so highly praised in the lengthy epistle of Patrick H. Aylett, but if it was as narrow-minded and unjust as the latter I am not surprised that it aroused a furore "in the ranks of the gentler sex."

Mr. Aylett's letter, to put it mildly, is full of obvious inaccuracies. His assertion that women object to public generalizations about their sex lacks support. For the fact is that from the cradle to the grave man discusses, generalizes, criticises, lies about woman with a relish that no other occupation has for him. And yet the sex that loves, nurses, and often dies for him never protests against his unjust attacks, but constantly tries to conform to the ideal that man assures her is the only right one because it is the one he thinks he prefers.

Plato is our authority for arriving at conclusions both by arguing from the personal to the general experience, and vice versa. I use this formula in making the following reply to Mr. Aylett.

It seems to me that man, both by his private and public history, has proven himself at least to be, as Shakespeare puts it:

One foot on shore, one foot on land.
To one thing constant never.

Yet this indecisive being, who first courts, then neglects and abuses, the woman who risks her life for him, insists upon maintaining the stupid legend of male superiority.

Mr. Aylett states that the average woman does not want truth. It is a fact that the average man is as shy of the truth as a burnt cat of the kitchen stove, and that he never utters it unless forced occasionally to do so. A woman will wreck her whole life in order to arrive at the truth about things; she will confess her own "sins" when there is absolutely no chance of her being found out. Why? Because she has an innate passion for truth. The average man will shut his eyes to anything, no matter how serious, that would interfere with his enjoyment of a good meal; and as for his ever confessing even the most trivial fault—well, if one of them had ever been caught doing it he would now be on exhibition as the only one of his kind.

Mr. Aylett says: "She expects man to stand as a part of buffer between her and the sterner realities of life." If that is true, her expectations are quite vain. I know personally many couples where the husband is too weak in character to demand money that is due to him, or not diplomatic enough to get it without quarreling with his debtors. These husbands leave the collection of their incomes to their wives, who immediately turn the money over to their lords and masters. I know another couple. The husband has been enjoying life in New York for many months; the wife has been operating on the wounded soldiers of the Allies on the battlefields of Northern France during all that time, shells often bursting within twenty feet of her. No man stood between the women of Belgium and the stern reality of drunken, amorous, murderous soldiers.

Sir Almroth Wright makes an absolutely false assertion when he states that "woman has further stifled discussion by placing her taboo upon anything seriously unflattering being said about her in public." Your publication of the letters of Mr. Wood and Mr. Aylett should be sufficient answer to that. But, if Mr. Aylett were of the discerning type, it might be pointed out to him that women have nothing to say in these matters; the owners of periodicals, the only vehicles of public discussion, are chiefly men—the so-called "women's magazines" being run by men for women as men think women like things to be.

American or any other men are afraid of public opinion—again Mr. Aylett is correct. It is true, as he states, that only women show public resentment at injustice and dishonorable deeds.

"Women are envious, petty, backbiting, and uncharitable when there is a conflict of interests as between themselves," &c. It has been my experience that there are some women who are like that; it has also been my experience that most men exhibit the traits above mentioned when their interests are attacked. In fact, I have even known men who were petty, back-biting, and uncharitable to women when their interests were threatened by women. I have known men who gossiped maliciously about each other, who related amusing stories about the women who loved and trusted them; and as for history, it is full of traitors, chiefly of the male sex.

Mr. Aylett is hard put to it to quote the insane, degenerate Nietzsche and the sweet, old-lady philosopher Ruskin in his attack on women. In view of the constant revelations of corruption among the males who manage our civic affairs, it is rather amusing to have Mr. Aylett state that women are quite innocent of science, philosophy, and civic morality. Since science has opened its doors, grudgingly enough, to women the sex has not been wholly innocent of its teachings. As for philosophy, it is quite evident that they possess more than men do, for it is beyond thought that the male sex would ever permit its greatness to be questioned with any degree of equanimity, while women endure with complacency, if not complete indifference, most of the ridiculous statements constantly made about them. GILBERT RIDDELL.

TALLEST BUILDING IN THE PENNSYLVANIA ZONE SECTION, TWENTY-TWO STORIES, COVERING EIGHTH AVENUE BLOCK FRONT

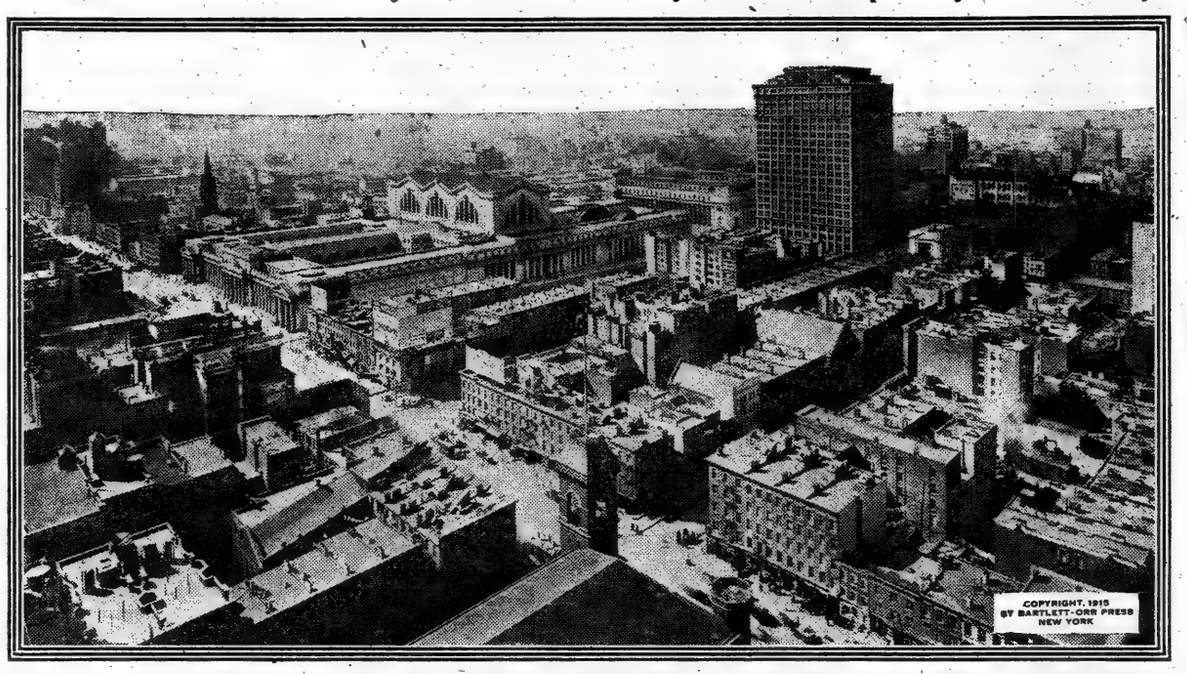
Enormous Structure for Printing Trades Opposite Post Office at Thirty-third Street—Financed by Prominent Realty Operator—Total Investment Will Approximate $3,500,000—Several Floors Already Leased—Ready for Occupancy Next May

WORK was started last week on the largest building operation undertaken in New York City this year. It will be a twenty-two-story structure, covering the entire Eighth Avenue block front on the west side from Thirty-third to Thirty-fourth Street. Right in the heart of the Pennsylvania Station centre and directly opposite the new Post Office on Eighth Avenue, from Thirty-second to Thirty-third Street, this towering skyscraper will be the most ambitious building operation by private interests in the Penn zone section.

The size, combined with its central location and the character of several of the tenants already obtained for a number of floors, will virtually make this building the centre of the printing and allied trades in the new uptown headquarters, chiefly in the upper Chelsea district, from Twenty-third to Forty-second Street, west of Sixth Avenue.

The structure will be known as the Printing Crafts Building. The architect's plans, as filed a short time ago, estimated the cost at about $2,500,000. The land was held at $1,000,000, and the necessary financing has been arranged by a prominent real estate operator. The two noteworthy operations started this year which most nearly approach this Pennsylvania zone improvement are the sixteen-story office building on the old Hoffman House and Albemarle Hotel sites, representing a total investment of about $3,000,000, and the twelve-story structure under construction by Barnum & Everdell on the westerly Broadway block front between Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth streets, involving, with the land, from $3,000,000 to $3,250,000.

Contracts for the sale of the Eighth Avenue block were signed last December by Edward L. Larkin and other interests, and the sale was announced in January. The property fronts 197.6 on the avenue by 100 on each street. With the exception of two street parcels, 302 West Thirty-fourth Street and 303 West Thirty-third Street, it was held by the owners, Archibald D. Russell, Percy R. Pyne and Moses T. Pyne, at $1,000,000. They bought it from Robert E. Dowling in 1906 for a reported consideration of $725,000. Joseph P. Day negotiated the sale of the block front which was occupied by the old Haeger storage warehouse, and housewreckers began tearing down that structure last week. Title to the property has been taken in the name of the 461 Eighth Avenue Company.



Birdseye View of Pennsylvania Zone Centre Showing Printing Crafts Building as It Will Appear When Completed. Drawn to Scale by Bartlett-Orr Press.

In view of the fact that it has been very difficult to secure building loans for office or loft buildings this year, it was feared that an operation running into $3,500,000 could not be financed, particularly when it became known that Mr. Russell and his associates wanted to be paid off in cash before the building loan could become a lien on their property.

In the meantime Brett & Goode, as agents of the building, received so many encouraging applications from large printing firms as to lead them to announce that, if completion could be guaranteed by May 1, 1916, they felt confident of renting all the available space, about 500,000 square feet, from the plans. Leases have already been signed with the Bartlett-Orr Press, the Eugene C. Lewis Company, Rogers & Co., Edgar Printing and Stationery Company, and two other firms. The space taken by these companies includes the twenty-second, or studio, floor, the twenty-first, twentieth, twelfth, and eleventh floors, part of the third floor, and a ground-floor store—a total area of 130,000 square feet. A price of $15,000 per floor was asked for, and it is understood that the five tenants paid close to this figure. The leases are for twenty-year terms from May 1, 1916, and these aggregate rentals approximate $1,700,000.

The Bartlett-Orr Press will occupy all of the twenty-first and part of the twenty-second floor. The company has been on West Twenty-fifth Street for the last nine years. It was the first one of the printing establishments to break away from the old Brooklyn Bridge district and its removal from Rose Street to Sixth Avenue and Twenty-fifth Street in 1906 was the forerunner of the uptown migration of the trade. The Eugene C. Lewis Company is at 218 William Street, near the Brooklyn Bridge. Rogers & Co. are now at 9 to 15 Murray Street.

The Brett & Goode Company states that the thirteenth to nineteenth floors have been set aside for office occupancy. It is planned to make the building the headquarters of the various trade organizations and space for meeting rooms has been set aside on one of the upper floors. Owing to the strength of the floors, designed to carry a load of 250 pounds to the square foot, it will be possible to set up and operate printing presses within the offices.

Special care has been given to the design of the steel and an elaborate system of bracing will be installed in order that tenants on the office floors, and particularly the engraving departments on the twenty-second floor, may be absolutely guaranteed against vibration.

The façade of this building will be of rough gray stone up to the fourth story and of plain gray face brick above, with band courses of white terra cotta at the fourth and seventeenth floors and a line of pillars extending from the seventeenth to the twentieth floors. The design is in harmony with the Pennsylvania Station and the General Post Office. As it fronts on three streets, with an assurance of permanent light on the fourth side over low buildings, it will exhibit a finished appearance from all directions.

HARD PROBLEM IN OLD RESTRICTIONS

Inconsistencies in Legal Decisions Have Only Added to the Difficulties.

SOME ABSURDITIES CITED

Realty Committee Calls the Situation Paradoxical—Hardship to Owners.

The history of building restrictions in New York City furnishes a long series of interesting as well as troublesome cases in the law courts, contributing in many cases to the annoyance of building operators and frequently leading to the abandonment of large projected improvements. The subject has recently been carefully investigated by a committee of the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests composed of A. T. Sieker, Chairman; Edmund L. Baylies, Henry R. Chittick, Walter Lindner, and Alfred C. Reeves. The object of the investigation was to reach some reasonable working basis whereby the difficulties of the restrictive covenants might be lessened, but the committee virtually admits the impossibility by plainly saying: "It is impossible at present to lay down any rules for the guidance of the real estate fraternity on this subject, and hence the problem of restrictive covenants in this city is paradoxical, a problem almost without a solution."

A résumé of the committee's report is a statement of facts clearly demonstrating what are termed many inconsistencies in the legal decisions.

Thus, apartment houses are permitted in the face of private house restrictions in the Murray Hill tract; on Twentieth Street, Manhattan, on West Seventy-eighth Street between Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue; on 140th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue, but a three-family house may not be used as such on Sedgwick Avenue and Undercliff Avenue in the Bronx; a private house cannot be used as a sanitarium in Brooklyn nor can a private garage be built on the same lot in White Plains. A tenement house may be erected despite a private-house covenant in Brooklyn but not on Tenth Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, Manhattan. A private house may be altered into an undertaking establishment on Madison Avenue and Forty-first Street; into a dressmaking shop on West Twenty-fourth Street; but not into a business building on West Fortieth Street, and neither may a dressmaker hang out a sign on West Fifty-second Street.

A nurses' home may be erected on Seventy-first Street and Madison Avenue, a livery stable may be maintained among the flats on East 139th Street, an apartment hotel is permitted on Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue, but to bake bread and cake in a baker's oven on the Southern Boulevard will be enjoined. To maintain a resin refinery in the Erie Basin section of Brooklyn is a nuisance, but the elevated railroad in the Bronx is permitted. A twelve-story loft building may be set out to the building line in violation of a set-back agreement on Twenty-sixth Street, Manhattan, but woe betide him who sets out a one-story shed on set-back space in Brooklyn. An automobile station at Broadway and Eighty-first Street amounts to a wrong use, but a garage in a private-house neighborhood is all right in Flatbush.

"All this is bad and discouraging to those who deal in real estate and those who are called upon to advise owners and investors," says the committee.

"Here we have violated covenants galore and covenants respected, we have the courts allowing violations but calling the covenants incumbrances and allowing rejections because of them. Is there a remedy, such as the remedy now being attempted by a number of lawyers? This is exemplified by action now pending affecting property at Seventy-second Street and Madison Avenue in which the Dime Savings Bank brought all the owners of a restricted area into court on an allegation that a covenant restricting that property to private houses was antiquated, and should be removed as a cloud on its title. Similar actions are pending as to properties on Fifty-seventh Street east and 105th Street west.

"A further theory has been urged to the effect that inasmuch as New York is a city where trade and tenements come close to residences and a block of privacy is often surrounded by business, it may be well to recognize a block as a distinct entity, separate and apart from its surrounding squares and bring actions to remove covenants as to separate blocks."

New Building for Hampton Shops.

The steady northward expansion of high-class commercial trade in the Fifth Avenue centre, above Forty-second Street, is shown in the eleven-story business structure now under construction at 18 and 20 East Fiftieth Street, between Fifth and Madison Avenues. For many years the well-known Cutler School for Boys was located there. The new structure is being erected by the Hampton Shops, now at 34 West Thirty-second Street, furniture dealers. The style of the building is Gothic. The seventh floor will be devoted to a series of living rooms, dining rooms, libraries and sleeping rooms, furnished in the style of different periods.

DEMAND $100,000 REDUCTION IN LONG ISLAND RAILROAD LEASE

Joint Conference of Public Service Commission and Board of Estimate to Consider the Matter—Transit Associations Present Strong Arguments for Acceptance of Lease at Reduced Rental—Increase in Taxes the First Year Will Pay Entire Rental.

At a conference last Wednesday between George McAneny, Chairman of the Rapid Transit Committee of the Board of Estimate, members of the Public Service Commission and Borough President Connelly, arguments in favor of the leasing of the Long Island tracks for the operation of dual subway trains from Corona to College Point, Whitestone, and Little Neck were submitted by representatives of the North Shore Transit Association and the Third Ward Rapid Transit League.

Mr. McAneny stated that he recognized that the Third Ward was entitled to rapid transit, and he would be disposed to favorably consider the railroad company's proposition, provided satisfactory terms could be agreed upon, intimating that a large reduction from the $250,000 rental demanded by the railroad company would have to be made before the proposition would receive the approval of the city authorities.

The brief submitted in favor of the railroad proposition was as follows:

"The North Shore Transit Association and the Third Ward Rapid Transit League take the liberty of submitting for your consideration the following memoranda relative to the proposition now being considered by the Public Service Commission, involving the leasing of the tracks, facilities, and right of way over that portion of the North Shore branch of the Long Island Railroad extending from the J. C. tower, west of the junction on the Flushing meadows, to Whitestone Landing and to Little Neck, a distance of about ten and one-half miles, through the major portion of the developed section of the Third Ward of Queens Borough.

"Under the dual plan or system of rapid transit service an elevated line was provided for, extending in Queens Borough easterly as far as Albertus Avenue, Corona, terminating there. This line has been constructed to that point. No provision whatever has as yet been made for the extension of such rapid transit service east of Corona.

"The Third Ward of Queens Borough comprises an area of approximately 22,000 acres, nearly equal in size to the entire Borough of the Bronx. It has a population in excess of 60,000. It has an assessed valuation of $70,000,000, and pays an annual tax of $1,350,000. It is an ideal location for the construction of single family dwellings of the moderate class, and the only section of the city where land values are still such as to permit of the ownership of an individual home at moderate cost, within the financial limits of many who would gladly enjoy the benefits of a suburban home were the cost thereof and access thereto within their means.

"There is nowhere in the entire city any such extent in area, in population, or in assessed valuation that has not been in some measure provided with rapid transit service at a 5-cent fare, enabling the citizens of this great city to reach the business or working centre for a single fare and within reasonable time. The cost of transportation to and from the various sections in the Third Ward of Queens Borough is and has been such as make living within that territory prohibitive to the man of moderate means and with a moderate salary. Particularly is this true where there be more than one member of the family who must needs travel from home to business.

"The cost at present, including what in most instances is necessary, via, car fare from the terminal at Pennsylvania Station to and from the office or shop, is from 37 cents to 41 cents per day to those who commute; the single fare one way from 35 cents to 53 cents, and the excursion rate from 55 cents to 84 cents. That this condition has created an embargo upon building within this territory is evidenced by the fact that out of some 3,300 purchasers from one of the larger developers, who have paid 91 per cent. of the total cost of their plots, less than 10 per cent. have built thereon, the reason given being that the cost of transportation to and from the home, if so erected, was too great a burden.

"A definite promise was made quite some time ago that if certain moneys could be released there would be appropriated therefrom an amount sufficient to extend the elevated line from Corona, its present terminus, to Main Street, Flushing, at Amity Street, the estimated expenditure required therefor being, we understand, approximately $1,250,000. The construction of this extension would be for a considerable distance over or through the Flushing meadows, and a bridge carrying the road across Flushing Creek, would be necessary; likewise the widening of Amity Street in Flushing.

"The bridge across the creek would have to be a draw, not less than twenty-four feet in the clear above mean high water. The foundation work across Flushing meadows would of necessity be troublesome and expensive, and it may well be that the cost would very greatly exceed the estimate above expressed. As to the time required for this construction of the elevated lines, and of the bridge, and the widening of Amity Street, several years at best must elapse before such proposed service could be inaugurated.

"The construction of the suggested extension from Corona, connecting at or near J. C. tower on the meadows, can be done, we are assured, for $360,000, and if now authorized can be completed at or about the time the general transit lines in Queens are connected up and service inaugurated thereon. The saving of approximately $900,000 in cost; a saving of surely not less than two years in time, and, in one instance, providing service only so far as Main Street, Flushing; in the other instance, providing service throughout the entire Third Ward, and to all of the existing centres or communities therein and at the lesser cost.

"It has been plainly stated by the city authorities that even if the construction of an extension from Corona to Main Street, Flushing, was undertaken, further extension of the line, east of that point, could not be undertaken for years to come, hence all the rest of the great territory comprising the Third Ward of Queens Borough, all the rest of the taxable values therein, all the rest of the communities that have developed in that section, would be deprived of any benefit accruing from the enormous outlay now being made for general rapid transit purposes throughout the city, although required to contribute to any burden which the interest upon the bonded indebtedness created for such rapid transit service may impose, and to any deficit in operation thereof, in equal proportion with the other communities deriving direct benefit therefrom.

"The construction of an extension to Flushing Main Street would bring about changes in business conditions, and values there, existing centres created originally by the establishment of the two stations, Flushing Main Street and Flushing Bridge Street, and built up by the maintenance thereof, would naturally be injuriously affected and depreciation would necessarily result.

"In no way except by the proposed plan of extending the rapid transit service over the tracks of the Long Island Railroad Company can the various sections of the Third Ward beyond Main Street, Flushing, such as Upper Flushing, Murray Hill, Broadway, Auburndale, Bayside, Douglaston, and Little Neck, on the one branch, and Flushing Bridge Street, College Point, Malba, Whitestone, and Whitestone Landing on the other, be provided with rapid transit service until such time as the financiers of the city will permit of the construction of further extensions, and that doubtless it will be at least five to ten years before the line might be extended even so far as Bayside; certainly ten to twenty years before such extensions could be had to Whitestone and to Little Neck. And even then some of the communities, such as College Point, Malba, and Whitestone Landing could not be taken care of other than by independent lines at enormous expense.

"The rental suggested by the Long Island Railroad Company, viz., $250,000, may be, doubtless is, considerably in excess of the fair rental value of the leasehold offered. We are not sufficiently informed to express a definite opinion with regard to the amount of rental that would be fair. It is submitted, however, that in determining the question of rental there should be taken into consideration not only the value of the property to be leased, not only the present and probable increase in the earning capacity thereof, but the very great benefit that would accrue both to the communities to be served thereby and to the city, in the way of increased revenue resulting from the enhancement in assessed valuations.

"More than this, there should likewise be taken into consideration the inevitable reduction in assessed valuations due to the depreciation in realty values throughout the Third Ward of Queens Borough in the event no provision be made for rapid transit service to that section, while practically every other section of the city is being, in some measure, provided with rapid transit service and at a single 5 cent fare. In this connection we submit that we have the right to ask that comparison be made with the capital expenditure and the interest charge imposed by the construction of various extensions in different sections of the city already authorized and in some instances practically completed.

"The estimated cost of the White Plains Avenue line is $4,119,000, the interest upon which, at 5 per cent., would be $205,950. The estimated cost of the Jerome Avenue line is $7,745,000, and the annual interest charge on that, at 5 per cent., will be $387,250. The Southern Boulevard and Westchester Avenue line is estimated to cost $16,156,000, with an annual interest charge of $807,800. All these lines are in the Borough of The Bronx, the aggregate capital expenditure is $28,020,000, and the aggregate annual interest charge, at 5 per cent., is $1,401,000, and this in addition to the expenditures already made in the Borough of The Bronx, prior to the construction of these extensions.

"The Eastern Parkway line in Brooklyn is estimated to cost $10,820,000, with an annual interest charge of $541,000 per year, while the Fourth Avenue Subway is estimated to cost $21,321,000, upon which the annual interest payment will be $1,066,050.

"Besides these figures the request for a capital expenditure of $360,000, an annual rental of, say, $150,000, whereby an area almost equal in extent to that of the Bronx would be provided with rapid transit service, seems so modest as to scarcely necessitate the time given to this discussion thereof.

"The saving, that is to say the difference between the cost of the extension of the line from Corona to Main and Amity Streets, Flushing, which has already been practically promised, and the cost of the suggested connection with the Long Island Railroad, viz., some $900,000, would provide the entire rental at, say, $150,000 per year, over a period of seven or eight years, interest on the sum saved being, of course, included in this calculation.

"The increase in assessed valuations in the Bronx was at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum for the first six years following the installation of the subway service. We contend that the ratio of increase in the Third Ward of Queens Borough following the inauguration of rapid transit service over the tracks of the Long Island Railroad will at least equal the per cent. or ratio of increase that followed in the Bronx.

"It is not unreasonable to say that the increase will be greater, but, assuming that it be no greater, the actual increase in income from ordinary taxation, based upon 20 per cent. per annum increase in assessed values, would mean the first year $270,000 per annum, or nearly twice the annual rental computed at the rate of $150,000 per year, and at the expiration of five years $1,350,000 increase in annual income from taxation, or nearly ten times such suggested annual rental. Reduce this by one-half, consider that the increase will be but 10 per cent. per annum, and at the expiration of five years that increased income from general taxation will be $675,000, or nearly five times such suggested rental.

"Instead of being in any sense a burden upon the city at large, the proposition will of necessity result in a profit to the city. Nowhere else in the entire city is it possible, we submit, to provide rapid transit service to the extent of ten and one-half miles in length to a community of more than 60,000 people, an assessed valuation of $70,000,000 paying annual tax of $1,350,000 at the present time, by a capital expenditure of but $360,000.

"The construction of a city-owned line, an extension from Corona, providing service to the same territory that will be provided for if a lease be made with the Long Island Railroad Company (excluding College Point, which cannot be provided for except by such a lease) would cost, including land damage, approximately $6,000,000, the interest upon which, at 5 per cent., would be $300,000, to which of course would have to be added allowance for depreciation, to say nothing of the amortization.

"If the same service can be furnished to the same communities through the medium of a lease with the Long Island Railroad Company, at a rental of approximately one-half that sum, the city has made a most excellent bargain, has avoided the necessity of any substantial capital expenditure, will have provided rapid transit service for a very considerable area, and will have made an investment that must of necessity be returned many times over in increased valuations and increased income by way of taxation thereon. A very considerable number of people, some 60,000 at the present time, an assessed valuation of $70,000,000, in all fairness entitled to participation to some extent in the benefits flowing from rapid transit service now being furnished through the city, will have been reasonably provided for and at a merely nominal cost.

"We insist that the Third Ward of Queens Borough is entitled to fair treatment in the matter of rapid transit service; that the taxpayers and residents there have a right to share in the benefit to accrue from rapid transit service throughout the city, as well as in the burdens imposed thereby. The latter they must assume, the former rests with the public officials having control of the subject.

"We respectfully submit that the proposition of the Long Island Railroad Company should be given favorable consideration, and upon terms fair alike to the city and to the company, and to the communities to be served, an agreement should be promptly arranged and progressed to early consummation.

"North Shore Transit Association, John W. Rapp, President; Clinton T. Roe, Vice President; Frederic Storm, Secretary; Laurence B. Halleran, Treasurer. Executive Committee (John M. Riehle, Chairman) Third Ward Rapid Transit League, Rodman Richardson, President.

WE SAID "WAIT," but the 400 Lots and 7 Houses at

Edgemere

Long Island, had to be sold

The property is right near the L. I. R. R. station, right near the ocean and within walking distance of Far Rockaway. Of course, the prices were ridiculously low. Some of the best was bought "for a turn" and can still be had for much less than actual value.

We have opened an office right on the property, Cor. Lincoln & Dickerson Aves. If you have a few dollars saved for a rare investment or homesite, here is a war-time opportunity, which you can't afford to miss. Take a day off this week-end. Come and study this proposition—consider and compare. You can reach only one conclusion.

Office open all day Saturday and Sunday. Evenings by Appointments.

SOMETHING FOR SOMETHING

I have in Dutchess County, N. Y., an attractive, well appointed, well watered, well kept farm of approximately four hundred acres. It is accessible, has several old and young orchards, a large trout stream, extensive woods and unsurpassed views. The house is large, in good repair, furnace-heated, and with spring water introduced. Three good barns furnish accommodation for seventy head of horned stock, besides horses and sheep, and there is ample pasturage for that number of cattle. Barns, outbuildings, fences, &c., are in good condition. This farm is without mortgage, tax, or other incumbrance; is productive, as inspection of the barns, fields, and orchards will show, and is very salubrious. The owner having met with an accident that unfits him for active work at present, wishes to travel, and will make reasonable terms to the right applicant, but wishes it understood that application without satisfactory reference will be a waste of time. This is the time to look at farm property. In the Winter all farms must be taken on faith, in the Spring all poor farms look better than they are, but at the end of harvest all farms show for what they are. For address and other particulars apply to Mr. John R. Bacon, 333 4th Av., New York City. Phone 3637 Madison Av.

A Roomy, Comfortable City Home of the Older Type

Five of the houses under our management are of an older type, built when comfort, large rooms and a certain homelike atmosphere were important considerations. The size of the rooms and the moderate rentals more than compensate for the absence of certain things found in the newest apartments.

All of these are elevator apartments, and all have unusual closet and pantry space, with in many cases particularly large kitchens. Some of them have real open fireplaces.

A great many of the tenants have lived in the same apartments since these houses were built, but changing conditions necessarily result in a few vacancies at this time every year.

Three of the houses in question are located on the West Side, between Broadway and the River, and two of them are located in the old and fashionable residence section of Brooklyn, known as the Heights, directly opposite Wall Street and overlooking the East River.

We have selected these five older houses from those under our management because we feel that there are a good many people in New York who will appreciate comforts such as found in an old home, and because we give such close attention to the care of these houses that we know exactly what we have to offer to a prospective tenant. Those in Manhattan are three minutes' walk from the Seventy-ninth Street Subway station, and those in Brooklyn are four minutes' walk from Borough Hall station.

4 to 11 rooms.
One, two and three baths.
$600 to $2,700.

In Manhattan:
391 West End Avenue (near 79th St.)
495 West End Avenue (S. W. Cor. 84th St.)
250 West 82nd Street (S. W. Cor. Broadway)

In Brooklyn:
111-113 Montague Street
115-117 Montague Street

The Superintendent upon the premises will be glad to show prospective tenants through any of the houses, or direct information may be obtained from the office of

Loton H. Slawson Company 171 Madison Avenue, New York

WAR AIDS SMALL CONCERNS.

Engineering Journal Points to Opportunities in Domestic Trade.

Experts in the manufacture of explosives see in the present abnormal demand for munitions an opportunity that numerous small companies of the country have been long waiting for. It is pointed out in mining circles that with Europe's appetite for munitions keeping the large manufacturers busy in filling rush orders, the small plants are in a position to obtain a hold on the market for powder and dynamite for use in domestic pursuits of peace.

"The big companies are now absorbed," says the Engineering and Mining Journal, "in filling their great war contracts, in supplying high explosives to the armies of Europe. They are making fabulous profits, selling for about $1 per pound what costs them about 30 cents to make, so it is said, and the quotations for their shares have soared. While they are thus engaged there is a remarkable chance for their competitors, large and small, to make themselves known and capture a large share of the domestic business. For this there is every inducement. The peaceful business is not immediately so profitable as the military business, but it is more permanent. With mining going on at the high rate at present—copper mines, lead mines, zinc mines, and gold mines being worked at their utmost capacity, while iron mining is rapidly rising to normal—there is no sense in anybody shutting his eyes to the possibilities of expansion with the excuse that times are dull.

"Those engineers who have broken away from the traditional routine and have tried the dynamites manufactured by the smaller independents find that, though less well known, they do work equal to the old standard brands, that their technical divisions are equally keen to supply 'the right powder to suit their customers' varying conditions, and that almost invariably the independent powder can be bought for less money."

RECALLS TRIP MADE IN 1867.

Old Man Calls to Greet Retiring St. Louis Purser After 49 Years.

Just before the American liner St. Louis sailed for Liverpool, at noon, yesterday, a white-haired old man went on board and asked for Howard E. Hinsley, the purser, who is retiring after forty-eight years' sea service.

When the purser went to the gangway the old man shook hands with him and said: "I wanted to see how much you had grown since I crossed with you last."

"When was that!" inquired the purser.

"In 1867, on the old City of Baltimore, and I haven't been over since," the stranger replied.

The St. Louis had 225 first, 185 second and 265 steerage passengers, and 3,400 sacks of mail.

American Underwear in Wales.

In reviewing the opportunity for American underwear in Wales, Vice Consul William L. Jenkins writes from Swansea that conditions are now more favorable for the introduction of such goods than they have been for many years, and though most orders for the coming Fall and Winter have been placed, preparations may be made for the next Summer season. Wholesale prices for men's underwear vary from $5.84 to $41.12 per dozen, depending entirely on quality, the most popular being those from $5.84 to $14.60 per dozen, particularly those bought at $11.68 per dozen. Goods costing about $6.08 a dozen generally retail at 60 cents a garment. As a whole, prices are now 25 per cent. higher than they were before the war. For instance, heavy Winter drawers, which had been bought for $17.52 a dozen, now cost $20.44. The vests cost $1.46 per dozen less than the drawers.

PICTURES GERMANY AS NEAR-BANKRUPT

Foe Not Quite Succeeding in Living from Hand to Mouth, British Critic Asserts.

GOLD PREMIUM FORBIDDEN

Now Gold Currency Increased by Two-thirds—Growth In Reserve of Reichsbank Assailed.

Pamphlets purporting to set forth accurately the economic position of each of the warring nations have been put into wide circulation in England in recent weeks. There is no signature attached nor any means of telling whether they have the official sanction of the British Government, except that the printing firm which issues them is known to do a great deal of Government work. The firm's name is printed on the first page, and because of this London readers take it for granted that the statements presented are what the authorities desire them to read and believe.

Financial and economic conditions in Germany are dealt with in the latest paper, copies of which were brought here by a passenger on the Adriatic on her latest trip to this side.

"Germany has boasted much that it has found no need for a moratorium," says the pamphlet. "The wisdom that prevented the declaration of a moratorium can be admitted. England, too, would have been better advised not to have resorted to this measure. But it may be pointed out that when the English moratorium was removed, the measures in Germany for the protection of debtors in various branches of the business, which amounted, except in name, to a virtual moratorium, were still in force. And it should further be remembered that, whereas not only are the German stock exchanges closed, but in addition the publication of any record of stock exchange dealings forbidden under a heavy penalty, the English stock exchange has been reopened since Jan. 4 of the present year.

Labor in Germany.

"It might have been expected that since so large a proportion of the male population had been drawn off into the army there would have been a large demand for labor in Germany, even on the present heavily reduced scale of production. But this would not appear to be the case. According to the official Imperial Labor Gazette, for every 100 places offered to men, there were in January, 1915, 125 applicants for work, for every 100 places offered to women 167 applicants.

"But it is in Germany's financial position that assertions and appearances are most deceptive. It is unnecessary to accuse the Reichsbank of 'cooking' its figures or of lying as to the amount of gold in its cellars. One's own showing of the position of Germany is serious enough. Great Britain, despite the heavy strain that has been put upon it, remains a free market for gold. Germany, immediately on the outbreak of war, found it necessary to resort to an inconvertible paper currency. As was to be expected, the value of the German note abroad fell rapidly, and already in April had reached a 14 per cent discount. This depreciation, however, was felt not only abroad. Long before this the publication of any figures of exchange operations had been prohibited in the German papers. In Germany itself a premium began to appear upon gold, and the Government was forced to take refuge in a measure which conflicts strangely with its professions of financial soundness. In November of last year an Imperial edict was issued forbidding the buying of gold coin at a premium, under the heavy penalty of imprisonment up to one year, and, in addition, of a fine up to £250.

Bank Note Issues.

"Having thought it wise to substitute a paper currency for gold, the German Government has carried out this policy with a more than German thoroughness. Between the outbreak of war and the end of April, some £171,000,000 in convertible banknotes have been brought into circulation, and to these must be added another £38,000,000 for the so-called Treasury and Loan notes. By a piece of remarkable financial effrontery, these two last classes of notes, one constituting an uncovered liability of the Government, the other the liabilities of individuals who have pledged their property in the loan offices, are allowed to rank with gold as a reserve against the Reichsbank's own notes! Taking into account the further large issues of silver, nickel, and bronze coin, the amount of non-gold currency in circulation in Germany has been increased by about £200,000,000, that is to say, by at least two-thirds since the outbreak of war.

"Against this is to be set the much-boasted increase in the gold reserve of the Reichsbank. At the end of April this reserve stood at £118,000,000, an increase of £51,000,000 since the last normal return before the war. (It may be pointed out that at the end of April the gold holding of the Bank of France was £160,000,000 and the gold holding of the Banks of Russia £171,000,000.) Apart from the £10,000,000 brought in from the War Treasure stored up in the Julius Tower at Spandau, this increase has been secured by a widespread campaign of agitation. House to house visitations have been made for the purpose of changing notes for gold. The surrender of gold to the Reichsbank has been preached in school and pulpit. How much has come in from Austria it is impossible to say. In all probability a large part of the reserve of £51,000,000 held by the Austro-Hungarian Bank at the outbreak of war has been transferred to Berlin. Significantly enough, the weekly statements of that bank stopped abruptly at the end of July last.

False Feeling of Security.

"Up to now the use made of this increased reserve has been small. Its main purpose remains to keep up a fictitious feeling of security in Germany itself in the face of the flooding of the country with an enormous issue of inconvertible paper currency. Some small amount has been used to bribe Turkey into war. Further small sums have been let out in driblets to neutral countries in a vain attempt to stay the rapid movement of the exchanges against Germany. How completely this particular part of the German financial campaign has failed can be seen from the fact that, at the end of April, the German exchanges on neutral countries had fallen by an average of over 13 per cent. At the end of April, while the English exchange on America was 4¾ per cent. below par, and the French exchange 2½ per cent., the German exchange had fallen to 13½ per cent. below par.

"But the main part of the German campaign of self-glorification has been reserved for the Government's financing of the war, that is to say, for the raising of the two great war loans. On paper, the sums of £223,000,000 raised at the end of last year, and £453,000,000, which is now being paid in, are imposing figures. Their impressiveness, however, is less great when it is remembered that these are no more than funding loans which in both cases have failed to fund the amount of floating debt already incurred on behalf of the war. Some time before the first loan had been fully paid in the floating debt of the Government at the Reichsbank had begun to rise again, and the same failure to pay off existing liabilities before new borrowing was found necessary had occurred in the case of the second loan. At the best, Germany is not quite succeeding in living from hand to mouth. The whole problem of the present and the future is still before it, and, in the meantime, it is relying again on the makeshift of borrowing from the Reichsbank, which has been granted the unlimited power of issuing paper money to satisfy the needs of the Government.

Subscriptions to Loans.

"But there is another point to be considered. How the sums figuring in the two loans were made up we do not know. We know that about one-quarter of the first and one-sixth of the second loan was subscribed through money raised by the pawning of securities and goods at the so-called loan offices, institutions set up with the ingenious intention of relieving the Reichsbank of its business of making advances, and of disguising under the name of loan notes the considerable addition to the Reichsbank's paper issue which is being made in this way. We can tell, too, from the movement of deposits, roughly how much of the loan can be considered new money, and from this we can draw some inferences as to the devices by which the full totals of £223,000,000 and £453,000,000 have been reached.

"It would appear that a very considerable slice of each loan must be no more than a book transaction with various large contractors; that Krupps, for instance, have been paid not in cash, but in holdings of war loan, in promises to pay, possibly in ten years' time, if the Government then sees fit or finds itself able to do so. For a nation which can deal with its contractors in this way the size of the loans it 'raises' is only limited by the amount of war material it can consume. What is to be the position of these firms, and all depending on them, after the war, it is not easy to imagine."

TO DEVELOP LATIN AMERICA.

New Corporation Will Finance Public Utility Companies.

Application for a charter for the Latin American Public Works Corporation has been filed in Delaware, calling for an authorized capital of $1,000,000. The incorporators were J. G. White, head of J. G. White & Co., which has financed numerous public utility companies in this country; Douglas I. McKay and Severo Mallet-Prevost of the firm of Curtis, Mallet-Prevost & Colt.

The activities of the new corporation are to be directed especially toward the acquisition of concessions and contracts for public works in Central and South America. It is planned to conduct preliminary first-hand studies of the field, during which attention will be paid to general business opportunities as well as to prospects for building electric power and lighting plants and harbor improvements. A representative of the corporation will shortly sail for South America to begin the work.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Profit taking in the late trading materially reduced the advances that had occurred shortly after the opening. This was particularly true of the shares that have recently been advanced so rapidly. Business was in good volume, with the odd-lot dealings on a large scale.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Reaction Carries Some of the War Issues Down—Active Short Session.

Yesterday's stock market session supplied a fitting close to an interesting week. The desire of many traders to take advantage of the big advance in some of their stocks rather than carry commitments over Sunday led to some sharp declines soon after the opening, but it quickly developed that the general public is still willing to pick up the war issues, and declines alternated with rallies. The result was an unusually active session for a Saturday, with some wide price changes.

The speculative interest in the market again converged on the war issues and United States Steel. The latter does not belong to the war stocks, strictly speaking, since it has taken no orders for guns or ammunition, but there are few manufacturers of war supplies who do not have to buy raw material from the corporation. Nearly 50,000 shares of Steel sold in the two hours yesterday, over a range of 1%, closing with a net loss of one-half point. Bethlehem was unable to hold its advance to over 300, and on small sales broke to 290, at which price it showed a net loss of 10½ points. Crucible Steel was again active, with a fluctuation of 7¼ points, but it, too, closed off on profit taking, and its final price of 85½ showed a net loss of ¾. Willys-Overland stock and General Motors were both very strong, the latter closing with a gain of 8¾, while Willys added 5¼ to its previous close.

Interest in even the best of the rails is still dormant. Trading in Union Pacific yesterday amounted to less than that in a number of small industrial companies, with a fluctuation of 1⅝ and a net loss of ¾ at the end of the day. Reading, with almost exactly the same volume of transactions, lost a like amount on the net change.

Sterling exchange suffered a break yesterday to $4.75¾, compared with a close of $4.76 3-16 on Friday. The weakness was not explained by any change in the British policy of releasing gold for this centre.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

The Retailers of Tips.

The business of selling market tips languished and almost died in the long periods of inactivity following the recovery of 1908. When the market goes along day after day with gains and losses of an eighth to a quarter, making net changes of a point or less in several weeks, the best tipster in the world has nothing to sell. But in a market like the present he drives a prosperous trade in his information. In place of the stereotyped phrase, "Union Pacific looks good for a long pull," or "The coppers may safely be sold on any big bulge," the professional dispenser of market tips now sends out statements that bristle with interest. "When Crucible hung around 80 I told you to buy it and hold it for 86," read a well-known adviser's letter yesterday. "I now tell you to beware of bearish talk on Allis-Chalmers. I go on record as saying that it, too, will reach 80."

The Origin of Advice.

Where the real tips come from, and why they are let out by the men who, knowing the facts, might profit most by keeping their information to themselves, is always a mystery. The fact remains that a great many tips bear fruit, so that men who play them make money. A stock which has lain dormant for weeks may suddenly be tipped around, and in a few hours show a big advance, sometimes without any news to explain it. In a strong bull market it is natural that a majority of tips make good, because the tipster can shut his eyes and pick issues which are going to advance. Then, again, tips become separated from the information on which they are based, and float around bearing no evidence of their origin or destination. A man in a broker's office detached himself from a ticker the other day to whisper to a friend just entering the room: "Buy some Continental Can." "Why" asked his friend. "I don't know, but it is good," said the other. And within twenty-four hours the stock was up 8 points.

Margining Odd Lots.

During the two dull years preceding this year's bull markets a number of Stock Exchange houses which formerly refused to handle a margin business in odd lots let down the bars because they needed the commissions. They found the new departure profitable and there was no difficulty in caring for the increased bookkeeping details brought about by the division of hundred-share lots into fractional lots and vice versa. Slack trading gave the clerks plenty of time. Things are different now, and it is learned that several firms have ceased to permit margin dealings in less than hundred-share amounts. Million-share days clogged the clerical end of their establishments until, for sheer protection from pressure of work, they were forced to return to the one-time system. The houses which specialize in odd lots have found a heavy burden on their hands in the active sessions, but, being equipped for this work, they have suffered less than those that fill orders for small customers merely as a side line.

A Trader's Dream.

Glancing yesterday over market reports of Friday, a trader spent some time trying to think of a way for arbitraging between New York and Philadelphia in Crucible Steel. He found that while the stock had sold up to 89 on the local market, the best quotation in the Quaker City was 88¾. The opportunity for an easy profit appeared good until a member of the firm he deals with told him there was no way of seizing it. The rule is firmly established that Stock Exchange members may not engage in domestic arbitrage transactions. The trader's dream was further dispelled upon noting that only 50 shares of Crucible were sold in Philadelphia.

Help from War Business.

"The war business is putting courage into general business," says the Bache Review. "It is refreshing to note that somebody, somewhere, is making money in this country, which since 1910 has been doing an enormous business for nothing. Profit-making in American business has been crushed out by low railroad rates; because if the railroads here are not making good money, general business under normal conditions cannot make money either. That is certain."

LONDON TRADING ACTIVE.

Firmness of American Shares a Feature of the Market.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Money was plentiful and discount rates were quiet today.

Transactions in the new war loan continued brisk on the Stock Exchange. American Marconi shares were stronger on buying orders, but Canadian Car reacted under profit taking. Russian bonds were steady, while home rails weakened on light offerings which lacked buyers.

Firmness in the American section was the outstanding feature of the market. United States Steel was buoyant and other American metal stocks also advanced. The closing was firm.

NEWS OF THE CORPORATIONS AND THE BANKS

LOSS OF $2,000,000 IN GOLD RESERVES

Decrease of $5,000,000 of Gold in Vault Also Shown by Reserve Board's Statement.

A GAIN IN OTHER CASH

Acceptances Increased by About $448,000, While $2,000,000 More of Municipal Warrants Are Bought.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The Federal Reserve Board's weekly statement for the twelve Federal Reserve banks shows a decrease of over $2,000,000 in total reserves, of over $5,000,000 of gold in vault, and a gain of about $2,800,000 in other cash on hand. New York, Philadelphia and San Francisco report the largest losses of gold for the week.

The holdings of commercial paper show a decrease of about $250,000, the losses of the Atlanta, Dallas and San Francisco banks accounting mainly for the decrease in the total. The aggregate amount of bankers' acceptances held increased about $448,000 and constitutes at present almost 30 per cent. of the combined amount of commercial bank paper held. The New York bank reports the largest share of this increase.

Nearly one-half of the bank paper held was either accepted or indorsed by member banks. Of the total commercial paper on hand 10.3 per cent. matured within ten days and 31.9 per cent. within thirty days, as against 29.7 per cent. shown at the end of the previous week. About 68.8 per cent. of the paper, as against 63.1 per cent., showed maturities of sixty days and less. The amount of agricultural and live stock paper maturing after ninety days stands now at slightly over $2,000,000 and constitutes only 5.1 per cent. of all the paper on hand, as against 13.9 per cent. down for the first week in July.

United States bonds on hand increased about $800,000, Boston, Cleveland, Chicago and San Francisco reporting additional purchases of 2 and 3 per cent. bonds, the total of about $8,500,000 held by eight reserve banks, about $6,600,000 are 2 per cent. and $1,900,000 3 per cent. bonds. The latter are held by the Cleveland and Chicago banks only. A still larger increase of about $2,000,000 is shown for municipal warrants on hand, New York alone reporting an increase of about $1,500,000, mainly of Boston city paper.

The combined total of bills and investments stands at $67,500,000, as against $64,800,000 at the end of the previous week and constitutes 124.3 per cent. of the combined capital of the banks, as against 119.5 per cent., shown the week before. But little change is shown in the aggregate net deposits of the banks, a gain of about $1,900,000 by the New York bank, being more than offset by a loss of over $2,000,000 by the Chicago bank.

Federal reserve agents report a total of $138,700,000 of notes received from the Controller of the Currency and a total of $101,700,000 not issued to the banks. Against the latter amount they hold $84,300,000 of gold and $17,400,000 of commercial paper. The banks give their total note circulation as $87,500,000 and their net liability there as $1,400,000.

Careless In Filing Protests.

Every now and then a grotesque mistake is made by importers in filing protests before the Board of General Appraisers. How these errors occur is seldom ascertained, as the customs tribunal does not, as a rule, make a practice of going behind the official papers in a given case. It is assumed, however, that in many instances representatives of importers or their lawyers do not have before them a copy of the tariff when framing protests. Sometimes the trouble is sheer carelessness or mere guesswork. A case in point was decided yesterday. The merchandise consisted of nursery stock which was returned for duty under the specific provision in the law for such goods. The importers, however, made their claim under Paragraph 654, which provides for "works of art, and collections in illustration of the progress of the arts." In overruling the protest, Judge Waite remarked that "we cannot by any stretch of the imagination place this class of goods under that paragraph."

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

OPENS THE DOOR TO EXPORT TRADE

New Orleans Is Spending $100,000,000 to Garner Big Orders from Latin America.

Walter Parker, General Manager of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, was in this city yesterday attending a meeting of the Pan-American Committee charged with making arrangements for a return visit of business men to South America. In an interview with a TIMES reporter he spoke enthusiastically of the progress being made by the State of Louisiana and the City of New Orleans to equip the Mississippi Valley with up-to-date facilities for handling trade with foreign countries, particularly those of Central and South America.

"A new trade economy has come to the Mississippi Valley," he said. "New Orleans is spending $100,000,000 in providing co-ordinate river-rail-ocean facilities for the handling of both new and old commerce that will be routed the valley way.

"The entire harbor front, 40 miles in extent, is owned by the State of Louisiana and is being equipped by the State with the highest type of warehouses and terminal facilities for the handling of bulk and package commodities. The idea is to so safeguard commodities while in the custody of the State as to give them the highest possible collateral value. In each case the warehouse receipt issued will carry with it, in the case of cotton, a New Orleans Cotton Exchange classification and condition certificate, and in the case of coffee, grain, &c., a New Orleans Board of Trade inspection certificate. In this way, it is believed, New Orleans warehouse receipts will find favor among bankers the world over and attract enough surplus money to permit the financing of Mississippi Valley commerce at very low interest rates.

"These advantages, in addition to low insurance rates and low cost of handling, will, it is expected, not only reduce the burden on commerce to a minimum, but will result in the building up of a great market of deposit and surplus supply at New Orleans. This is particularly true with reference to cotton, coffee, rice, hemp, jute bagging, sisal grass, hard woods from Central and South America, hides, and many of the manufactured products of the valley States.

"Low cost handling and storage at ship, boat, and railroad side, together with low cost money, will develop the economy relied on to accomplish this result.

"New Orleans, as the gateway to the valley, has come to understand her responsibilities and is equipping herself to serve the valley in a great big way.

"In order that private enterprise may have full and unrestricted play—it cannot do so on the harbor front proper because that frontage is all State-owned—an industrial navigation canal through the city from the Mississippi River to an arm of the Gulf has, by amendment to the State Constitution, been provided for and ordered opened. The banks of this canal will be available for privately owned and developed factory, warehouse, and general industrial sites. Shipyards are to be provided for. Ultimately, under this amendment, New Orleans will be canalized as Amsterdam is, with the exception that the whole system will be so installed as to be fully co-ordinated with the valley's railroad systems. New Orleans is in position to do this only because of her municipally owned belt railroad system, which has reduced switching charges to $2 per car flat. Switching charges in New Orleans ranged formerly from $8 to $20 a car, according to the extent of the monopoly enjoyed by the common carriers doing the switching.

Mr. Parker also said that, along with this development, Louisiana in November last so revised her fundamental law relating to business and investment capital as to make of that law highly favorable in place of decidedly unfavorable, as it had been for a generation. He told how New Orleans has solved its health problem through the installation of modern sewerage, drainage, and pure water systems, and has rat and mosquito proofed the city. Continuing, Mr. Parker said:

"Thus, not only are the facilities for the economic handling of commerce between Latin America and the Mississippi Valley being provided, but the way has been opened to attract the money necessary to finance such trade, and the port of least resistance for this trade has been made epidemic-proof.

"To the banks of her new industrial canal, which will be a link of the intercoastal canal now practically completed from Florida to the Rio Grande, New Orleans expects to attract many important enterprises. Each site on that canal will enjoy municipal belt railroad connections, thus enabling each creator of freight movement to use, with equal facility, any ship, any boat, or any railroad he may desire to use. This will mean the highest degree of independence of transportation control possible, and is expected to result in the fullest possible sway of the natural lines of least resistance.

"In order further to encourage her industrial development New Orleans will soon build and operate a vocational school for the training of skilled labor. For this purpose the city has $1,000,000 in real money in the bank.

"Each angle of this development work has been preceded by the most careful and expert investigation of the economies possible to be brought into play. Before one ounce of concrete had been placed in the great cotton warehouse, now in operation, we knew, almost to the fraction of a cent, just what permanent economies that warehouse would hold over any facilities any other port could install—just what the value of the navigable river, for the first time served by a boatside warehouse, would be, and to what relative extent the economies developed, through the attraction of surplus money, would permanently draw commerce to New Orleans.

"Similarly, we know just how the industrial canal should appeal to captains of industry, and what kind of skilled labor and in what relative numbers the vocational school should turn out to meet present and future needs. In the latter case special attention has been given to the labor needed to manufacture the products required by Latin America.

"Best of all, by special act of the Legislature, we have removed all these facilities out of the reach of politics, through the creation of a civil service board, whose membership is made up of men selected by the commercial Exchanges. The Municipal Belt Railroad is also operated by a board, a majority of which, by law, is named by the commercial Exchanges.

"The men who conceived the system under which New Orleans's facilities are being developed foresaw the necessity for scientific economy in the handling of Mississippi Valley commerce. The war in Europe has hastened the day of that necessity by at least a generation. In other words, no matter whether the Teutons or the Allies dictate the terms of peace, the whole commercial world must, in the future, work along German's lines of scientific trade economy.

"Should Germany win, England and America and everybody else will have to unlearn their old commercial lessons very suddenly. Should Germany lose, they will have to relearn just the same, but the day of extreme pressure will be delayed.

"In either event co-ordinative river-rail-ocean terminals at New Orleans, with all collateral factors worked out in full accord, plus co-ordinative river-rail terminal facilities at all river cities and towns, which are now beginning to appear, will, by unshackling the commerce of the valley and permitting it to move along the line of least resistance, that is, along the most economic trade channel, will give the valley a degree of scientific trade economy that will go a very long way toward equipping that important section of the United States to meet the new trade economy the whole world must face after the close of the war.

"The work being done by the New Orleans Association of Commerce is the best of evidence that the people of the valley are now looking far ahead. The association maintains, as a branch of Tulane University, a complete school of foreign commerce, in which foreign trade and the essential foreign languages are taught.

"It has also organized the young men of the city, the men most vitally interested in the future, and, 500 strong, these young men are now watching every move, every proposed law, and particularly the Louisiana State Constitutional Convention to be held in September. They have been given competent advisers, and it is their business to see that no public move be made, no law passed, and no provision placed in the new Constitution which, under the microscope, reveals germs of trouble for the future, when they themselves will be the controlling factors in New Orleans. They want development unrestrained, so that their own opportunities will not suffer.

"It is my fixed conviction that an era of remarkable prosperity is ahead of the Mississippi Valley."

HORSES NOT PASSING OUT.

Sale of Trappings Maintained Despite Motor Car's Popularity.

For some years there has been much talk of "the passing of the horse," but the facts do not bear out this theory. There are more horses today in this country than ever before, and their number surely but slowly increases. This, too, despite the growing use of automobiles and automobile trucks and the extension everywhere of electric trolleys. Horses are not so numerous in the city, for either pleasure or business uses, as once they were, but in the smaller cities and towns they still do most of the draught work, and on the farms they are still indispensable.

Consequently horse trappings of all kinds still sell in large volume, though these sales do not increase proportionately with the growth of population. The change of late years has been in the character rather than in the volume of the business. For instance, the making of fancy hand-made harness for expensive and showy turnouts in the great cities has practically passed away. This is true, likewise, of all the expensive items in every line of horse accessories, whether it be currycombs and horse brushes or gold-mounted harness. But the sale of cheap and medium grades in all lines shows but little change from past years. Horseclothes are still staple items in the hardware business, and so are horseshoe nails, although the city pattern nail is extinct.

Buggy whips are as much a part of the assortment of the general store and hardware shop as ever, though there is but small demand now for riding whips and fancy saddles. Expensive stirrups and spurs are used only by the Western cow puncher, and their sale is slowly shrinking each year. Of the things of rough, every-day use, such as hames, singletrees, clevises, and all the innumerable items connected with plowing for the crops, there is not only a continued large tonnage, but a promise of some increase with the growth of agriculture. Of course, the carriage business is but a shadow of its former self, especially in the large centres, but farm buggies are still abundant in the countryside.

Carriage hardware has suffered accordingly, as it becomes evident that the horse will be more and more a thing of utility and to a lessening degree a matter of pleasure. Even riding as a pastime has distinctly lost ground, as is shown by the decreased use of all the high-grade fancy items that go with the riding horse.

SHIPBUILDERS FAVORED.

Customs Officials Inclined to Treat Their Entries Liberally.

The increasing tendency to treat in a liberal manner foreign material imported for use in the construction or repair of vessels built in the United States was demonstrated anew yesterday when the Board of General Appraisers sustained a protest by A. E. Outerbridge & Co., steamship agents of this city. It was shown at the hearing that various articles and materials for use in building a triple expansion engine and propelling equipment for installation in the British steamer Princess, then building in a Brooklyn shipyard, were brought from England.

Collector Malone assessed duty on the articles at the rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures of metal, whereas the importers claimed free entry under Section 5 of the Panama Canal act, which grants exemption to ship construction articles. In order to obtain the benefit of such exemption, the law provides that certain regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury must be complied with. These relate for the most part to affidavits identifying the merchandise.

Assistant Attorney General Hanson moved for the dismissal of the case, alleging that the Secretary's regulations had not been complied with. It was also contended by Mr. Hanson that the material furnished constituted a complete engine, which, he maintained, should stand full duty. Judge Hay held that the regulations prescribed had been properly observed, and stated that he did not agree with the second contention of the Government counsel. Free entry was granted and the Collector reversed, with an order to make a reliquidation on the basis of free entry.

USE MORE COTTON.

Fall River Took 51,131 Bales More in 1914-15 Than in 1913-14.

FALL RIVER, Aug. 7.—Official statistics showing the number of bales of cotton shipped to the mills of Fall River for the last twelve months have just been made public. They show that from and including Aug. 1, 1914, to Aug. 1 of this year, there were received by Fall River cotton mills the sum of 461,953 bales, against 410,822 for the corresponding period a year ago. The greatest number of bales, 63,295, was received during March. The following is the table:

Will Need Bakery Machinery.

Changes in the sanitary regulations for bakeries provide, writes Harwood Hull, correspondent for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at San Juan, that Porto Rican bakers must mix their dough by machinery, and deliver their bread wrapped in paper. As these regulations practically revolutionize the baking conditions of the island, there should be a market for all sorts of bakers' mechanical supplies. When the new regulations were first issued, it was found impossible to obtain any adequate baking machinery on the island, and, as there had never been any particular demand for such machinery, local merchants in many instances were without even catalogues of manufacturers making such machinery. Most of the island bakers are small, and the market demands small, inexpensive outfits. Porto Rico imports annually over $1,500,000 worth of flour, all from the United States.

Slump in Baseball Goods.

The sale of baseball goods had a distinct slump during the season now going out. Probably the continued wet weather had something to do with it, but shrewd buyers as far back as last Fall, when the wholesale orders were placed, detected signs of the coming trouble. There was too much scrapping between the various leagues, too much exploiting of personalities and of corporation feuds and animosities. The exploitation of the commercial side of the sport is said to have had its effect in causing the decline in sales.

FANCY GOODS NOT HURT BY THE WAR

Ideas Are Still Coming from Europe, but They Are Being Worked Out Over Here.

The war in Europe has put the fancy goods and notions trade in a peculiar position. While fads and ideas are still emanating from Paris and London, the American trade has been put on its metal so far as providing the merchandise is concerned, and a very large percentage of the goods that are now being offered to the retailers here have been made in domestic factories.

That the American trade has benefited, rather than suffered, from this condition is the opinion of Henry F. Samstag of Samstag & Hilder Brothers of this city. In a talk with a TIMES reporter yesterday Mr. Samstag said that his firm this year had the largest July business in its history, and that August business has so far been coming in in similar proportion. Describing conditions in the trade this season, he said:

"Notwithstanding the war and the dangers faced by buyers who go abroad after new merchandise and ideas, two buyers for our house—Joseph Bernhard and Herman Pichel—made their usual trips to the fashion centres of England and France. While there they succeeded in picking up enough novelties to enable us to build up a comprehensive line of American-made goods. For example, they picked up an old comb in a shop on the Rue de la Paix in Paris, for which 140 francs, or about $30, was paid. From this one comb our designers have created a full line of celluloid hair ornaments, goods that can be retailed in the American stores from 50 cents to $50. Doesn't this prove the versatility of the American designer?

"In another case a silk bag was bought in Paris. It is the same sort of bag that has retailed in the exclusive Fifth Avenue shops at $25 to $30. It is now being manufactured here in several different styles, and is being wholesaled at prices which will permit it to be retailed profitably at $5.90 to $7.50. This is another triumph for American adaptability.

"One of the season's best novelties in the line of handbags for women makes use of a novelty celluloid frame, or, rather, a variety of them. Some have ring handles of celluloid, while others have fabric handles of the material which is used in the body of the bag. The nattiest of these bags are lined with black and white materials, and the interior fittings also carry out the black-and-white idea. These frames are also used to build up an extensive line of novelty bead bags, in a profusion of designs and colorings, which retail any where from $6 to $10.

"These frames are also used in the manufacture of leather bags, and many attractive styles in pin seal, morocco, and Canada calf are being shown. Among the newest styles in leather bags are those made in an oblong shape, the longest side measuring about seven inches. These bags are not swung from handles, but are carried in the hand, after the manner of purses.

"For the woman who wants to make her own bag, outfits are being offered which contain the so-called gate top, a quantity of beads to be sewed on the silk fabric making up the body of the bag, and fringes or pendant decorations to hang on the purse. These sets are made cheaply enough to be retailed from 50 cents up.

"Among the season's 'high' novelties in the line of bags come the dance, or opera, bags. They are made of messalines, taffetas, &c., and are being shown in a variety of color combinations. The trimmings consist largely of laces and artificial flowers, and the bags are finished off with drawstrings of gold cord and military tassels. Some of them are made with mirror bottoms. At retail they can be sold from 50 cents to $50. Along a similar line is offered a range of tiny, fancy silk bags, with mirror bottoms, the sole function of which is to contain a powder puff. These little bags, which a woman can suspend from a finger while dancing, if she wishes to, can be sold over the retail counter at 25 cents to $1.50.

"Yet will be one of the important decorative items of the Fall and Winter season, and a number of novel effects are being shown in brooches, bracelets, lavalieres, necklaces, and earrings. Jet collarettes, both plain and combined with other materials, promise to be popular, and range in price from $1 to $25 at retail. Black and colored crystal articles of adornment are also favored for the coming season. In addition to these things, prospects are bright for a large sale of lavalieres, pendants, &c., in combinations of velvet and silk ribbon and varicolored crystal beads."

Mr. Samstag digressed at this point to call attention to an adaptation of an English boudoir article that is used as a receptacle for hairpins, safety pins, and other things generally found on milady's dressing table. It is not unlike an old-fashioned three-pronged candlestick in appearance, but it is not more than three or four inches high. This article, Mr. Samstag said, had been picked up in an English shop at a cost of £1, or about $5. The original article was wrought in sterling silver, but it has been reproduced here minutely, so far as appearance is concerned, at a cost which will let it be retailed at 25 cents.

"Another novel thing this season," Mr. Samstag continued, "is putting small merchandise up in boxes to match. For instance, a green crystal necklace is now put up in a green-and-white striped box. Colored rose-bead necklaces, some of them made with imitation pearls, are similarly put up. The same is true of small imitation flower hat pins of various kinds.

"For the benefit of the retailers' button departments, fancy buttons are being put up now on attractive, lithographed display cards, which contain illustrations showing the way in which the buttons on the cards can be used. In this way the work of the clerks who sell buttons is reduced to a minimum, the cards practically doing all that has to be done.

"Imitation ivory boudoir and manicure sets are being shown in black-and-white striped effects that are very natty. Gold-plated sets are offered to retail at $35, as are shell sets, which retail at about $5 less than the plated ones. Shell clock frames and picture frames are also included in the season's lines.

"In the toy line a distinctive leaning is seen toward out-of-the-ordinary, hand-carved and painted toys. Naturally they cost more than toys turned out by machinery, but their added novelty and charm make them well worth the difference. A number of other novelties in toys vie for the attention of buyers, including holiday stockings of flannel, silk, and other materials. These are doubtless an outgrowth of the cheap, net affairs of other years, and they are attractively trimmed with ribbons, bells, and other garnitures."

Ivory Absorbs Moisture.

The average person does not associate ivory as an absorber of water, but this quality of the product was brought out yesterday in a customs case. The American Express Company entered ivory, which it claimed had absorbed moisture on the voyage from Africa. Collector Malone's men weighed the product and found that it exceeded the invoiced weight by a fair margin. The Collector accordingly took duty on the weight found after the ivory had been unloaded from the vessel. When the ivory was later weighed at the factory of the ultimate importer the weights were lower than those returned by the Government officials and approximated the weights contained on the invoice. When the question came before the Board of General Appraisers, Judge Waite did not attempt to decide whether ivory is an absorbant of moisture, but held that the importer had failed to prove his case. So the question remains an open one.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Law Does Not Distinguish Between Good and Poor Barley.

A controversy between the Government and the Jordan-Marsh Company, Boston, was settled yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers adversely to the importers. The merchandise involved in the protest consisted of goods classified by the Collector as cotton pile fabrics, duty being taken at the rate of 40 per cent. ad valorem under the Tariff act of 1913. The contention was that the goods are woven cotton fabrics properly dutiable at the appropriate rates, according to the number of the yarn of which they are composed. The evidence was unsatisfactory, which led the board to affirm the Collector.

F. Costa was sustained in a claim that silk dress goods imported under the tariff should be admitted at 45 per cent. ad valorem under Paragraph 318, as woven silk fabrics, not embroidered. The action of the Collector in considering the goods embroidered, and assessing a 60 per cent. duty, was reversed.

Judge Brown, sustaining a protest by Gerstendorfer Brothers of this city, held that in the opinion of the board, paints are not "articles similar to chemical compounds or combinations." This was the classification imposed by Collector Malone on colors and paints, in bronze and silver gilt, put up in packages of less than two and one-half pounds gross weight. As returned by the Collector, the duty was 20 per cent. under the tariff. The General Appraiser agreed with the importers that the commodities are properly dutiable at 15 per cent., under the specific provision for "colors or paints," as specified in Paragraph 68.

It was decided in the case of the H. Poehler Company, Minneapolis, that the tariff law makes no difference between good and poor grades of imported barley. The importation in question was invoiced as barley screenings, but the Collector took duty as "barley" at the rate of 15 cents per bushel, whereas the protestant alleged that entry should be given at 10 per cent. ad valorem as an unenumerated unmanufactured article. The evidence showed that the commodity in question was taken from barley, which was prepared or cleaned for salting purposes. It was acknowledged by all concerned in the case that the product is a poor grade of barley used chiefly for feed for cattle. In Canada it is known as barley screenings, but Judge Waite held that as the importation is essentially barley, it was properly assessed notwithstanding the fact that it is of inferior grade.

J. J. Buchey & Co., Philadelphia, were sustained in the contention that aluminum spoons, entered under the tariff law as table utensils, should stand full duty. Judge Hay held that the regulations prescribed had been properly observed, and stated that he did not agree with the second contention of the Government counsel. Free entry was granted and the Collector reversed, with an order to make a reliquidation on the basis of free entry.

INVOICING COTTON GOODS.

Difficult to Set Proper Values on Imports from Bradford.

Importers and the customs authorities here continue to have trouble in reconciling their differences relative to the prices at which cotton goods from Bradford shall be invoiced. Appraiser Sague's examiners have taken the view that the fabrics have not been listed on the invoices at the market values prevailing in Bradford at the time of shipment, and have accordingly raised prices even when the importers entered goods at higher prices than the shippers invoiced the merchandise.

The advances made by the customs men resulted in Collector Malone demanding higher duties, as well as the payment of additional duty in the shape of penalties for undervaluation. Many of the American handlers of the fabrics have appealed to the Reappraisement Division of the Board of General Appraisers to review the action of the appraising officials. At the hearings the importers have presented data to show that the advanced values were correct, and should be sustained. On the other hand, representatives of the Department of Justice insisted the goods were billed below the Bradford prices.

Judge Fischer yesterday decided two of these appeals. In the first, an importation was made of cotton checks shipped by Charles Johnson & Co. of Bradford and heavily advanced by the Appraiser. The General Appraiser held that the goods should pay duty on a basis of somewhat less than 1d. per yard over the entered values. Artificial silk and cotton fringes from Arthur Walker & Co., Bradford, were held by the General Appraiser to be undervalued to the extent of 2d. per yard. The same firm shipped black and white cotton checks, which also were advanced by the Appraiser's office. The handlers here of the goods convinced Judge Fischer that the values put on the fabrics at the time of entry represented correct foreign market value. The Appraiser was accordingly reversed as to these goods.

BUSINESS AND LEGISLATION.

Strict Game Laws Have Helped the Sale of Hunting Outfits.

The sale of guns and ammunition is an instance of how wise and timely legislation is the prop and support of a large and profitable business. The sale and use of guns and ammunition depends entirely upon the existence of wild game, which, until a comparatively few years ago, were in danger of extinction owing to constant hunting in season and out. Now almost every State has strict game laws, being more and more enforced each year, and only comparatively limited periods, or "open seasons," within which game can be hunted.

The State of Illinois is an example of the results of carefully prepared game laws, well enforced by competent officials. Quail and prairie chickens are more abundant in the State than they were twenty years ago, and the sale of shot guns and loaded shells is inaccordance. The prohibition of Spring shooting in nearly all sections by Federal law has practically stopped the sale of all hunting material during the Springtime, but the loss is being made up by the increased shooting in the Fall, owing to the already increased number of wild fowl.

The sporting goods business, in relation to hunting, is a very large one employing many thousand men and many million dollars in the manufacture and sale of guns and ammunition, hunting clothes, and appurtenances of all kinds. The double barrel shot gun is fast declining in sale, as it is giving place to the "pump" gun and the automatic. The days of the high-priced shot gun are over.

IMPORTERS OBJECT TO SAMPLE RULES

Say Regulations Governing Imports of Fabrics Over Nine Inches Long Are Unfair.

Another stage was reached during the past week in the Treasury Department's attempt to solve the commercial sample problem as it affects Government revenues, importers, and domestic manufacturing interests. The question of how to treat samples of textile goods has been an important issue since 1880, when the Treasury Department first began, apparently, to recognize the important part they play in selling foreign merchandise.

Shortly after the present tariff law went into effect, Secretary McAdoo issued a set of regulations to govern the entry of textile samples, as well as model gowns. In April of last year Assistant Secretary Malburn made a modification of the preceding rules, which favored the importers in that samples believed to be of no commercial value were admitted free of duty and without bond. This proved unsatisfactory to the various organizations of textile manufacturers in this country. Representations were made immediately to Secretary McAdoo and to the Assistant Secretary in charge of the customs, by the domestic fabric manufacturers that the regulations were inadequate to prevent fraud upon the revenues. The further allegation was made that American manufacturers were being subjected to unfair competition from British and other foreign fabric producers.

These representations resulted in an investigation being conducted by special agents of the Treasury Department. It is said that the inquiry revealed that a regular business, of a most profitable character, was being carried on in this country, principally in this city, in commercial samples passed by the customs officials as of no value. Accordingly, Assistant Secretary Malburn issued an order to appraising officials on June 19 amending the existing regulations by providing that textile samples exceeding nine inches in length are to be assessed for duty, if not entered in bond for exportation, unless they are slashed, cut, punched, perforated or indelibly stamped across the face in a manner to destroy their commercial value as merchandise.

It is further provided by this ruling that the stamping or perforation shall appear in each eighteen inches, or fraction thereof, of the length of the fabric, and in letters not less than three inches high. While the amendment went into effect last year made no reference to lengths of samples, the department now rules that samples of textile goods not over nine inches long are to be considered by customs officers as of no commercial value, and are to be admitted free of duty without bond for their exportation.

The importers affected by this interpretation of the sample provision of the tariff, representing many lines of foreign merchandise, enlisted the aid of the Merchants' Association, the Lace and Embroidery Association, and other trade organizations in an attempt to secure a modification of the Treasury's ruling. Their attempts, while futile, resulted in the postponement of the operation of the amended regulations until last Monday, when they went into effect at this and other ports of the country.

Importers declared yesterday that the new rule dealing with samples longer than nine inches works an undue hardship, as well as monetary loss, while statements of domestic manufacturers that a "regular business" has been transacted in the samples were denied. Because they do not consider their campaign closed for greater liberality in the treatment of the longer samples, the importers said further that they preferred not to engage in a trial of their case in the newspapers. At the same time it was made plain that they regard the new rules as too severe. It was reported that, as a result of this feeling, ex-Judge Sharretts, acting as counsel for various importing interests, is preparing fresh data to lay before the department in an attempt to bring about a revision of the regulations.

On the other hand, it is apparent that the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, which is one of the domestic organizations in favor of drastic rules for the admittance of commercial samples, while approving of the latest action taken by the Treasury Department and regarding it as a step in the right direction, would like to see the Government go even further.

While, as has been said, importers for the most part are reticent in discussing their viewpoint for publication, Carl W. Stern of M. J. Corbett & Co., a member of the Customs Procedure Committee of the American Importers' Association, yesterday outlined the importers' contentions in the matter.

"While I realize that the law makes no specific provision for the admission of textile samples free of duty," said Mr. Stern, "it is, nevertheless, a fact that the manufacturer or jobber who gives samples without charge to his customer takes that fact into consideration when he sells his wares. In this way the Government really gets the duty on these samples. In certain branches of the textile trade nine-inch samples, and even smaller ones, are quite sufficient to sell goods from, while in other lines a 'repeat' must be shown and nine inches is not sufficient.

"To require the merchant to cut or slash the sample, so as to make it utterly useless, is unjustly to require him to destroy his own property. In such cases, where the samples are sold at the end of a season, they bring very little. You cannot lay down a hard and fast rule in these cases, and an order permitting the Appraiser to pass judgment on the dutiability or non-dutiability of samples should be restored."

Speculation exists locally as to how long the new regulations will last without modification of some kind. It is more or less certain that importing interests will continue the fight for greater liberality, while it is taken for granted that the manufacturers' associations will use all the pressure at their command to make the regulations even more drastic than they are at present.

QUIET AT FALL RIVER.

Wider Cotton Goods Still Preferred Over the Narrow Variety.

FALL RIVER, Aug. 7.—General conditions in the cotton goods markets were rather quiet this week. There were instances where business was good, but on the whole trading was unsatisfactory. It seems that the wider goods have the preference, and it is reported that there have been some good sales made on 36 and 38½ inch styles. Printers and other users of narrow goods have manifested an utter lack of interest in narrow styles, and consequently business remains dull. Generally August is a dull month, and thus far the amount of business that has been actually done is of small proportions. Fine goods mills making fancies are doing a fairly good business, and some have their looms engaged for the balance of the year on certain styles. There seems to be a good demand for the more complicated weaves. Lenos and the like are in favor just now. Those concerns manufacturing medium count yarn fancies have orders which will keep them busy for some time to come. The margin of profit is greater on fine goods than on the coarser counts. The cotton yarn markets are not doing the business that manufacturers would like to see, and consequently some mills have an accumulation on hand. The week closed with the demand light and scattering. Sales will probably reach 130,000 pieces, of which about 40,000 pieces are spots.

CASH versus CREDIT

TODAY you are selling on 60 or 90 days' time with 3% off for cash in 10 days, and you have a $25,000 credit line with your Bank, and are in good trade credit.—

TOMORROW you change your terms to 80% cash against bills of lading, reducing your prices by 3%, and you expect to increase your volume or buy for cash, —discount all purchases, etc.—

How could such a change of "terms" either cause your Bank to curtail your line of credit or unfavorably affect your credit in the trade?

Your customers, like you, must carry open accounts and must buy on-time. Through us, and without their knowledge, you simply change your credit sales to 80% cash at date of shipment, giving us about the same discount for our Cash as you offer to your customers for their money in 10 days.

Your contingent liability on accounts sold to us is only your risk of loss by failures, and even this can be restricted under Credit-Insurance.

When these facts are clearly understood, why shouldn't the honest assignment of accounts by any firm be encouraged?

Write for further details. A. E. Duncan, President.

TROOPS TO QUELL MEXICAN BANDITS

Four Companies of Infantry Rushed to Aid Rangers in Battle Near Brownsville.

SEVERAL OUTLAWS KILLED

Five Americans Wounded—Large Bands Crossing Border and Harassing Ranches.

ENVOYS HERE THIS WEEK

Mexican Peace Conference with Latin Americans to be Continued Tomorrow or Wednesday.

HARLINGEN, Texas, Aug. 8.—Five American ranchmen were wounded, two of them seriously, and several Mexican outlaws were reported killed tonight in a fight between Texas Rangers and American ranchers and a band of Mexican bandits at Norias Ranch, ten miles north of Lyford, in Cameron County, according to a telephone message received here from Norias. The number of casualties among the Mexicans, it was said, could not be ascertained, owing to darkness.

The outlaws, estimated to number between thirty and fifty, attacked the Norias Ranch house shortly before dark. Fourteen ranchmen barricaded themselves in the house and defended the place until 10 o'clock, when the message said the Mexicans withdrew temporarily. Shortly after the bandits had withdrawn sixteen Texas Rangers and armed civilians arrived.

At 10:30 o'clock the report says the Mexicans returned unaware that reinforcements had arrived. They again charged the house and were met with a volley of shots from the rangers, and several of the Mexicans were killed. The outlaws retreated in the darkness.

A special train left Harlingen just before 10 o'clock tonight carrying thirty-five United States soldiers and twelve armed civilians to reinforce the Americans on the Norias ranch.

Passenger trains were running through the affected district tonight without lights.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 8.—Mexican outlaws and Texas rangers and county officers here engaged in two battles tonight near Norias, Texas, sixty miles north of Brownsville, according to reports received here. The telegraph operator at Norias has sent out a call for help.

A special train which left here for Norias this afternoon with rangers and county officers returned here tonight, and ten minutes later started back to Norias.

It will stop at Harlingen to take on a detachment of United States soldiers.

It was announced at Fort Brown tonight that four companies of United States infantry were being rushed here from Fort McIntosh, near Laredo.

Troop B, Third United States Cavalry, tonight was ordered to leave here tomorrow for the northern part of this (Cameron) county. It was reported tonight the Mexicans attacking Norias Ranch numbered fully 200.

Among those who went on the first trip made by the special train were Henry Hutchings, Adjutant General of Texas; J. M. Fox, Captain of Texas Rangers; five members of the ranger force, and Sheriff Vann of Brownsville.

Fritz Georgie, night watchman at the Lyford, Texas, jail, was shot and seriously wounded before daybreak this morning. The act is charged to the Mexican outlaws. A party of farmers near Lyford also was fired on by unknown persons a few hours earlier in the night.

Rumors that six Mexicans were killed late yesterday in a battle with a posse in a remote section of Hidalgo County could not be confirmed.

Sheriff A. Y. Baker of Hidalgo County tonight was quoted as saying 300 Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande from Mexico west of Brownsville and were traveling over Hidalgo County in parties of three and four, apparently making their way to some concentrating point. Whether a filibuster expedition against Mexico was planned, or the men were connected with the lawless bands which have been raiding ranches in the border country for several weeks, the Sheriff did not know, but extra precautions were being taken by all peace officers, he said. Warnings are being sent to outlying ranches, nearly all of which have made preparation against attack.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex., Aug. 8.—Six Mexicans have been killed and three Americans wounded in fighting on the Norias Ranch, between a party of thirty Mexican outlaws and fourteen ranchmen, it was reported in a brief message received here late tonight from Norias. It was said the fighting continues.

It was said the bandits early today raided the Norias ranch and drove away fifty horses and took a quantity of provisions and several rifles. Late this afternoon the Mexicans returned to the ranch and a pitched battle was begun, the fourteen Americans barricading themselves in the ranch house. They then telephoned to Sarita, Brownsville, and Kingsville for help before the Mexicans cut the wires.

A special train was started tonight from Sarita, carrying fifteen volunteers to aid the ranchers. Sarita is forty miles north of Norias. A special train with United States troops and State officers also was sent from Brownsville. Until these trains reach some station where there is telegraph service little can be learned of the outcome of the battle.

FIND MUNITION CASES FILLED WITH RUBBISH

Reported Fraud in Russian Supplies Ascribed to German Agents.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—"Thousands of cases of ammunition of every kind when opened at the front were found to contain rubbish," says The Daily Mail in an account of the conditions under which the Russian Army has been fighting.

"This situation is popularly ascribed to the work of German agents in Russian munitions factories."

DODGE GERMAN SHELLS EVERY FIVE MINUTES

People of Dunkirk Do Business in Intervals of Big Gun Bombardment.

DUNKIRK, July 28, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The bombardment of Dunkirk by the giant German gun, operating from Flanders, permits the carrying on of the business of the city only four and a half minutes out of every five.

Only one gun is used in this bombardment, and the shells come regularly every five minutes. The people of the town take advantage of the interval between an explosion and the coming of another shell to transact business, allowing themselves about half a minute to make for their cellars.

In the General Post Office, for instance, four and a half minutes after the explosion of the first shell is heard the clerks and customers at the stamp and money order windows and applicants for mail disappear together into the basement. After the expected shell explodes they come upstairs again, and business goes on as usual until it is time to run again to safety.

365 BRITISH OFFICERS LOST IN TEN DAYS

List Made Public July 30 Brings Casualties Among Commissioned Men Up to 13,656.

LONDON, July 30, (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—Officers' casualty lists between July 19 and July 30 show that the British Army lost 115 killed, 236 wounded, and 14 missing, a total of 365. This brings the aggregate officer loss since the beginning of the war to 13,656, of whom 4,176 are recorded dead, 8,305 wounded, and 1,175 missing.

During the ten days covered by the lists the regiments operating in the Dardanelles have again been the greatest sufferers, the Australians having 9 officers killed and 25 wounded, the King's Own Scottish Borderers 9 killed, 4 wounded, and 7 missing, the Highland Light Infantry 19 killed and 13 wounded, the Cameronians 2 killed and 6 wounded, and the Royal Scots 9 killed and 7 wounded.

The Indian contingent lost 16 officers killed and 19 wounded.

TWO STEAMERS SUNK; ONE A NEUTRAL CRAFT

Swedish Ship Malmland, the Glenravel, of British Registry, and a Trawler Destroyed.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Lloyd's announces that the British steamer Glenravel of Belfast, the Swedish steamer Malmland, and the trawler Ocean Queen have been sunk. The crews of all three vessels have been landed.

The Glenravel was a vessel of 1,092 tons and was owned by the Antrim Iron Ore Company of Belfast.

The Malmland was of 3,779 tons and was owned at Gothenburg.

'TWAS NOAH, NOT ADAM, THAT ATE THE APPLE

Hence His Descendants Don't Live to be 50,000 Years Old—A Pennsylvania Discovery.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 8.—It was not Adam and Eve who brought about the fall of man, but Noah, according to a translation of a tablet now in the University of Pennsylvania Museum. A statement to this effect was made today by a representative of the University.

According to Sumerian theology found on the tablet, which is said to have been written before the days of Abraham and translated by Dr. Steven Langdon, Professor of Assyriology in Oxford University, England, Noah was ordered not to eat of the cassi tree in the garden of paradise, and when he disobeyed, the curse fell upon him. The curse was that he should have ill health and an early death instead of living to be 50,000 years old like his ancestors.

According to the announcement made today, Dr. Langdon bestowed much labor on the subject of the fall of man, not only in translating the tablet, but in comparing it with every known tablet or historical account of any kind, as well as with the account given in the book of Genesis.

Dr. Langdon, according to the announcement, says that this tablet is at least a thousand years older than the Genesis account and, so far as is known, is the oldest record of the sort in existence. The tablet was written more than 4,900 years ago, possibly 5,000 years, and evidently records a tradition which goes back to the early history of man.

The Babylonian and Sumerian accounts place the flood at something like 35,000 B. C., and the lapse of time between the creation and the flood is filled by ten kings who reigned altogether 432,000 years, an average of 43,200 years each. The reason that later kings reigned comparatively short periods is that Noah sinned in eating of the cassia tree.

UNIONS HOLD OFF MUNITION STRIKE

But Start a General Campaign for an 8-Hour Day for New England Machinists.

TRY PERSUASION FIRST

President Johnston Opposes a Walkout and Wins in Conference at Hartford.

CURBS THE STRIKE SPIRIT

Fight to Spread to New York and New Jersey—More Field Agents at Work.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 8.—A campaign to give every machinist in New England an eight-hour day, with time and a half for all overtime, was decided upon today by William H. Johnston, President of the International Association of Machinists, and sixteen conferees. Bonus systems established by various New England employers, notably the Colt Company of this city, which has voted to distribute to the employes every three months 12½ per cent. of the profits, will not be accepted in lieu of the eight-hour day.

Fourteen union organizers are now covering the New England field, and twelve more are to be brought in this week. They will interview employers, but no general strike will be called unless persuasion fails.

Two methods were discussed long and earnestly this afternoon, and finally Mr. Johnston's views prevailed in that most of the conferees agreed to a policy of first interviewing employers and giving them an opportunity for negotiations rather than immediately calling a strike, as advocated by half a dozen of the Vice Presidents and business agents.

Before leaving for Boston tonight Mr. Johnston said similar conferences would be held on Friday and Saturday to discuss the New York and New Jersey situations. The reports of field men will be received and discussed at a meeting at the association's headquarters, 116 Nassau Street, New York City.

Those present at today's conference besides President Johnston were: Vice Presidents Peter J. Conlon of Boston, Frank Jennings of Boston, and J. J. Keppler of New York City; Thomas J. Savage, Executive Committee member of Boston; Organizers Joseph Gilmour, George Doyle, J. J. Eagan, James Henderson, Charles Sohl, Harry J. Gill, Roscoe L. Hall; Business Agents John J. Connolly, T. R. Donovan, George I. Bowen, and William Larkins.

Johnston Outlines Plan.

"The meeting this afternoon was called to receive reports of New England successes and conditions," said President Johnston. "Unorganized as well as organized machinists are insisting on an eight-hour day, with time and a half for all overtime, to be computed from the moment the employe's day is completed. We have received numerous requests for help from the towns in Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, and there is a general unrest among the machine tool men, many of whom are working fifty-five hours and some fifty-nine hours a week. We intend to present a general demand to establish better conditions, and we hope this may be accomplished without the necessity of a strike or a suspension of the work. However, if the employers are not willing to grant our demands, we feel satisfied the men will not hesitate to leave their service.

"I am afraid the men will act on their own initiative. The hardest task we have now is keeping them at work, and we are being severely criticised in many places for keeping the men in. In many places in New England the men feel grieved because we won't give them the word. In the Hyde Park section of Boston nearly a thousand men are now out from two shops, and I am going there Monday to observe the situation. Particularly in Bridgeport, the men are finding fault, and workmen at other places like Meriden are asking when we are going to permit them to go out. We intend to give the employers a chance, so we leaders will see them personally or, as some of them prefer, they will be visited by committees of their own employes. My own personal view is for peaceful conferences and negotiations, and that was the consensus of opinion this afternoon.

Membership Growing.

"In the last two weeks in New England alone 15,000 new members have been admitted, and we have recently obtained an eight-hour day for 100,000 employes in the East. Some employers are yielding and some others are offering a fifty-hour work week, thinking erroneously that bonus offers will appease the men. But the men will now accept nothing short of a straight eight-hour proposition, which machinists have hoped and prayed for these many years. They have seen other tradesmen going home and they must stay because they are machinists and perform service that requires skill and close application. Some of the unorganized men thought the employers would grant the new conditions without effort on their part, but now they realize there will be no concessions unless they ask for them through an organized association.

"There will be no general strike, but if certain firms show a hostile attitude and deny concessions we will strike, though we wish to minimize the number of strikes. A committee of employes will wait on the Locomobile Company in Bridgeport Monday, and if they don't get what they ask, nothing under heaven can stop those 2,000 men striking. Personally, I feel very optimistic, knowing our demands are just. However, in case of a strike I prefer to select the time and place for a battle. I want to get the man I can hit the hardest and defeat the quickest. The employers of New England have all had notice through

3 DEAD, HEAVY LOSS IN LIGHTNING STORM

Camden Alone Has Ten Fires, Causing $200,000 Damage—Wide Area Swept.

BOLT KILLS BOY IN WATER

Another Crazes Man That Girl Tries to Drag from Shed Afire—Six Saved Off Sloop.

Several hundred thousand dollars damage was done, three persons were killed, others were injured, and many had narrow escapes from death by drowning or lightning in a thunder storm, with heavy rain and high wind, which swept over northern New Jersey and the lower part of New York yesterday afternoon.

The most serious damage was done in Camden, N. J., from which place the centre of the storm moved northeast across that State, through Westchester County, and up the Sound. Meanwhile another heavy storm cut across below Sandy Hook to the South Shore of Long Island. Brooklyn got off rather easily. In Manhattan there was heavy rain, gusts of wind, and much thunder and lightning, for a short time. The storm broke at a little after 4 o'clock, and before 6 the sun was shining brightly once more.

Philip Dillon, son of former Mayor Michael J. Dillon of New Rochelle, and Philip Roberts of the same town were out in a canoe near Glen Island, when the storm forced them to put in to shore and take shelter in a candy booth on the beach. The booth was struck by lightning and Roberts was killed. Dillon, who was stunned, was revived in the New Rochelle Hospital.

Killed Amid Crowd in Shed.

Crowds at Oakland Beach fled to shelter, and twenty persons fled to a shed along the shore. A bolt of lightning ran through the crowd, killing Abraham Abree of Port Chester, stunning his wife and daughter, and knocking down the rest of those who had taken refuge in the shelter. Crossing the sand, the same bolt disturbed the waters of the sound and capsized three canoes full of young people who were making their way to shore. All swam in safely.

Streets near the corner of Fourth Avenue and First Street, Mount Vernon, were flooded four feet deep, and crowds who had sought shelter under the platform shed at the New Haven station were flooded out by the water spouting from overflowing drain pipes.

John Donovan of the Stuyvesant Yacht Club, Pelham Bay Park, set out in the afternoon in his thirty-five-foot sailboat Mary D, 2d, to take part in races which were to have been held further up the Sound. With him were his friends John and James Burke, Robert Hudson, James Spaine, and William Cameron. The storm arose when the boat was in the middle of the Sound, and at the first great gust of wind she heeled and went over. At the same time there was a terrific downpour of rain which hid the accident from the view of those on shore, and the six passengers of the yacht would have been lost but for the fact that several motor boats were between the yacht and the beach.

Six Saved from Yacht.

One of these was the Henrietta, in which were James Conklin and Frederick Sellendorf. They saw the accident and started for the yacht, which was drifting about in the rain, the six passengers clinging to her with difficulty. Conklin and Sellendorf managed to get them aboard the Henrietta and took them to the clubhouse at Sea Cliff, L. I., where they were revived and got dry clothing. Later they were sent back to Pelham Bay Park in a motor boat. The May D., 2d, was towed into Sea Cliff after the storm, with her mainmast broken and other serious injuries.

Frederick Smith of 79 Bedford Street, Manhattan, went up to White Plains to visit Miss Helen Smith. He hired a horse and runabout at a local livery stable and took her out driving, and they had got as far as Scarsdale when the storm caught them. Thinking that it would last only a few minutes, Smith drove in under a shed on the farm of Hiram Benedict. They were waiting there when a bolt of lightning hit the shed, smashing it to pieces and setting the remnants on fire.

The horse was killed, the wagon demolished, and Smith was knocked down, apparently lifeless. Miss Kelly had on rubber-soled shoes, and, it is believed, that this fact was responsible for her escape from injury. She tried to drag Smith out of the blazing ruins, but the task was too much for her strength, so she ran out in the rain, crying for help, and found Michael Kelly, a blacksmith, and Thomas Simpson, a farmer, who together rescued the senseless man from the burning shelter.

Smith was taken to the White Plains Hospital, where he recovered consciousness, but was so violent that he had to be restrained by a straitjacket. For about an hour he was entirely out of his mind, but was eventually quieted under treatment by Dr. Henry T. Kelly. Though he had a bad scalp wound and a severe cut in his abdomen, it was thought that he might recover.

At Phillipsburg, N. J., several hundred young persons were bathing in the Delaware at Sand Island, the favorite beach of the neighborhood. The first bolt of lightning hit George Feas, a high school student, who was swimming 200 yards from shore, and killed him. Other bathers carried him out of the water and it was found that his head and shoulders had been burned by the lightning. His sisters, Hazel and Emma, were on

MAYOR JOINS CAMP FOR MILITARY DRILL

Will Spend Two Weeks at Plattsburg and Hopes to Make It a Month.

GIVES PLAN FULL APPROVAL

General Wood to be Present and Deliver Address at Opening on Need for Trained Men.

Mayor John Purroy Mitchel is the latest recruit to enroll for a course in the business and professional men's military training camp which opens tomorrow at Plattsburg. The Mayor left last night for Plattsburg and is due to arrive there this morning. He plans to take the drill for only two weeks, but if he can find the time he may lengthen it into a month.

The Mayor is enthusiastic over the idea of getting military training and expects to derive much pleasure and good out of the work. He believes it will afford a splendid vacation. He had a talk recently with General Leonard Wood and told him that it was the best idea he had heard of in a long time and that the movement should be encouraged in every way.

The Mayor went to Plattsburg from Ashokan, where he went on Friday night to inspect the big city reservoir. He was the guest there Friday night, Saturday and Sunday of Merritt Smith, Chief Engineer of the Board of Water Supply and went to the military training camp direct from there by rail.

Discussing the subject with friends recently the Mayor appeared to be as happy as a boy over the fun and hard work he expected to have at the camp. He said he tried hard to get away for a full month, but that there was so much work pressing in the city that he could not promise to stay longer than two weeks. On Friday, before leaving for Ashokan, the Mayor went to a sporting goods and military supply house on Broadway and bought an entire outfit of camping material, as well as military clothing which included two pairs of marching shoes, medium weight socks, one pair of light shoes, or "sneakers," two pairs of olive drab breeches, one army blouse, two olive drab shirts, one pair of leggings and a compaign hat. Recruits must pay their own transportation and will also deposit $30 at the camp to cover the cost of food and other expenses which will be about $1 a day.

The Mayor, enrolling as a recruit, will have to share the same life as the others and he will be under the same strict military discipline. He will eat the same ordinary but wholesome food, dig trenches, go on hikes, and do whatever the rules require. The Mayor told his friends he wanted to work just like the others and to have no special consideration shown him.

Mayor Mitchel is not the only official who has joined the camp. Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson, Henry H. Curran, Vice Chairman of the Board of Aldermen, Collector of the Port Dudley Field Malone, and Joseph Hartigan, Commissioner of the Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measures, have also enrolled as recruits and will be in camp for at least part of the time. Alderman Curran expects to remain three weeks.

Major Gen. Leonard Wood, commanding the Eastern Department of the army, will leave for Plattsburg tonight to be present when the camp is organized tomorrow morning. General Wood will probably deliver a speech to the men tomorrow night in the course of which he will emphasize the importance of the present movement and point out what it means to the country to have a well-trained body of citizens who could serve as officers in a volunteer army in the event of a national emergency.

Major Charles McK. Saltzman, Chief Signal Officer of the Eastern Department of the army, also leaves for Plattsburg today to remain for the entire month that the camp will last. All signal instruction, including the aerial service, will be directed by Major Saltzman. Captain Halstead Dorey, General Wood's aid, who is to command the camp, has already gone to Plattsburg. Captain Gordon Johnston, also of General Wood's staff, is another officer ordered to the camp.

The first section of the "Business Men's Camp Special" will leave the Grand Central Terminal at 9:15 o'clock this morning. The second section will leave ten minutes later. Between 700 and 800 men are expected to travel on the two specials. The total registration for the camp is nearly 1,900 and every State in the Union is represented.

GORIZIA DEFENSES PROVE FORMIDABLE

Italian Minister Warns His Countrymen of the Difficulties of the Campaign.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Aug. 8.—Signor Orlando, Minister of Justice, who has lately returned from the front, warns his fellow-countrymen of the immense difficulties of the struggle around Gorizia and the high plateau of Caro, which might almost be called impregnable.

"Looking at the line protecting the left bank of the Isonzo," he says, "one receives the impression that God, in creating it, acted like an omnipotent officer of military engineering, rendering the task of defense as easy as the task of attacking is formidable. The configuration of the mountains, the direction of their lines, the nature of the rocks of which they are formed, and the proximity of a rapid, deep river all seem arranged to prevent a passage, while the natural difficulties are completed by the marvelous perfection of man's work of protection. Long months of preparation on the part of the Austrians have enabled them to provide all that is most modern and complete in military science. The strength of construction, the security of hiding places, natural and artificial, and the ingenuity of mechanism all combine to make patience the most necessary condition of Italian victory.

"That we have advnced so far and are still advancing is the highest praise for the Italian Army, while the immense difficulties of the task are overwhelming proof of the insufficiency of the Italian frontier, which in itself overwhelmingly justified this war."

CZAR REJECTS PEACE OFFER BY KAISER; ARMY THREATENING RIGA IS DEFEATED; GERMANS CROSS VISTULA NEAR WARSAW

Petrograd Newspapers Tell of Peace Offer Made to the Czar Through the King of Denmark

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—The Vechernee Vremya claims to learn on good authority that Germany, through Denmark, proposed to Russia a separate peace, Russia to receive Galicia, while Germany would retain the western districts of Poland.

A representative of the Foreign Office categorically denied the remotest possibility of all peace negotiations.

It is alleged that the German proposals were freely discussed in the lobbies of the Duma, where they were dismissed as unworthy of serious consideration.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—Reuter's correspondent at Petrograd transmits the following:

"The Bourse Gazette learns from an unimpeachable source that the German Emperor made an offer of peace to Russia last week through the King of Denmark.

"The answer sent to the King stated that the question of peace negotiations could not be raised at the present time."

BITTER TALK FROM BRITISH FRONT

Germans Winning on Points, Officer Writes, Yet English Remain Smugly Complacent.

A PLEA FOR CONSCRIPTION

Nation Must Forget Traditions, Everything, and Awake and Organize to Win.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, July 28.—The following remarkable letter has come to The Chronicle from the front, presumably written by an officer in a Lancashire regiment:

"Sir: I cannot help but start with abuse, although you are only one of those 'in touch with the vast anti-conscriptionist mass of British opinion,' as your leader writer puts it. Damn British opinion, Sir; damn the vain, self-complacent English smugness and English arrogance! To your 'vast mass' the idea of defeat is quite inconceivable, for are they not the boys of the bulldog breed, the descendants of countless heroes, free men in a free country, who just won't be slaves, the liberators of Belgium, and so on ad nauseam?

"So colossal is the British arrogance that our brains and imagination are swamped. We still seem to think that the Germans have made war to gratify us, so that we may show them what fine fellows we really are.

"Probably you, too, have never entertained the idea that we are losing this war. Yet the bald truth remains that the Germans are winning on points: and we go on talking, talking about the 'big push'—to be delivered next Spring, according to The Times's military correspondent. (Please observe that we have given up the idea this year—we are still wearing down the 'baby-killing Hun.')

"If you could see trenches hammered to hell by hundreds of guns; hours of smoke, dust, blood, and noise; and then go across to take the same battered lines, only to be met by a hail of bullets, to return, leaving your friends and men lying dead outside, it might make you realize what an enormous advantage lies with the defense.

"The French have battered for five weeks—I have heard it day and night; net gain, two miles.

"The bubble of breaking through has burst, but we are too deaf to hear the 'pop.'

German Brains and Method.

"You answer with the German advance in Russia, and then go on to the financial problem. Of course Germany cannot last, of course she will be starved in a few months, of course she had no cotton, no copper; but she has got brains and method, and uses both. And we muddle along in our well-worn grooves, our party politics, our newspaper dictatorship, our racing, our brides in their baths.

"I have been ten months in France fighting for that—the thought almost makes me vomit. Don't talk about the 'glorious traditions of our race.' Only fools fight for traditions; the wise man fights for realities and the future.

"This long-winded preamble leads me on to your crowning folly—your fear and hatred of conscription.

"I shall be quite frank. Had conscription passed twelve months since I should have left England. Now, if they don't have it, I shall leave the country; rats have the foresight to leave certain ships.

"Circumstances alter cases, but I fear that they will never give the Englishman sufficient insight to see what a fool he really can be. And you, in touch with your vast mass, won't have national service in the nation's cause because 'all that is characteristically English dies if England's freedom perishes.'

"Those wornout myths! None of us are free, and you know it. Smith was not free to drown his brides. We are all slaves of the community, and, some think, of the country in which we live.

"Will you leave your dear old principles for a moment and look at things from another point of view?

"In a great national crisis it must be taken for granted (I assume that the nation is virile) that every man and woman is willing to serve the country. In other words, every man and woman is a volunteer. If you deny this hypothesis, you damn the country and your 'vast mass of British opinion.'

"Probably your principles will not be shocked by this statement. Well, then, every man and woman is willing to

SERBS HEED ALLIES, GREEKS OBDURATE

Nish Government Ready at Last to Cede Macedonia to Bulgaria.

ATHENS REFUSES KAVALA

But London Hopes Venizelos's Return to Power Will Bring Concession.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—Intense interest is felt here in the diplomatic negotiations in the Balkan capitals, reports from which indicate that Serbia is willing at last to cede Macedonia to Bulgaria, but that the Greek Government is now opposing the suggestion that she should return Kavala, the seaport in the vilayet of Saloniki, to Bulgaria.

It is thought, however, that this opposition may be changed when M. Venizelos returns to power, which is expected when the Greek Parliament reassembles.

M. Venizelos offered Kavala to Bulgaria when he was Premier simply in return for her continued neutrality while Greece went to the assistance of the Allies against the Turks, but King Constantine put his foot down on the whole policy, and the political crisis which resulted in the resignation of the Venizelos Cabinet followed.

A Reuter dispatch from Sofia says:

"That the Allies should reply to the Bulgarian note of June, while the Austro-German advance in Russia is still unchecked, has created considerable surprise in diplomatic circles here. The reply, which relates to Bulgaria's demand for the possession of territory now held by rival Balkan States, has not yet been made public and all comments regarding its terms is purely speculative.

"Submission of the reply at this critical time is subject to two interpretations. One is that the Allies are endeavoring to anticipate the conclusion of a Turko-Bulgarian agreement. It has been reported recently that Turkey had bought Bulgaria's neutrality by conceding the Dedeaghatch Railway to the latter country.

"The second interpretation is that while the reply might have been made earlier, it was held so that the Allies could be in a position to offer entirely satisfactory terms to Bulgaria. This theory is supported by the negotiations of the Allies with Greece and Serbia regarding the cession of disputed territory to Bulgaria in return for the latter's active co-operation on the side of the Allies.

"It is believed here that negotiations are entering a decisive phase, although the Cabinet has not been summoned to consider a reply to the Allies' note."

BERLIN, Aug. 8, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News Agency gives out the following:

"Newspapers of Athens say that King Constantine has determined personally to open the new session of Parliament with a speech emphasizing that it is necessary for Greece to preserve unconditional neutrality during the war, as the only guarantee of the country's welfare."

By the Treaty of Bucharest, at the close of the second Balkan war, that part of Macedonia which had fallen to the lot of Bulgaria at the close of the first Balkan war was taken from her and divided between Greece and Serbia. By the second Balkan war Bulgaria also lost to Rumania a strip of land from the Black Sea to the Danube. Bulgaria was also compelled to cede back to Turkey not only Adrianople, but the battle fields of Kirk Kilisse, Lule Burgas, and Tchorlu, where her soldiers had won magnificent victories over the Turks.

The loss of Macedonia to Greece and Serbia was the heaviest of blows to Bulgaria. In that part of Macedonia that was taken from her the nationality of the inhabitants was principally Bulgarian, and she claimed that in all of Macedonia the Bulgarian nationality was in the ascendent. Greece claimed a racial preponderance in the part of Macedonia touching her former boundaries, and Serbia contended that most of the inhabitants of Macedonia, except the Turks, were closely related to her. The problem as to which nation predominates in blood and culture in Macedonia has puzzled ethnologists,

CAPTURE SEROCK FORTRESS

Siege Troops Take One of Outlying Forts of Novo-Georgievsk.

RUSSIANS RETIRE SLOWLY

Stubborn Resistance Along the Narew Increases Warsaw Army's Chances of Escape.

MACKENSEN ALSO HINDERED

His Attempt to Flank Foe's New Line from South Checked by Counterattacks.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—That the Czar has rejected an offer of peace made to him by the Kaiser through the King of Denmark is the announcement made by Petrograd newspapers.

Official announcement is made by the Russian General Staff that the German army that was menacing Riga has been defeated and ousted from the region traversed in parallel lines by the Dvina, the Ekau, and the lower course of the Aa. This may mean that this army, which is linked up with that of General von Bülow, who is making a desperate effort to take the fortress of Kovno and further north to break through to the Vilna-Petrograd railroad, has been drawn upon to reinforce this movement.

Some military experts have held that the drive at Riga was more or less of a feint designed to keep as large a force as possible of Russians on the coast, while the vastly more important business of cutting the communications from the north of Grand Duke Nicholas's Warsaw army was attempted.

The Germans have taken the minor fortress of Serock, at the junction of the Narew and the Bug, and have crossed the Vistula in the vicinity of Warsaw. Further south General Woyrsch is advancing eastward, but Field Marshal Mackensen is being stubbornly resisted, and apparently making at the best, very slow progress.

On the whole, the daring scheme mapped out by the Germans as a grand sequel to the capture of Warsaw—the destruction of the Russian Army—is unfolding itself slowly, as must be the case from its very magnitude. With the three main railways, besides those built since the war, it is believed in military circles here that the Grand Duke Nicholas will be able to extricate his Warsaw army. The events in the east, however, will continue to rivet the attention of the world on them for some time to come.

Narew Line Still Holding.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 5, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—The abandonment of the Germans' attempt on Riga marks the failure of their general scheme for forcing a battle with the retreating Russians before they reach the Brest-Litovsk line. The stubbornness of the Russian defense on the Narew has contributed mainly to this important success.

Seeing that the Russian retreat eastward to a new front continued to be uninterrupted, the Germans attempted to build bridges across the Vistula and engage the Russians before they could reach their destination, but Russian artillery from Novo Georgievsk demolished the bridges as soon as they were constructed.

Von Mackensen has attempted a deep turning movement from Chelm, and a similar movement is to be seen against Kovno in the north. It probably will be several days before the Germans establish this new attack. They have failed to interfere with the new Russian lines of defense.

ROAR OF FOE'S GUNS MADE WARSAW SHAKE

Last Hours Preceding Polish Capital's Fall Marked by Weird Scenes.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—The London Times special correspondent, Stanley Washburn, who was in Warsaw up to the moment of the evacuation by the Russians, sends a dispatch describing the hours that preceded the fall of the city. The dispatch, which is dated Warsaw, Aug. 4, 8 P. M., says:

"The fall of the city is a matter of a few hours. Standing on the new bridge, one can see great German shells and volcanic fumes, while heavy reverberations shake the city. Across the Vistula hangs our observation balloon, while the sky is dotted with German aeroplanes, soaring hither and thither amid smoke puffs of bursting shrapnel from our guns. I counted fourteen shells aimed at one aeroplane.

"From the roof of the Hotel Bristol is visible the smoke of burning buildings in the suburbs which have been fired by shells from the German artillery. The city is deserted by all but the Poles, who intend to remain, and the evacuation, save for the last of the infantry and guns, seems to be practically completed. The last train departed for Petrograd yesterday, and the last to Brest-Litovsk goes tonight.

"Meanwhile the German aeroplanes continue their senseless destruction of lives and property. On Monday many bombs were dropped, and it is reported that twenty-five people were killed. One bomb fell between the Hotel de l'Europe and the new church, and others in all quarters of the city.

"All the bridges are mined, and I have left my motor car on the other side of the Vistula, lest I should be caught here and be unable to get out.

"While I was crossing a bridge this afternoon four bombs fell on Praga, the suburb on the eastern bank of the river, making terrific detonations and sending people in every direction.

"The copper wires of the telephone and telegraph service and the trolley wires of the tramways are being taken down, and for those who have been here watching the fate of Warsaw for many months the spectacle of the preparations to abandon it into the hands of the enemy is very depressing.

"Early today I visited the corps defending our left flank in the vicinity of Garwolin, between Warsaw and Ivangorod, and found them holding the Germans satisfactorily, while our corps in the centre was being evacuated. I am unable to express an opinion as to the movements of the armies north and south of here, as we already have cut all communications, but I believe the Germans have lost already any chance they may have had of inflicting any disaster on the Warsaw army unless one of its neighbors gives way prematurely.

"In spite of the fact that shells are bursting in the outskirts of the town, the remainder of the evacuation, under the auspices of the Russian commanders, is moving as quietly as on the first day of the civil evacuation, two weeks ago. The road is filled with tired troops coming back from the position, and there is nothing to indicate any feeling of hopelessness, though disappointment is written on every face.

"'With munitions,' said one, 'we could always beat the Germans.'

"Another said: 'We don't want peace. When we have plenty of shells we will take Warsaw back again. We can never leave it in the hands of the Germans.'"

In a dispatch dated Aug. 5, Mr. Washburn adds:

"I have passed the night outside the city on account of probabilities that the road, being under shell fire, might at any hour be sufficiently destroyed to prevent motor travel."

"From the hills to the east of Warsaw one can see the sky dotted with flashes of bursting shells just outside the town. Since 6 o'clock this morning there has been continuous heavy gunfire in the direction of the city, which probably is the prelude of what may be the last attack before the Germans enter it. I am returning now in the direction of the city, hoping to get in once more before the bridges are destroyed and the city finally passes out of our hands.

"There are indications that there will be only a rear-guard action, and after that we shall retire directly to the Brest line.

"Later.—Warsaw has been given up. The bridges were blown up at 3 o'clock this morning, and the German cavalry entered the city at 6 A. M."

DID NOT FIRE ON WARSAW.

Petrograd Denies Report That Russians Shelled the City.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—Mendacious reports that the Russians fired on Warsaw, especially on the Royal Palace, are categorically denied.

WAR OFFICES' VERSIONS OF LATEST OPERATIONS

Marked Successes Claimed by Russians and Teutonic Allies.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8.—The following official statement was issued tonight at the headquarters of the Russian General Staff:

In the direction of Riga we dislodged the enemy from the region between the Dvina, the Ekau, and the lower course of the Aa.

Fighting continues as before, without any essential change, on the roads east of Poniewesch.

Enemy attacks on Kovno and Ossowetz, which were repulsed on the 6th, were not renewed the following day. The enemy continues to deliver vigorous attacks from the Narew line along the whole front, great forces of the enemy being directed against the Lomza-Ostrov sector.

On the right bank of the Middle Vistula the day of the 7th passed without any engagements of importance. On the left bank of the Wieprz there have been obstinate rear-guard actions. In the course of counter-attacks we captured some hundreds of prisoners. Between the Wieprz and the Bug there has been no essential change.

On the left bank of the Bug, between Touria and Louga, we exercised pressure successfully on the enemy's advance guards along a wide front.

There has been intermittent artillery firing at some points on the Upper Bug, the Zlota Lipa, and the Dniester.

Teutons Say Pursuit Progresses.

BERLIN, Aug. 8, (via London.)—Further progress for the Austro-German forces which are attempting to cut off the retreat of the Russians was announced today by the War Office in the following communication:

Eastern theatre of war: German troops on the Narew are approaching the Lomza-Ostrov-Wyszkow road. At some points the enemy offered stubborn resistance. South of Wyszkow the Bug has been reached. Serock, at the mouth of the Bug, has been occupied. Near Novo Georgievsk our siege troops took the forts at Segrze.

Near Warsaw we gained the eastern bank of the Vistula.

Southeastern theatre of war: Under the pressure of troops under Field Marshal von Mackensen the Russians are retreating in an easterly direction. Between the Vistula and the Bug the left wing of the group of armies under von Mackensen has driven back the enemy in a northerly direction. The right wing is still fighting in the direction of the River Wieprz.

Austrians Drive Russians Back.

VIENNA, Aug. 8, (via London, Aug. 9.)—This official communication was issued today:

The army of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand in the district between the Vistula and the Wieprz yesterday prosecuted its attack. Our attacking forces repulsed the enemy from several lines west of the Wieprz and occupied in the afternoon Lubartov and advanced northward to the bend of the river. The repulsed enemy fled in disorder across the Wieprz.

South and southwest of Wiechov our troops gained a full success. In order to parry our attack the enemy counter-attacked. Hand-to-hand fighting developed, and the enemy, caught on the front and flank, was driven back across the Wieprz. The number of prisoners taken at Lubartov and Wiechov up to yesterday evening aggregated 23 officers and 6,000 men, and the booty consisted of two cannon, eleven machine guns, and two munition cars.

Threatened by our troops, who are victoriously advancing from the south toward the lower Wieprz, the Russian corps which remained in the Vistula district, northwest of Ivangorod, began to retreat northwestward early this morning, pursued by the Austro-Hungarian forces.

Between the Wieprz and the Bug fighting is proceeding.

In East Galicia the situation is unchanged.

CHASE FOE NOWADAYS WITH RAILROADS

Comparison With Napoleon's Campaign in Russia Nonsense, Says Bulow.

BUDAPEST, July 20, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—A Budapest newspaper publishes an interview with General von Bulow, obtained at the front, in which the General discusses the difference between the present German campaign in Russia and that of Napoleon in 1812.

"It has been remarked," said the General, "that the present strategy of the Russians is the same as that which proved effective against Napoleon. Such strategy was effective then, but not now, when means of communication have been so much improved. The bread which our soldiers eat today in Windau was baked in Breslau yesterday.

"In times when a railway is being built a mile behind the advancing forces, when thousands of motor lorries are close behind us, when asphalt roads grow, as it were, out of the earth, no such strategy is effective. We drink German mineral water and eat fresh meat direct from Berlin, and can build a road, if necessary, fifty miles long in two days. It is therefore nonsense to speak of the days and strategy of Napoleon."

SAY GERMAN HOSTS ARE FED BOUNTIFULLY

Three Hot Meals a Day With Mineral Water in Devastated Poland.

BERLIN, Aug. 8, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—An account of the conditions under which the German and Austrian armies are advancing through the districts of Poland devastated by the Russians before their retreat was given out today by the Overseas News Agency. It follows:

"The colossal scale on which arrangements were made to supply the armies caused a sensation in the towns evacuated by the Russians. Hundreds of thousands of troops between the Vistula and the Bug are being fed as well as though they were at home. The men receive three warm meals daily. Great herds of cattle are driven behind the advancing troops. Millions of bottles of mineral water are distributed among the men.

"The railroads were reopened speedily by the Germans and Austrians, solving the problem of restoring facilities for forwarding troops by rail. The furnishing of supplies to the men has been accomplished notwithstanding the fact that the Russians removed all such supplies and set fire to the villages before they retreated.

"An officer of the Russian General Staff said that Brest-Litovsk (on the Bug River east of Warsaw) would be unable to resist such a charge as that made by the army of General von Woyrsch. Russian prisoners at Ivangorod say that for some time they received only eight cartridges daily.

"The only representatives of neutral countries remaining at their posts at Warsaw are those of the United States and Norway. Attempts have been made to organize bands of marauders from the lower classes.

"A correspondent of the Tageblatt at Lemberg, Galicia, reports that a man who succeeded in escaping from Warsaw before its capture says that in spite of closest surveillance on the part of the Russian authorities proclamations were circulated appealing to the people to oppose the military and pay off old scores against the Russians.

"Prince Leopold of Bavaria received a tremendous ovation when he entered Warsaw. Citizens of neutral countries, particularly American newspaper correspondents, participated in the celebration. Crowds of Poles greeted the Germans as liberators. Jews openly disregarded orders to leave the town before its evacuation. Families of peasants, driven by the Russians into Warsaw, already have been sent back to their homes.

"There were similar scenes of popular rejoicing when the Germans occupied Ivangorod and Lublin, where large stores of flour and other materials fell into the hands of the conquerors. The Generals commanding the first arrivals of troops were greeted formally by representatives of the cities. The Germans promised that the new régime would be mild, provided the people obeyed police regulations."

LOSSES PUT AT 3,500,000.

Unofficial Estimate of Russian Casualties to Middle of July.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—The Daily Mail asserts that Petrograd is full of wounded, and that the Russian casualties up to the middle of July are unofficially estimated at 3,500,000 in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The paper says, however, that this estimate seems guesswork as the military authorities themselves do not know the real totals.

Notwithstanding the tremendous losses, the Russian people are cheerful and confident, for they believe Germany's financial collapse is near.

TRADE PRISONERS BY SHIP.

Will Ply the Baltic Between Russian and German Ports.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Arrangements have been completed for beginning on Thursday the exchange of incapacitated Russian and German prisoners of war. A dispatch from Copenhagen to the Exchange Telegraph Company says that a steamer has been chartered for this purpose to sail across the Baltic between Trelleborg and Sassnitz, carrying 300 men on each trip.

The dispatch says also that the exchange of Austrian and Russian prisoners will be begun next month.

ORGANIZE FOR MUNITIONS.

Russian Committees Meet and Start Work in Petrograd.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8.—The general committees appointed to organize industries for military purposes began their labors yesterday, under the Presidency of Alexander Guchkoff, formerly President of the Duma. Representatives of all parts of the empire attender the committee meetings.

Adressing the committees, M. Riabouchinsky, a wealthy Moscow man, said:

"We shall retire, if necessary, as far as the Ural Mountains. We shall fight to the last man, but we shall gain victory."

FREE SPEECH FOR DUMA.

More Liberty for Workers Urged as Necessary for Russia's Triumph.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—Russia is every day putting herself in better shape for beginning the war over again and carrying it this time to a successful conclusion.

The Government has wisely conceded the right of free speech to the members of the Duma, and allowed the leaders of industry to take part in the reorganization which is required to produce what the army needs.

Now the Ministers are being urged to go a step further and to fan the patriotic spirit of the workmen by releasing them from certain restrictions which hitherto had been in force and associating them with the great national task of regeneration.

Not only the radicals but also the conservatives declare this is necessary for the attainment of victory.

ALLIES WIN GROUND IN GALLIPOLI FIGHT

Constantinople Reports Heavy Attacks Both at Ari Burnu and Sedd-el-Bahr.

FLEET AIDS IN SHELLING

Turks, While Admitting Repulses, Say Most of the Positions Were Captured Again.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 8, (via London).—A land and sea attack on the Turkish positions on Gallipoli Peninsula is announced in an official communication issued at Constantinople, as received here today. The Turkish War Office admits the loss of ground, but asserts that in another engagement the Turks captured trenches from the Allies.

The text of the report, whose date of issue is not given in the Constantinople dispatch, follows:

Yesterday evening on the Dardanelles front, in the region of Ari Burnu, our left wing captured some trenches from the enemy by a surprise attack and prevented him from bringing up reinforcements.

In the afternoon the enemy, after long and violent artillery preparation from land and sea, advanced and made a number of attacks against the trenches on our left wing, penetrating a portion of them. Toward evening we recaptured the greater part of the lost ground and hindered the enemy by our fire from constructing defenses in the positions he still occupied.

On the same day, near Sedd-el-Bahr, we repulsed the enemy, who attacked our trenches on our right wing south of Saghadere after long preparation by artillery and infantry fire. We also stopped a second attack. Part of our foremost trenches was situated for a certain time between our firing line and that of the enemy. By strong attacks in the evening we reconquered the positions held by the enemy.

In the Caucasus we continue a vigorous pursuit of the enemy on our right wing. The enemy evacuated his positions near Alashgerd and retreated at Kussedagte.

BERLIN, Aug. 8, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The following news items were given out today for publication by the Overseas News Agency:

"Telegrams from Athens give reports of increasing friction between French and British officers on Gallipoli Peninsula. It has been necessary to forbid intercourse between them. The French accuse the British of having lost courage on account of their heavy losses.

"A Milan dispatch says the British have purchased five Italian ships, filled them with ballast and sunk them off the coast of the peninsula, to form a bridge for the landing of heavy artillery.

The Vossische Zeitung learns from a reliable source that there is no truth in the report that a British submarine blew up the bridge between Galata and Stamboul."

SAYS TURKS WILL SOON EXPEL BRITISH

Liman von Sanders Asserts Their Position on West Gallipoli Will Be Taken Speedily.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS, GALLIPOLI, June 14, (Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—"There are no secrets around here. You can go anywhere you please," said Field Marshal Liman von Sanders Pasha to the Associated Press correspondent when the latter presented his credentials and asked for permission to visit the front.

"I may add that the military situation is most favorable for us," he continued. "We intend driving the British out of Ari Burnu before long. But we are in no hurry, because we can achieve that without making the sacrifices which might still be necessary to get rid of the enemy."

The supreme commander of the Turkish forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula is a man somewhat advanced in years, but remarkably well preserved. He is about six feet tall and well proportioned in body; there is a soft quality in the lines of his face and the expression of his eyes. Limar Pasha came to Turkey in the Summer of 1913 to assist, as head of the German military mission, in the reorganization of the Ottoman army. He has been an indefatigable worker in that capacity, and the splendid conduct of the Sultan's troops in this war may be said to be largely due to the reforms instituted on his advice.

In his conversation with the Associated Press correspondent Liman Pasha outlined briefly the course which military events on the peninsula had taken since the landing in the last week of April.

"In forty-nine days (the interview occurred on June 11) the Allies have done little beside losing ground steadily," said the commander.

"Their offensive collapsed as soon as we were able to counteract their tactics. It must be borne in mind that this happened despite a superiority in artillery that left our own arm of that character no chance whatever. For days and days the allied ships bombarded and searched every part of the peninsula with an artillery fire as severe an incessant as, on the whole, it was unproductive of results favorable to the British and French troops. I will say that the moral effect of a heavy bombardment is not as lasting in the case of Turkish troops as the Allies may have expected. Our brave Ottoman soldiers are not easily frightened by noise, owing to their splendid nerves—and this is a war of nerves, a war in which strong nerves mean victory."

Later in the day the correspondent received a letter from Liman Pasha in which all commanders at the front were requested to permit an inspection of their sectors by the holder. On the following day, June 12, the position at Ari Burnu was visited.

But in the Aegean Sea two British cruisers were manoeuvring when the ride to Ari Burnu began. Since 5:30 A. M. they had kept up a rather severe bombardment of certain parts of the peninsula. Passing through the section under fire, it was obvious that indirect fire, without observers, is a waste of ammunition. The fire of the cruisers was purely "chance" work. No aeroplane or captive balloon was up, and the heavy shells exploded in the open and on the wheat fields. Ninety were counted, and the result achieved is represented by zero.

The bombardment ceased about 7 A. M. A little later the Ari Burnu position was reached, and the journey covered ground formerly occupied by the British troops, which at Ari Burnu are exclusively contingents from Australia and New Zealand.

The centre of the British position is Ari Burnu, or Cape Ari. Here a long outer trench has been dug. Behind this outer trench the British have established a second line of defense, consisting of two short sectors. Back of the southernmost of these sectors lies another trench, serving, evidently, as a support to an artillery redoubt located on the summit of Cape Ari itself.

With Ari Burnu as a pivot, the British position is crescent-shaped, about 2,800 yards long from north to south, and 1,100 yards wide in a line drawn across Ari Burnu. The site is rather bare. There is a small spring on it, and most of the water needed by the British troops has to be brought from the adjacent islands.

The Turkish trenches are in one case only two yards from the British trench. At another point the trenches of the opposing forces are only ten yards apart. Constant sapping by the Turks is the cause of this interesting condition. Already the British trenches have been blown up by the Turks in three places. Hand grenades and large bombs thrown by a capapult are used by the British. One of the former had failed to explode and was the subject of study of some Turkish officers. The bomb consisted of a cast-steel outer shell, 2¼ inches in diameter and about six inches long. The shell contained an inner tube filled with an explosive.

About noon Essad Pasha, commander of the third army, and, during the late Balkan War, defender of Janina, was met by the correspondent. General Essad is a man of medium height, slightly gray about the temples, of dignified, military appearance, and courteous demeanor.

"The situation here, at Ari Burnu and Sedd-el-Bahr is very favorable," he said. "The British and French have been obliged to assume the defensive, which, I should say, is not what they landed for. We hope to get them out and before long. The Allies have come to respect the bayonets of our soldiers."

Essad Pasha then recounted what some of the British prisoners thought of the nightly charges made by the Turks. Most of them did not like the experience.

"I admit there is something uncanny in men rushing a trench silently with bayonets fixed. Noise has a stimulating effect at times, while its absence acts in an opposite direction," he said.

The afternoon was made interesting by a visit from a British aeroplane, which dropped three large bombs.

Throughout the day the sniping from both trenches continued. A Turkish battery on the British left flank added to the picture by taking a pot shot at some part of the opponents' trenches. The British pieces on land did not reply for some time, but finally were also heard from. No British or French man-of-war could be seen near Gaba Tepe, their former station. A single hospital ship, painted gray, lay off shore. The allied war vessels had been driven to cover by the German submarines, the Turkish officer said, and then pointed in the direction of Imbros Island. With the aid of glasses a good view of the northeast bay of the island was to be had. The small sheet of water was literally covered with shipping of all sorts, men-of-war, transports, supply ships, every conceivable sort of water craft. In fact, had been jammed into the small bay, outside of which torpedo boats and destroyers were patrolling for submarines.

The Gallipoli campaign plan of the Allies, according to officers of the Ottoman Army, was to take the forts guarding the entrance and lower reaches of the Dardanelles. For this purpose landings were made at Kum-Kale, Sedd-el-Bahr, Ari Burnu, and Gaba Tepe. Essad Pasha is of the opinion that of these only Gaba Tepe was a feint, insisting at the same time the assertion of the Allies, that the Kum Kale landing had also been a sham manoeuvre, is due to the fact that the allied troops could not keep the ground they had taken there. The landing at Ari Burnu was intended as a flank attack upon the Ottoman forces opposing the allied troops set ashore at Sedd-el-Bahr. By occupying the narrow part of the peninsula between Ari Burnu and Maidos the Australians and New Zealanders now hemmed in at Ari Burnu were also to cut off the land line of communications of the Turkish troops at Sedd-el-Bahr. Meanwhile the troops landed at Sedd-el-Bahr were to advance north, and in so doing take the Turkish forts on the European shore of the Dardanelles from the land side. With these forts taken the water route to Constantinople would have been open as far as Nagara. Prompt action by the Turkish Army ruined the plan, bringing about what General d'Amade, commander of the French contingent, is said to have feared. It is understood in well-informed circles in Constantinople that General d'Amade favored a landing near Enos, on the north shore of the Gulf of Saros, but that Sir Ian Hamilton was against this.

serve. To take full advantage of this willingness it must be organized—in a word, conscription, that awful bogie word, which gives some little Liberals and some little Conservatives and some little Socialists bad dreams.

"I know that I am not writing to a child, but conscription does not mean that every one is a soldier—it means that George, who is an engineer, engineers for the State; Tom, who is a skilled workman, works for the State, and Harry and Bill, who are fit to fight, fight and perhaps die for the State. The State calls her children and allots to them their tasks. What monstrous, wicked, bloody oppression!

"And you must go on unblushingly with your old volunteering muddle. George, the engineer, may join the R. A. M. C.; Tom, the skilled worgman, may fight, and the Harrys and Bill may become politicians and newspaper editors, for all the country seems to care.

"Of course, one volunteer is equal to four pressed men. Our copy books say so; therefore it must be true.

"'Anyhow,' said an English soldier, 'I hope I never meet a German volunteer.'

"When you think of the Germans, their wonderful self-sacrifices, their wonderful courage and fortitude and unanimity, doesn't it make you blush for your own country? Throw away your principles, man, throw away the lumber of the past and look things in the face.

"Don't blather about God upholding the cause of the just and the bull dog pluck pulling us through—I am tired of pulpit and music hall sentiments. Realize that the Germans are a better and a more virile race than we are and try to teach your vast mass of British opinion to surpass them at their own game.

"I am an Englishman and the chances are that I shall never see another year, yet our national sentimentality, our conceit, our petty squabbling, our policies, our lack of method have made of me one of the most ardent pro-Germans in Europe.

"I cannot say why I have treated you to this round of abuse—you are no worse than others, if anything a trifle better than that loathsome Northcliffe crowd, with their party political jobbery.

"But you, Sir, are blinded by principles, which is nearly as bad—bound hand and foot by past traditions and the utterances of statesmen now happily dead, but, unfortunately, not forgotten. Cannot The Daily Chronicle think for itself, or must it still be bound by the opinions of, say, Gladstone? Really, even such a demi-god as he can get out of date.

"Could you but realize how nauseating it is to read any London daily—'the mouthpieces of the nation,' (in black letters, please,)—with their quabbles, their meanness and their follies! You are better—that is why I take the trouble to write you this; but, good God, you're bad enough!

"I am abusive, but when moved superficial politeness is jettisoned; and, candidly, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to drive these things into your head with a mallet; the distance, however, is too great. Even the Germans and their deadly earnestness cannot convince you.

"This letter is not intended for any publicity, though it would be amusing to see some of your public reading it; nor is it intended to draw forth any reply. The labor of writing it would not be grudged if I knew that you had read it and thought for five minutes on what I have said.

"We have such a colossal task before us that poor mortals like me are appalled, but the Olympians at home still go unmoved about their god-like business. It is they who need help, not we.

"In conclusion I shall quote Mr. Walter Long, (Morning Post, July 10): 'It would not have met the situation to have simply pressed more men into the service unless we could have put in their hands the rifles and ammunition without which they would be useless to take part in the war.'

"There you have the fallacy in a nutshell. Surely Long must know that national service does not cram every man into the ranks when we cannot equip them, (our voluntary system did that from August to December;) if there is national service they are called up when required. You know that and he knows it, yet your damnable politics befoul your mouths.

"The Liberals are bound by principles; the Socialists by the word 'freedom'; the Conservatives have no principles and no traditions since 1906—if there were an ounce of ability in their broken camp they might break fresh ground, but the soil is barren.

"I am asking my friend to transmit this letter to you, as it would be lost in the ordinary channels. My thoughts and their mode of expression may be crude, Sir, but they have the virtue of being honest and outspoken. I am, Sir, yours very truly, LANCASHIRE."

ARTILLERY ARE BUSY ON WESTERN FRONT

Germans Attack in Belgium, on the Aisne, and in the Woevre District.

ANOTHER VOSGES REPULSE

Violent German Attacks at Linge Thrown Back with Great Loss—Lull in Argonne Fighting.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Artillery actions, apparently without definite results, were fought today at several points along the front from Flanders to Soissons, which place was again bombarded.

In the Argonne, where the army of the German Crown Prince has for some weeks been trying to pierce the French lines, the Germans retained their minor gains of Friday, but made no considerable effort to increase them.

The guns were active also in the Woevre. Last night and today the Germans made violent attacks upon the French positions at Linge, but were thrown back with severe losses.

Following is the official communication issued tonight:

On the western part of the front some artillery actions are reported: In Belgium, near Steenstraate and Het Sase, in Artois, on the line of the Santerre, and in the valley of the Aisne, where Soissons was again bombarded.

In the Argonne only bomb and grenade fighting between the men in the opposing trenches has been reported.

In the Woevre the artillery showed marked activity, especially in the region of Flirey and in the Forest of Le Prêtre.

In the Vosges the Germans in the evening again attacked our positions at Linge and were completely beaten back.

Hilsenfirst has been violently shelled by the enemy.

This is the text of the Paris afternoon report:

In the region of Artois there were continual combats with hand grenades around Souchez.

In the Argonnes late yesterday the Germans succeeded in penetrating one of our positions in a salient in the western part of the forest of Fontaine Houyette. They were driven back by a counterattack, and could maintain themselves only in a lookout post in advance of our first line. During the night the Germans attacked our positions in the region of La Fille Morte. They obtained a footing in one of our trenches, but were ejected immediately, except on a front of thirty yards.

In the Vosges an attack delivered by the Germans at the end of the afternoon attained a character of extreme violence. It was directed against our positions at Lingekopf and Schratzmannele and the neck of land which separates these two heights. Our assailants were repulsed completely and suffered heavy losses. Before the portion of the front held by only one of our companies the corpses of more than one hundred Germans remained in the network of our entanglements.

The statement of the Headquarters Staff in Berlin is as follows:

French hand-grenade attacks near Souchez and counterattacks against the trench taken from the French in the Western Argonne on Friday were repulsed.

Fighting in the Vosges, north of Münster, was renewed Saturday afternoon. The night, however, was quiet.

SHELL ALLIED HYDROPLANES

Germans Train Big Guns on Them Off Nieuport Without Effect.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—A note made public by the War Office tonight says:

"The Germans endeavored today to destroy off Nieuport, by means of heavy shells, two allied hydroplanes. Our artillery promptly silenced the German batteries. Of the two planes one came back unaided, while the other was towed into shore undamaged."

EXPLOIT BELGIAN MINES.

Germans Said to be Taking Out Coal, Regardless of the Future.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—A dispatch to The Daily Chronicle from the North of France says that the Germans have organized a sort of general coal bureau at Antwerp in order to exploit the mines which they have taken possession of in Belgium and the North of France. The mineral is divided roughly into two parts, one of which is requisitioned for the needs of the army and the German munition factories. The rest is exported to Switzerland, where it is resold by agents.

"The manner in which the mines are worked can only be described as devouring the coal. Only one end is considered—getting as much out of the pits as possible, without any consideration for the customary operations necessary for the consolidation and permanency of the mines. It is unfortunately only too clear that after the war a considerable time must elapse before the mines can once again be put in sound condition for economical working."

WAR IS DISRUPTING ENGLISH SOCIETY

London Society Chronicler Predicts Breaking Down of All Barriers by Conflict.

FINANCIAL DRAIN THE CAUSE

Old-Time Leaders, He Thinks, Will Be Unable to Maintain Their Former Exclusiveness.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, July 30.—Charles Edward Jerningham, well known as a chronicler of English society as "Marmaduke," in an interview with THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent this week forecasts that after the war English exclusive life as it has existed for years will vanish. The whole fabric of English society, he says, has been rocked by the war. When the conflict is ended he believes that economic conditions will be so entirely changed that the social barriers so long existent will be gone.

"My reason for believing that society as we have known it in England will no longer exist," said Mr. Jerningham, "is that those who have made up society will, because of the awful financial drain of the war, find their fortunes dissipated. That is the crux of the whole matter. In England, as in America, we have had society leaders whose wealth has been society's mainstay. It is idle to speak of titles in society without fortunes, for without a financial prop a title goes for naught. We shall still have titles here after the war, but where will be the fortunes? The longer the war goes on the more apparent it is that the brunt of financing it must come upon those of wealth. As the conflict runs on month after month this wealth shrinks. Suppose the war lasts years—what of society and its wealth? It is easy to see that from the leaders of society, those possessing the greatest financial resources, money has to be poured out.

"After the war and the readjustment that the nation must undergo who will be the ones to turn in and help restore England's finances? The workman must be provided for, and he is bound to come in for greater recognition than ever before. He is going to get higher wages, and his whole status in the nation is to be bettered. The war is to have a chastening effect upon the nation in every way. Where the scales have been uneven they must be balanced. What of the landed estates of the wealthy and their fine town homes? Why, it's clear that with the sacrifices the wealthy must make much of the land must go, and the splendid mansions must feel the strain. It means simply that the society man must give up many of the luxuries that have gone to make up the whole scheme of exclusive life. We shall see an England that after the scourge of the war is readjusting herself in every way. There will be no time for society's arts."

As to American society in England after the war, Mr. Jerningham ventured the prediction that, with English society at a standstill, Americans would find it out of it.

"The Americans in society in London today," he said, "are all engaged in war work, making noble sacrifices. It is the same with English society leaders. After the war none of them will have heart for society functions.

"I wonder if Americans realise what a tremendous change has occurred in England within recent years regarding their own country. American society in England became a fact when American women married prominent or distinguished Englishmen, and in the course of time there has been established in England a large society of American men and women—a society which has enormous influence. Twenty years ago there were many English men and women who refused to reconcile themselves to the presence of this new element. At the present moment it would be difficult to find in the country a single Englishman or Englishwoman of importance who is not on the very friendliest terms with the best known Americans in London. There is no doubt whatever that the sympathy, generosity, and active assistance of American men and women in the present crisis on the side of Great Britain have done much to bring about the extraordinary change. The loyalty and sympathy given freely by an immense number of Americans have made an indescribable impression upon English society and upon the general public throughout the country."

FEAR RAID ON ANTWERP.

German Authorities Are Very Watchful, Fearing an Air Attack.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 8, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The recent raids by allied aviators in Flanders have produced considerable disquiet among the German authorities at Antwerp, and an attack upon that town is feared.

As a precaution the surveillance, both day and night, is very strict, and all approach to within a distance of two or three miles is forbidden.

The Germans are also continually obsessed by a fear of spies, and all entry into or egress from Antwerp after nightfall is forbidden. Additional sentinels have been posted, and passports are the universal rule, even schol children having to produce them.

Within the fortified area the Germans are incessantly laboring at the erection of works of defense, and these are models of technical skill and all the parts are connected by railways. It is for this reason that the air raids are so much dreaded, it being feared that as these increase in audacity, the mork of so many months may be destroyed in a moment.

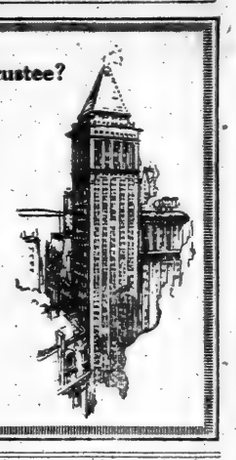
and there are no reliable statistics to settle the conflicting claims.

Since the opening of the present war Bulgaria has refused to guarantee her neutrality except on the condition that Greece, Serbia and Rumania return to her the principal part of what they took from her at the close of the second Balkan war.

The Allies have recently brought diplomatic pressure on Serbia to induce her to meet the terms of Bulgaria. Early in this year, when it appeared that Greece would enter the war on the side of the Allies, Venizelos, then Premier of Greece, urged that Greece, to secure the neutrality or the support of Bulgaria, should cede Kavalla, a seaport near Saloniki, to Bulgaria and should consent to the cession by Serbia of a part of Macedonia to Bulgaria. Rumania is said to have demanded the guarantee that she should receive Transylvania and a part of the whole of the Russian province of Bessarabia, in return for which she would enter the war herself and aid in securing Bulgaria to the Allies by ceding back to her the strip from the Black Sea to the Danube.

Premier Venizelos resigned because his proposal to cede territory to Bulgaria and join the Allies was repudiated by King Constantine of Greece, whose wife is a sister of the German Kaiser. The results of the last Greek election are interpreted as showing that the people of Greece favor the policy of Venizelos against that of the King.

Greece gained most of all by the Balkan wars. She added 16,919 square miles to her territory and increased her population from 2,666,000 to 4,363,000. Serbia's territory was increased from 18,650 square miles to 33,891 square miles, and her population from 2,911,701 to 4,527,992. Bulgaria gained less than 10,000 square miles and increased her population from 4,337,516 to 4,467,006.



DUTCH WANT TO BUY MUNITIONS FROM US

Anxiously Await the United States Answer to the Austro-Hungarian Protest.

DREAD AN ARMS EMBARGO

Particularly Since They Have Increased Their Army from 330,000 to 550,000.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—In Dutch official circles, America's reply to the Austro-Hungarian note protesting against the export of ammunition from the United States is awaited with intense interest. Holland is just now making herculean efforts to strengthen its defenses against possible aggressions on the part of any one of the belligerent powers. No doubt is entertained here that this neutral, pacific little kingdom will fight to the last gasp before it will permit the violation of its neutrality by either Germany or England.

Under a new law just enacted it his called to the colors practically every man capable of carrying a rifle. The total of the immediately available force having been raised from 330,000 to 550,000, the problem of providing ammunition for the increased army has become one of critical urgency. Dutch officials now point out that Holland, as a nation devoted to the pursuits of peace and very inadequately supplied with metal resources or ammunition factories of its own, is absolutely dependent for munitions upon what it can import from other neutral countries, especially America. The question of obtaining large supplies of steel and other raw materials and manufactures from the United States has been the subject of consideration by the Government for some time.

According to the Dutch contention, the adoption by the United States of a regulation forbidding the export of munitions would practically foredoom not only Holland, but every other small neutral power, to certain defeat at the hands of any powerful and well-prepared nation which might choose to attack it.

EASTLAND VS. LUSITANIA.

Pro-German Society Compares Two Disasters to Criticise Government.

The organization known as the Friends of Peace, a pro-German society which asserts that it represents various other pro-German organizations, among them the German-American Alliance, American Women of German Descent, German Catholic Federation of New York, United Irish-American Societies United Austrian and Hungarian-American Societies, and various others, issued a statement last night which said, among other things, that the protection of shipments of munitions to Great Britain "smacks of an alliance" between that country and the United States.

The Friends of Peace issued last week a bitter attack on Robert Lansing, the Secretary of State, and prior to that issued one in which it protested against the attitude of the American press toward the pro-German cause and propaganda. The statement issued yesterday is based on the Eastland disaster, and holds the American Government Inspectors as blameworthy for sending the "six thousand persons" on that vessel to their graves as the German submarine for sinking the Lusitania.

BELIEVES RUMANIA WILL STAY NEUTRAL

Germany Will Restore Bessarabia as Price, if She Wins, Says Solomon Sufrin.

SAYS PEOPLE HATE RUSSIA

Only Class in Favor of Joining Allies Are Immature Students, Ex-Assemblyman Asserts.

The student classes of Rumania are leaders in the movement to induce that country to join the Allies and so link together the enemies of the Central Powers and surround them with a circle of steel, but the people as a whole want to hold their country neutral, according to ex-Assemblyman Solomon Sufrin, a Rumanian by descent. He believes that Rumania actually will remain neutral, and that the Government will be hard pressed to satisfy both parties.

"Until the death of King Carl I, a Prince of the Hohenzollern family, Rumania was dominated by German influences. German financiers built its railroads, German engineers explored its fields, mountains and valleys, and German customs and culture prevailed. The King supported everything German. During his long reign he did not, however, succeed in uniting the two factions of the population—the student classes and the people's classes.

"No country in Europe is held more in submission than Rumania is by its students. These are boys and men between the ages of 16 and 25, who attend the gymnasiums and high schools and who become imbued with false patriotic ideals from propaganda. Inspired by anti-Semitic newspapers, their poisoned minds are inflamed against everything which does not fit into their program of 'Rumania for the Rumanians.'

"Their policy is to force the Government to consideration of their propaganda by threats made at public meetings and by street demonstrations. These manifestations, which in many instances end in riots, generally are followed by marches through the streets of the Jewish quarters, where the rioters break windows, sack stores, enter and demolish homes of the poor, and frighten even the authorities.

"One of the chief means employed by the student class to attract the sympathy of the mob is the cry that millions of Rumanians are held in subjection in Transylvania. They claim it is the duty of every true Rumanian to help deliver their ensiaved brothers from the 'Hungarian yoke.'

"This cry, however, is far from the truth. The Rumanians living in Transylvania are endowed with full civil and political rights and have their representatives in the Diet. They are not known to have appealed for aid officially to their brethren across the border. They constitute the peasant class and occupy rich and fertile fields and valleys in Hungary."

Regarding the assertion by the student class that Transylvania belongs historically to Rumania and that the Government should join the enemies of Germany for the purpose of capturing this territory, Mr. Sufrin said:

"The students have succeeded so far in arousing a strong public feeling for their demand, so much so that the Government is compelled to take notice of the situation. On the other hand, the Rumanian Government is confronted with the stronger objections of the people's class. The people hate Russia; first, because of the tyrannical policy of Russia's form of government; and secondly, because of its audacity in taking unto itself the territory of Bessarabia, one of the richest provinces, formerly a part of Rumania.

"The people recall this historic treachery, and they are now praying to see Russia beaten. They have served notice on their Government that joining the Allies means aid for Russia, and this they are no ready to give.

"At this moment the Government finds itself in the predicament of trying to satisfy both parties. All of its energies are directed toward prevention of internal strife. It must remain, therefore, neutral, if for no other reason than that of self-preservation.

"Those at the head of the Government know that if Germany wins, with Rumania having remained neutral and Russia having been crushed, Rumania will receive as a price for her neutrality the long-lost province of Bessarabia. On the other hand, if the Allies win, Rumania will be effaced by Russia as an important factor in the Balkan peninsula. She is, therefore, better off by remaining neutral and maintaining the balance of power among the Balkan States. For these reasons it can be reasonably expected that Rumania will keep out of the war, for in so doing she has nothing to lose, but everything to gain."

LEELANAW SURVIVORS HERE

Captain and Seamen of Torpedoed American Ship Arrive.

Captain Eugene Delk of the American steamship Leelanaw, which was torpedoed on July 25 by a German submarine sixty miles north of the Orkneys, arrived here yesterday from Liverpool with twenty-six men of his crew on the liner St. Paul.

Captain Delk said he had nothing to add to his detailed report given to United States Consul Dennison at Dundee, Scotland, which had been cabled to New York. He was met at the pier by his wife and proceeded to his home in Philadelphia.

After the arrival of the St. Paul some men of the crew of the Leelanaw complained of the delay in their being taken from Dundee to Liverpool and of their being sent over in the steerage instead of the cabin. Two of the owners of the Leelanaw, Landgon Harriss and Robert Harriss, were passengers on the St. Paul, and they transferred eight officers and engineers to the second class. Captain Delk traveled in the first cabin with the owners.

In his statement, filed with Consul Dennison, the Captain stated that he tried to escape after the submarine commander hailed him, and then his vessel was fired upon and he stopped. When the German commander discovered that the Leelanaw had 1,000 tons of Russian flax on board for Belfast he ordered Captain Delk and his crew to leave the ship and took them on the submarine. After being shelled and torpedoed for an hour and a half, the Leelanaw finally sank. The crew went about sixty miles on the submarine and then had to take to their lifeboats. After pulling for twelve hours they reached Aberdeen, Scotland, tired, wet, cold and hungry.

BIG ARRAS BATTLE AS GERMANS SAW IT

General Staff's Account of Allied Campaign That Included La Bassee Attack.

TROOPS ON THEIR METTLE

And Up to May 9, When the Account Was Written, They Had Held Their Own Against Attacks.

BERLIN, July 17.—The following official version of the battle of La Bassée and Arras last May is issued by the Great General Staff:

"While the allied armies in Galicia were hurrying from victory to victory, the army of the Crown Prince of Bavaria had to undergo a fight no less hot, bloody or glorious, though there was here no storming afiead through the ranks of the enemy, no pursuit to the last breath of man and horse of the fleeing hosts. It was necessary to hold down the (for the German soldier) probably hardest job; to ward off in a defensive position the storm of a numerically far superior enemy armed with an immense amount of heavy artillery and inexhaustible ammunition.

"For the enemy had planned great things. Not merely to divert our strength from the ally who was bleeding to death in Galicia. The gathering together of such strong forces, the presence of the French Commander in Chief, the titanic efforts and the stubbornness of the attacker indicate it; the captured orders prove it. General Joffre considered the psychological moment had come to break through the German front, to free the lost provinces and Belgium, and carry the war to the Rhine. The need of the eastern ally, the collapse of his armies in Galicia, made it imperative that the opportunity now be made the most of, as Germany had apparently transferred strong forces to the East. If the decisive operation this time did not succeed, there was the danger that Russia's offensive strength would be crushed, the strength of the Germans in the Western theatre of war increased.

"For this great purpose it was necessary to draw together the utmost possible strength, to employ not only French, therefore, but also English troops. It followed as a matter of course, therefore, that the theatre for the attempted breaking through would be in the region where the two allied armies touched.

Germans' Unfavorable Position.

"Here, too, the tactical situation did not appear unfavorable for the attempt. The German troops did not find themselves in positions carefully chosen for the defensive, but in general held the lines that had grown out of their offensive, which, therefore, did not lack a number of weak points.

"In the almost level plain of Flanders, between the region of Armentières and La Bassée, the English had, to be sure, no marked advantage in position; nevertheless, there were, especially in the region east of Festubert and around La Basse, many projecting points of our lines where a surrounding operation was easy for the enemy. The attack here is favored by the wood-studded terrain, while the high grass conceals the crawling infantryman from the defender. The artillery lacks natural observation posts. Only back of our line, from Radingham over Aubers-Fromelles, runs a slight rise of ground (Aubers-Violaines).

"A different picture is presented by the region of Artois lying to the South. Here a long and steep range of hills, running almost parallel to our lines, forms the southern boundary of the plains. From afar off one can see the sharply marked eastern edge of the Bois de Bouvigny, whose pit gleamed also earlier, as last Fall our squadrons of horsemen first came here, the much-visited pilgrimage resort, Nôtre Dame de Lorette.

Importance of Lorette Heights.

"It lay on the outermost eastern edge of the small adjoining plateau that rises sharply toward the west, and was completely destroyed in the course of the Autumn's hard fighting. Here the Germans had gained a footing in October. Step by step in the course of hard fighting they had succeeded during the Winter months in advancing a few hundred yards. But all the while the entire Bois de Bouvigny remained in possession of the French. So it happened that our Badeners clung to only a very small portion of this hill, which was inclosed on two sides, since our position running from La Bassée over Loos and Angres from there sprang forward in a sharp point over the Lorette Heights to the two low-lying villages of Ablain and Carency, separated by the low Hill 125. From these two villages, whose outskirts were still in the hands of the French, the German line drew back sharply toward the southwest and ran toward the easterly suburb of Arras, St. Laurent. It ran here over La Targette, close to the east of Neuville, and in general along the valley between two heights. The westerly height, on which the huge, shot-to-pieces towers of Mont St. Eloy form a landmark for the whole surrounding county, afforded the French splendid artillery positions, while they had good supporting points in the villages of Ecurie and Roclincourt. The easterly range of hills rises from the village of Souchez, lying low in the valley of the Carency Brook, to Height 140, and sinks again over La Folie, between Thelus and Beilleul, against the Scarpe. The possession of these heights that on the west bound the wide plans about Douai and afford an army advancing from that place the first favorable position, was in October of the greatest importance for us. Their loss would have hit us hard. Therefore an attack on the projecting angle at the Lorette Heights and the adjoining positions afforded good prospects for the French.

"The first days of the month of May favored the French. The weather greatly limited aerial reconnoissance and prevented us from determining exactly to what points the enemy was bringing up great masses of troops by rail, although it was noted, and there were other indications of the movement. In many other ways the French likewise very cleverly masked their troop movements. No patrols were allowed to leave their trenches. Up to now from the boundary of the English Army south of La Bassée to Arras there had been opposed to the Germans three and one-quarter French Army Corps, (58 I. D.; 92 I. D.; XXI A. C. XXXIII. A. C. 14 X A. C.) On May 8 letters found on a fallen Frenchman indicated for the first time the presence of the Seventeenth Corps.

"On the other hand, since May 1 very heavy artillery fire had been directed, principally against the region from the Lorette Heights southward toward a point opposite Roclincourt.

"On May 6 one army corps estimated that the enemy's artillery had fired 13,500 shots against its foremost lines; on the eighth the number increased to 17,000 shots. To these were added heavy mines catapulted through the air, not less than 1,800 of these being counted on the eighth. Our trenches and wire entanglements suffered severely, despite their self-sacrifice our people had no chance to repair them again. To the south of Carency the enemy worked himself closer by sapping operations.

"At first an attack occurred only in the neighborhood of Lievin, where French Chasseurs, after strong artillery fire, succeeded in getting into a small piece of our trenches. In the course of the night the Badeners threw them out again, collecting 100 prisoners.

"Then broke the brilliantly beautiful, sultry Sunday of May 9. Carefully planned, but without effect, the enemy's flyers woke up several higher commands and the personnel of all important railroad stations by dropping bombs. The intention to cause confusion in the giving of orders and thus prevent bringing up reinforcements failed.

Battle of May 9 Opened.

"A very heavy fire was directed against our positions north of Arras from 4 o'clock in the morning on. Also on all artillery observation posts and the lines of communication at the front fell a heavy hail of shells. Pretty soon the telephone wires to the front trenches were put out of business; messengers afoot came back very slowly—and very few of them. That the enemy was clearing away his wire entanglements was one of the things they reported. From the heights of La Folie one could see how our trenches were shrouded in dense smoke. One hostile shell after the other dropped into the black cloud that soon towered house-high. Hurled mines threw earth and fragments of white chalk stone even higher into the air.

"At 8 A. M. the fire suddenly stopped. Quickly the remnants of the trench crews, who had suffered heavily—Landwehr from the lower Rhine, Bavarian heavy cavalry and infantry—rushed to the breastworks ready to meet the oncoming enemy. The commanders who happen to be forward immediately send orders to advance to the reserves lying in the second line. Our artillery directs strong fire against the French trenches. But instead of the expected attack there follows a new, more violent cannonade from the French artillery. Again smoke covers the field of vision. Then, at about 9 o'clock, the artillery men at La Folie by chance see through a rift in the smoke between Carency and a small wood to the south a long dark line advancing. They also note how between Carency and La Targette several mines go into the air. The French are attacking! Under cover of the smoke they press on in dense masses.

"In the region immediately north of the Scarpe they encounter our fire. Heaps of dead and wounded of the French Nineteenth Division and the Seventeenth Army Corps lie before the wire entanglements. A single one of our regiments counted 1,600 bodies lying before its front. Opposite Roclincourt a small number of the enemy succeeded in forcing their way into our trenches. Bavarian bayonets threw them out again. But between La Targette and Carency their attack is too fierce. With overpowering numbers the French Twentieth and Thirty-third Corps and the Moroccan Division overrun the weak forces holding the ruined trenches. Desperately the few survivors defend themselves. Seriously wounded, the Commander of the Landwehr Regiment, who personally led the reserves, falls into the hands of the enemy.

"Our second line is exposed. Against the advanced guns north of Neuville and south of Souchez the attack breaks for a time till the last artillerymen sinks to the ground. Then the storm sweeps on. The French press on over the height of La Folette. The artillery observation posts at La Folie are in their hands; they are approaching the eastern slope of the range of hills. To the north, also, they gain ground. From the heights they charge down on the village of Souchez. The Commander of a Jäger battalion for a time here holds the southern entrance with ten men. To the west, Zouaves and Foreign Legionaries press on over the Carency brook, take Moulin Malon, threaten the Lorette heights from the south, and from the east envelop the village of Carency, which the Tenth Division is attacking from the south and west.

"About noon it looks almost as if the French attempt to break through had succeeded here. On a front of four kilometers and to a depth of three kilometers the country between the villages of Neuville, Carency and Souchez is in their hands. To the south of Neuville also, the enemy has penetrated the tangle of trenches which his official report calls 'the labyrinth.' He has advanced to the street that runs from Ecurie northward.

Germans Make an Effective Stand.

"But now our troops show their mettle. North of Ecurie the sons of the Algau, attacked from south and west, make front also toward the north, and in fierce hand-to-hand fighting ward off the advance against the rear of the regiment. No man thinks of giving up the position. In Neuville the defenders throw themselves into the houses and hold the eastern half of the village. In a garden stands a gun whose crew has fallen. A Bavarian Lieutenant and two pioneers fire with it at close range against the enemy. On the way from Neuville to La Folette a thin line of sharpshooters forms and outflanks the enemy who has pressed in from the south. From the north a Baiden battery and a Bavarian howitzer battery, firing at 600 yards, acquit themselves creditably at a similar task till weak reinforcements begin to arrive in the village—at first a single platoon of diggers, to aid the handful of defenders. Only at Ablain the Badeners prevent the enemy from advancing toward the north.

"The reserves of the region throw themselves against the front of the assaulting troops on the heights west of Givenchy and Vimy. Every man knows what is up. The commanding General can clearly see from his position at La Goulotte that French infantry is appearing on these heights. Everybody who has arms joins the companies. Men belonging to the wagon trains, grooms, everybody available, charges up the eastern slopes.

"And they succeed. On Hills 119 and 140 and at the edges of the woods to the south our artillery and infantry bring the advancing enemy to an abrupt halt after his advance guard has been mowed down. One o'clock comes and the first crisis has been passed. Till evening there is no change in the situation.

"Meanwhile the battle rages on other points of the front. Since morning violent artillery fire had been directed against the front to the north, with the Lorette Heights, plowed by countless shells and mines, its principal object. Then followed here the attack. Picked chasseur battalions of the Twenty-first Corps lead the charge. They get into the trenches. Despite their bravest defense, the Badeners are forced to abandon their first line, with the exception of one company that holds, though completely surrounded. Further north, too, in the neighborhood of Loos, an attack penetrated our lines. Here, too, a new French army corps, the Ninth, was identified.

"Nowhere on this part of the battlefield did the enemy get any further than through our first line. Their success was, therefore, far short of the object they had set out to attain.

English Attack After French.

"The English attack followed close upon that of the French. From 9 in the morning they had violently pounded away at our trenches, particularly to the west of the highway from La Bassée to Estaires and north of Fromelles. The high water in this region made their work easier, for as a result the breastworks of the trenches had to be made of sandbags on firm, high ground. No wonder, then, that everything was soon caved in. At 6:30 A. M. two mines were exploded in the breastworks of the Bavarians to the north of Fromelles. At this point and two others in the neighborhood strong English skirmish lines broke in, overran the few surviving defenders, and threw themselves into trenches and farm houses lying back of our front. Wave on wave followed and attempted to spread out through the small breach into the adjoining trenches. But the neighboring companies had blocked up the ends of the trenches, and our artillery fire prevented the English from shoving stronger forces ahead.

"In truly model fashion our Bavarian troops worked together to wipe out this initial success of the enemy. About noon all danger had passed; by evening the whole lost ground had been won back again. At one place the first line had repulsed an attack from both sides, and with hand grenades and bayonets squeezed out the enemy, who had broken in; at the other two points the arrival of reserves achieved the same object. The attempt to escape their fate and flee back to their own trenches cost the English countless dead.

"Meanwhile, fierce hand-to-hand fights took place back of our front with the English who had broken through, and who defended themselves with desperation. They clung to every old water hole, every heap of ruins, every old trench. In many cases the Bavarians had to have recourse to their native weapon (the knife) to break the English resistance. The severity of the fighting is evidenced by the fact that only 140 prisoners, with seven machine guns, fell into our hands, while 1,500 English bodies, found back of our front alone, were buried by us. We counted not less than 143 dead English officers—a number only a trifle less than that of our total losses here. In brilliant fashion had one Bavarian division beaten back the attack of the reinforced Fourth English Army Corps, three times as strong.

"At a different hour the commanding General of the First English Army Corps, which had been reinforced by an Indian division, launched his attack against the Bois du Biez-La Quinque line. After the infantry had been weakly 'feeling around' in the morning, the artillery fire rose to great violence from 4:30 P. M. on. At 5:15 the attack broke loose.

"A wave of 'colored Englishmen' and then one of white men rushed out of the 'collection trenches,' which had been very cunningly laid out for assembling large masses. Again a row of 'colored Englishmen,' then again white Englishmen, followed. The bravest charge right up to our wire entanglements. But stronger than the will of our enemies is the fire of our Westphalians. Not an enemy gets into our trenches. Masses of Englishmen of various races cover the field.

Allied Failure Up to May 9.

"Thus, despite most minute advance preparations, exact knowledge of the numerical weakness of our troops holding our lines, great superiority in numbers, a colossal expenditure of ammunition, and ruthless use of good troops, the leader of the First English Army was unable to score even a small success anywhere. What he had in mind was not merely a demonstration for the benefit of his allies. His own army orders tells us what he was after:

The planned operations aim at a decisive victory, not a local success. The object of the First Army is to break through the enemy's lines in order to get possession of the street from La Bassée to Fournes, and then advance on Don.

But the successes of the French lagged far behind what the commanding General of the Thirty-third Army Corps had advertised to his troops.

After a nine months' campaign it is time to make a final effort to break through the enemy's lines and, as at first, to chase the Germans from French soil.

The moment is favorable. Never was the army stronger, nor fired with greater courage.

The enemy appears to have only a few divisions before our front; our forces are four times as strong as his. We have the strongest artillery that was ever employed on a battlefield.

Today it is not a matter of a mere local success or the taking of a few trenches. Our business is to attack the enemy with the utmost fierceness, beat him, pursue him relentlessly, regardless of hardships, hunger, thirst and suffering.

"That was what the enemy wanted; for that purpose Joffre had intrusted one of his best subordinates, General Foch, with the command of the attack; for that purpose he had united all of France's disposable strength.

"On May 9 it was apparent that they could not defeat the weak German forces on hand. The great assault was over, although the battle was not yet ended."

Story That Our Cottonseed Goes via Copenhagen to Germany Repudiated

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—The Daily Telegraph prints a dispatch from Copenhagen this morning, which says:

"An article in the Politiken, the official organ of the Danish Government, indignantly repudiates a telegram in a London paper, stating that two-thirds of the enormous export of cottonseed and cotton seed products from America have passed through Copenhagen to Germany.

"The Politiken adds:

"'Figures that give more than one billion English pounds are absolutely fantastic and it is evident that no such imports into Denmark have taken place.

"'Statements of this kind uttered against us without any foundation do us considerable harm, though surely this is not the intention. The statement made in the paper is now sent out to all parts of the world. It is published first all over England, arousing or keeping alive certain suspicions against a small neutral country which undertakes such fabulous transactions.

"'From there it goes to France, where the people understand far less than in England the conditions existing in the northern countries. The result is a feeling of resentment and of ill-will which has no foundation in fact.'"

GERMANS QUOTE SHAW.

Use on Poster Alleged Admission of Anglo-Belgian "Plot."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Aug. 9.—According to The Daily Mail, the series of posters which the German officials put up in Belgium to give the people "reliable news of the war," has been increased by this notice, printed in parallel columns of German, French and Flemish:

"ENGLAND AND THE WAR

"Important revelation of the famous English author, Bernard Shaw."

Then follows an account of the interview with Shaw which ex-Senator Beveridge published in Collier's Weekly, according to which Shaw acknowledged a long-standing "plot" between Sir Edward Grey and the French and Belgian Governments for common war on Germany.

The poster quotes the Shaw "revelation" as confirmation of "the incriminating documents" discovered by Germans at the Belgian Foreign Office.

SOCIALISTS DEMAND GERMANY END WAR

Manifesto Received Here Condemns Hostilities as Now Waged for Conquest.

WARNING IN LESSON OF 1870

United Action of Social Democrats for Peace Then Is Cited as Precedent for Today.

A manifesto signed by three of the leading German Social Democrats, which indicated that at least a faction of the great German party was on the verge of an open breach with the Government over the question of continuing the war, was received yesterday by national labor leaders here. It was forwarded from London by leaders of the Independent Labor Party of Great Britain.

The German Socialists' manifesto, which is signed by Bernstein, Haase, and Kautsky, condemns a continuation of the war policy on the ground that the German campaign has become plainly a "war of conquest," instead of a fight to retain national integrity. The signers call for united action to bring about peace. The Prussian censor refused to allow the publication of the manifesto in the Socialists' central organ, the Vorwärts, according to the British Labor Party leaders, and so it was printed in a smaller Socialist organ and brought about the suspension of the paper's publication.

Following the publication of the manifesto, according to the English labor men, an open letter signed by many prominent German Socialists was sent to as many Socialists as possible, urging them to unite in demanding peace.

The manifesto, which has caused widespread comment and some alarm in Germany, first summarized the demands made by the German imperialists for annexation of French, Russian, and Belgian territory, and continued:

"German Social Democracy is compelled to ask itself if the principles and duties imposed upon it by the fact that it is the guardian of the material and moral interests of the working class will permit it, so far as the continuation of the war is concerned, to remain any longer by the sides of those whose intentions are found to be in most violent contradiction with the declaration made by our section in the Reichstag on Aug. 4, 1914, which stated that we condemned all war for conquest.

"This declaration will become a falsehood if German Social Democracy, in view of the declarations coming from the reigning spheres, contents itself with expressing academic desires in favor of peace.

"We know only too well that no one pays the least regard to such manifestations. What some among us most feared is becoming more and more clear—German Social Democracy was allowed to vote the war credits, but was coldly disregarded when it concerned itself with decisions that would be of most serious consequence for the future of our people.

"Immense are the sacrifices which this war has already imposed on the people who find themselves entangled in it, and every day they increase. The history of the world does not know a war which has even approached the present carnage. The cruelty of barbaric times is combined with the most refined products of civilization to wipe out the flower of the population. The sacrifices in wealth which the war will demand of the people will be enormous.

"The desire for peace is showing itself strongly among our people, and among those of the countries with which Germany is at war. While the ruling classes recoil dismayed before the realization of these wishes, dissatisfaction upon the part of men turn their eyes toward Social Democracy, in which they have been accustomed to see the party of peace, expecting from it the helpful word and the clear attitude.

"Intentions of conquest having now been disclosed to the whole world, Social Democracy reserves the liberty to use its most energetic means from the viewpoint of principle, and the present situation makes of this liberty a duty. The proletariat waits, certain that, as in a simpler situation when all the Social Democrats, notwithstanding their divergencies at the beginning of the war, recovered themselves for common action, the Social Democracy will this time show the same unanimity. We know the conditions proposed from one belligerent camp to the other cannot bring about a universal peace, but only increase armaments, with the chance of another war. A true and durable peace is possible only upon the basis of a free understanding. It is impossible for the Social Democracy of any country to create this basis, but each party can, according to its situation and power, contribute to its creation.

"The present disposition of events demands from German Social Democracy that it take a decisive step toward this end. It will find itself today before this choice: Either to fulfull its duty, or to strike a mortal blow at the confidence the German people and the people of the world have reposed in it."

A reply to the manifesto, signed by several other Socialists, was printed in the Vorwärts despite the fact that the Vorwärts had not been permitted to print the manifesto, and in the reply the signers expressed sympathy with the opposition to war for conquest, but said that action at the present time among the Socialists could not "but endanger the unity of the party." The manifesto caused much editorial comment in the newspapers, a number of them expressing their approval of its contents and a few denouncing the document and its authors.

Such prominent Socialists as Liebknecht, Adolph Hoffman, Hofer and Stroebel were among the signers of the "open letter" which was sent out after the manifesto had appeared in print.

3 LUSITANIA BODIES ARRIVE.

Those of Lindon Bates, Jr., H. S. Stone, and H. Kaiser on St. Paul.

The bodies of three Lusitania victims arrived yesterday on the American liner St. Paul from Liverpool, having been washed ashore at various points along the southwest coast of Ireland. That of Lindon Bates, Jr., drifted 230 miles from May 7, the date of the Lusitania disaster, to Eddy Island, Galway Bay, where it was recovered ten days ago. The two other bodies were those of Herbert S. Stone and Harry Kaiser.

The coffins were packed in big cases and placed together on the 'tween decks in the after hold which had been set apart for that purpose. When the St. Paul reached her pier at 6 o'clock the bodies were landed on the lower part of the pier and conveyed in hearses to the respective undertakers who have charge of the funeral arrangements.

ORGANIZE JEWISH RELIEF.

110 Societies Represented at Conference on War Charity.

In the Educational Alliance in East Broadway yesterday afternoon 110 Jewish organizations of this city were represented at a conference to devise plans of relief for Jews in the war zones. Congressman Meyer London presided, and a committee of nine was named that spent a good part of last night selecting a working committee of 100 Jews. It was stipulated that this large committee be composed of men who would bestir themselves, and that they come from all of the districts.

It was the sense of the conference yesterday that, although all gifts will be welcomed, regular subscriptions are desired especially, so that given sums of money may be remitted monthly or quarterly. To that end working committees were named to see Jews high and low in station. Storekeepers are to display cards in windows, both asking contributions and showing that merchants themselves have given. Buttons to be made and sold will show the wearers have contributed.

INSISTS ON BIRTH REPORTS.

Physicians Who Fail to Obey Law Will Be Prosecuted.

Dr. Hermann M. Biggs, State Commissioner of Health, announced yesterday that he had instructed District Attorneys throughout the State to enforce rigid compliance with the law requiring physicians and midwives to report the births of babies within five days after births occur. To expedite the prosecution of offending physicians the Commissioner has sent to each District Attorney a list of those physicians in his jurisdiction who are known to have been habitually negligent in this regard.

Upon conviction, a physician or any one else who violates the law on vital statistics "shall, for the first offense, be fined not less than $5 nor more than $50, and for each subsequent offense not less than $10 nor more than $100, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than sixty days, or both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court."

The Health Commissioner's campaign is based on Section 382 of the public health law, which provides that:

The birth of each and every child born in this State shall be registered within five days after the date of each birth, and there shall be filed with the Registrar of the district in which the birth occurred a certificate of such birth, which certificate shall be upon the form prescribed therefor by the State Commissioner of Health.

Section 393 of the same law requires local Registrars to report all violations to the State Commissioner of Health, who is required to investigate such violations.

FORD MAKING 15,000 AUTOS FOR BRITISH

But Detroit Manufacturer Says He Does Not Want "Any Big War Contracts."

HIS BRITISH MANAGER HERE

Manchester Plant Pays 50 Per Cent. Higher Wages Than Other English Auto Factory.

Henry Ford, the automobile manufacturer of Detroit, went to the American Line pier, foot of West Twenty-second Street, yesterday afternoon to meet P. L. D. Perry, the managing director of the English branch of the Ford Company, who arrived on the St. Paul for his annual business visit to Detroit. Mr. Ford was accompanied by his son, Edsil B. Ford, Frank Klingersmith, the director of the factory, and Frank Mayo, chief engineer of the plant.

"You see," the automobile manufacturer said, "we are just like one big family and always come down from Detroit to meet Perry, so that he does not feel that he is a stranger in a strange land.

"With regard to the rumors of the large war contracts that Mr. Perry was bringing over from the British Government Mr. Ford said:

"There is no truth in those reports. We could not accept a 'big contract' from any one because to carry it out others would have to go short of their supply, and that would not be fair play. If I had 100,000 cars ready finished today I could sell them all tomorrow without any difficulty.

"Altogether we are making about 15,000 cars for the British Government for use as motor ambulances. The war has not affected our business in any way and we do not expect a boom after peace is declared because our factories are running at full pressure all the year round. The reason for shutting down a part of the plant for two weeks was to enlarge it. As there were several hundred applications for vacations I said that the best way would be for all to take a vacation and get it over, which was done.

Mr. Perry said that the Ford factory at Manchester, England, employed 1,600 hands and paid 50 per cent. higher wages, grade for grade, than any other automobile concern over there.

"Up to Aug. 1 this year," he continued, "we had sold 12,500 cars and had 8,500 on order, which included 600 ambulances that were sold to the Government. The engines and axles are made at Detroit and the other parts, including the bodies, are made at Manchester.

"The British Government sends 100 soldiers from the Army Transport Service to the Ford works for two weeks at a time to learn how to repair machines in the field and how to put them together. Ours was the only automobile concern in England that had a contract from the Government for cars and delivered them on time. The $490 car sold in America costs $575 in England, the extra charge being made to cover the cost of packing, insurance, and transportation."

Mr. Perry will stay two or three days in New York with Mr. Ford and his son at the Hotel Biltmore and then go to Detroit, returning to England in two weeks.

PRIEST SCORNS $12,000,000.

Fears Burden of Wealth and Renounces Great Legacies.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 8.—The Rev. William Graham of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church has refused to accept legacies left him by relatives in Sydney, Australia, and Bolivia, South America, exceeding $12,000,000. The priest, who is 60 years old, says that he is too old to be burdened with such wealth, and that he has enough of this world's goods, anyway.

"It may seem strange," Father Graham said today, "that I should do this, but I will sleep better when I know the solicitors have taken my refusal seriously and finally, and cease to consider me in the distribution of the wealth. I have long known that uncles of mine named Murphy and Hughes lived in Australia, and that they were possessed of vast landed estates, and immense herds of cattle, sheep, and horses, and that I was the nearest kin; also that I had several stepuncles named Graham in Bolivia who were said to be immensely wealthy and childless. But I never knew any of them personally, and, in fact, never communicated with them in any manner. Why then, even were I disposed to pile up this world's goods, should I accept any of the inheritance they have left?"

WILSON MOTORS AND WORKS.

Considers Cabinet Communications After a Trip to Rutland.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 8.—Important communications from Secretary Garrison, Attorney General Gregory, and Secretary Lansing occupied President Wilson's attention for several hours today. In the afternoon, accompanied by members of his family, he went on an automobile trip to Rutland, Vt., over the Green Mountains, a distance of 125 miles.

The President retired to his study immediately after dinner tonight and again took up consideration of matters presented by the members of his Cabinet.

Although no comment was forthcoming as to the contents of the reports from Secretary Garrison, it was understood that they dealt with the subject of national defense. Mr. Wilson has been in touch with his advisers constantly on this subject, but his inability to communicate with the desired facility from here may form the chief reason for shortening his stay in the Cornish hills.

The reports sent by Secretary Lansing to the President relate, it is said, to the conference with the Pan-American representatives on the Mexican situation.

What better argument can we use to nail this splendid opportunity to the mast? The reductions run from $4.50 to $10 a suit. The materials include a wide range of wanted weights and colors. WOMAN GIVES CLUE TO MISSING KINDRED Contractors' Clerk Who Carried Off $22,119 Told Her of Inheritance.

POLICE WORK ON STORY

Miss O'Neill of Long Island City Only Slightly Acquainted with Missing Man, Relatives Say.

A woman, formerly an intimate friend of Edward C. Kindred, the absconding clerk of the Booth & Flinn Corporation, was found yesterday by detectives and a statement obtained from her may aid in revealing something of his past. The police and the Pinkerton Detective Agency are now working on the first definite information concerning Kindred that has been obtained since he disappeared with more than $22,000 in his own touring car last Wednesday morning from the Liberty National Bank at 139 Broadway.

The woman stipulated that her name was not to be mentioned in the case because she has married and does not wish her husband to be annoyed by the notoriety.

"My husband has never heard of Kindred," she said. "I first met Kindred about five years ago. He was attentive to me for a long time, and during various conversations about himself he mentioned several places he had lived—Chicago and Kansas City among them—but never was positive in any of his talks as to what place he called his home before coming here. Eighteen months ago I married, and I have not seen Kindred since. In fact, I had not seen him for several months previous to my marriage."

Told Woman of Inheritance.

The police say Kindred made his first mention of receiving an inheritance to her, and later told his employers only because he wished to explain why he could afford to purchase a large touring car on a salary of $150 a month. The woman said:

"'Fortune is a strange thing,' Kindred said to me. 'Think of it, the freaks of poverty I have endured! I have half starved at times, and was so hard up that I had to work my way, practically, from Kansas City and Chicago to get East, and now, when I have money enough for my needs from my salary, I get an unexpected inheritance.'

If Kindred's story of the receipt of an inheritance were true, as the woman states, this would account for the unusually large deposits he began to place in the Bank of Washington Heights about that time, the source of which the police had not been able to discover. More details of the woman's story are being withheld by the police for verification. They believe that certain facts she has given them will be of aid in their search for Kindred.

At about this time, or shortly prior to this, Kindred, the police say, lived at 519 West 134th Street. Apparently with an improvement in his financial affairs he went to the apartment at 580 West 163d Street, where he installed an automatic playing piano, and subsequently bought two automobiles. With these exceptions he was frugal with his money in entertaining, and continued to live modestly, usually cooking his own dinners.

Miss O'Neill An Acquaintance.

Kindred had given the impression to his employers and to some of his fellow workers that he never cared for the society of women. The policy have changed their theory that he was a woman hater, although it is known that he had few intimate friends among either men or women. An acquaintance of Kindred said yesterday that the manicurist, who sometimes called on him in business hours and occasionally was his guest in the big touring car, was a Miss Sullivan. At one time she was said to have been employed in a shop in West 125th Street, or in a place on Eighth Avenue, in Harlem.

Another young woman mentioned as a friend of Kindred, Miss Lulu O'Neill, 23 years old, daughter of Herbert O'Neill, proprietor of a restaurant at 201 Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, made a statement yesterday through her mother and two sisters denying that she had ever received a present of jewelry from him. Miss Kathryn O'Neill, in behalf of her sister, who was said to be absent from home on a week-end trip, said:

"It is untrue that my sister saw Kindred the night before he disappeared. She certainly did not see him that night, nor for a long time previous. They were only casual acquaintances. I do not think Kindred ever came here or called on my sister more than two or three times. He seemed anxious to force his attentions on her, but she did not care for him in the least.

No Presents from Kindred.

"It is absolutely false that my sister received two rings from Kindred, one said to be valued at $400 and the other at $80, and a bracelet."

Patrick J. Leahy, former Commissioner of Highways in Queens, who is a friend of the father of Miss O'Neill, issued a signed statement yesterday asserting that the young woman had only a slight acquaintance with Kindred, and had never accepted a present of any value from him. Captain William Deevy of the First Branch Detective Bureau corroborated these several statements, and said Miss O'Neill had not seen Kindred for at least eight months previous to his flight.

Wesley Ripperger of 207 Academy Street, Long Island City, who was employed in the office of the Flinn & Booth Corporation at 17 Battery Place, and is now a law student, said he had introduced Kindred to Miss O'Neill in September or October. He said the only foundation for the story of presents to her were rumors among the employes at the office.

"Kindred, who proposed a trip out on Long Island, suggested that I invite some company to go along in the car," said Ripperger. "I introduced him to Miss O'Neill when he met us with the car at the Queensboro Bridge Plaza. A young woman friend of mine and Miss O'Neill were the two women members of the party."

REFORMERS DEFEND WORK OF OSBORNE

Declare Sing Sing Experiment Should Not Yet Be Halted or Judged.

POINT TO GOOD RESULTS

Nation-Wide Interest in New Application of Methods Found Good in Schools.

A statement was issued last night by Henry de Forest Baldwin, George Gordon Battle, Walston Hill Brown, William Hamlin Childs, John Collier, John Dewey, James C. Egbert, Robert Erskine Ely, Jerome D. Greene, Frederick A. Goetze, Adolph Lewisohn, Samuel McCune Lindsay, Ben Lindsey, Collis Lovely, John J. Manning, Joseph M. Price, Edward J. Wheeler, E. Stagg Whitin, and Oswald Villard concerning Sing Sing Prison and its management by Thomas Mott Osborne. The statement follows:

"At the present crisis in the affairs in Sing Sing Prison it seems worth while to point out the larger impersonal issues which give to this controversy nation-wide interest.

"Society has adopted an elaborate system of police, courts, and correctional and penal institutions, designed to secure protection against lawless elements. This system in each year turning out many thousands of men who return to the free life of the community. This whole system is effective in the protection of society only in that measure that the graduates of the system return to the free life with an incentive, determination, an opportunity to become useful citizens.

"The work of Warden Thomas Mott Osborne in Sing Sing is no isolated experiment and no one-man product. It is wholly in line with the most advanced authoritative educational practice. At the same time Frederick Hoffman, former President of the American Statistical Association, has pointed out that the unique contribution of recent years in prison reform is that accurate knowledge of the workings of the mind of the man behind the bars which has been secured through the personal relationships established with prisoners by Warden Osborne.

"We know and we have long known that the result of the prevailing prison system is to break the health and spirits of prisoners and to destroy irretrievably their decent relationships with their fellow men. Even more—prisoners who have been subjected to the traditional methods often go back to freedom with a positive enmity toward the community. This failure of the old system is admitted. It should make welcome any honest attempt to find something better.

"But the importance of the present experiment in Sing Sing is not a matter of general presumption. The work has progressed for eight months in Sing Sing, and was begun in Auburn eighteen months ago. At the end of this reasonably long period there is much positive evidence of success, and there are no charges of failure which would really discount the experiment even if they were proved.

"The change, both physical and mental, in the prison population is marked by every visitor and most marked by those who thoroughly knew the conditions which prevailed in Sing Sing before Jan. 1.

"The number of escapes is actually less than the average for a similar period during the last ten years, and the attitude of the mass of the prisoners toward escape has been absolutely reversed.

"The output of work has positively increased, although as yet the prison management is not able to offer any of those incentives which normal men are accustomed to in their work of every day.

"Insanity has fallen off about 30 per cent.

"These facts are mere surface indications of a change in the methods of discipline and in the attitude of the men toward the prison and toward the society which holds them prisoners. The undertaking in self-government has made radically for improved discipline in every particular, from the smuggling of drugs to assault and battery by prisoner upon prisoner.

"While the descriptions of the results in Sing Sing have been more or less picturesque, it is literally true that Warden Osborne is merely carrying into effect, with remarkable patience, courage, and insight into human nature, the measures which are regarded as obvious in long established institutions, such as the School Community Centre and School City, the George Junior Republic, the Organic School, and in fact the schools of Gary, Indiana. Through carrying over these accepted principles of education into the field of prison reform, Warden Osborne is performing a momentous service to prison reform in America and throughout the world.

"Obviously the Sing Sing experiment is not complete, and cannot have been perfect. There have been failures in detail. The dominant ideal of the new experiment has been reversed in some minor particulars. Second and third term prisoners, life prisoners, habitues of drugs, could not have been expected to thoroughly adjust themselves to so radical a change of discipline and of life, except gradually and with occasional individual relapses. But it is wrong and absurd to judge a momentous experiment, so fraught with importance to society, solely in terms of minor failures alleged or real."

EXPERT SWIMMER DROWNS.

Warren Ash of Newport Seized with Cramps While in the Surf.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 8.—Warren Ash, 25 years old, a chauffeur for the Lubin Motion Picture Company, was drowned here this afternoon while surf bathing with George W. Terwilliger, Mrs. Terwilliger, Miss Omi Hawley, and J. Allen Boone.

Ash, who was an expert swimmer, was seized with a cramp, and called for help. Mrs. Terwilliger, who was near him, tried to aid him but failed, and came near drowning herself. She was rescued by Mr. Boone.

Ash's body was recovered and taken to the home of his parents here.

THREE YOUTHS DROWNED.

One Young Man Breaks His Back Diving in Pool.

Three drownings and a possible fatal injury while diving were reported yesterday. This is fewer than usual at this time of year, as a great number were bathing at the various beaches in the morning and early afternoon.

John J. Young, 33 years old, of 1,162 Erie Avenue, Williamsport, Penn., was drowned yesterday morning while bathing at Wildwood, N. J. He went beyond the breakers to save his niece, who had called for help. The life guards saved her.

Carl Riting, 19 years old, of 50 First Avenue, was drowned yesterday afternoon during the storm at Woodland Beach, Staten Island, when his canoe overturned. He was two hundred yards out and was trying to paddle ashore, when he gave a cry and the life guards saw the canoe floating bottom up. They went to the rescue, accompanied by a number of bathers, but he had disappeared. His body came ashore an hour later.

Albert Weekesser, 19 years old, of 802 East Fortieth Street, fractured his spine, while diving in the North Beach pool yesterday afternoon. He was taken to St. John's Hospital, where it is thought that his injuries will be fatal.

Carl Rieland, 19 years old, of 76 South Eleventh Street, Newark, N. J., was drowned in the bay off Woodland Beach, Staten Island, yesterday afternoon when a canoe in which he and George Graehaber of 120 Wooster Street, Newark, were sailing was overturned in the rough water about one hundred yards from shore. Rieland was able to swim but little. Graehaber was a poor swimmer also, but he managed to regain hold of the canoe and to cling to it until Life Guard Pearce swam out to him and brought him ashore.

The body of Edward Walker Van Valkenburgh, son of Willis F. Van Valkenburgh, of 108 Chestnut Street, East Orange, N. J., who was drowned on July 29, at Lake Wawayanda, N. J., was recovered yesterday morning.

LOST BOY TURNS UP IN FAR OKLAHOMA

Country-Wide Search Lasted Four Months for 4-Year-Old James Glass.

PARENTS GO TO CLAIM HIM

Photograph from Norman, Okla., and Two Moles on His Back Identify Missing Jersey City Child.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glass of 13 Linaeu Place, Jersey City, whose 4-year-old son James disappeared strangely on May 12 while he was with his parents at the village of Greeley in the woods of Pike County, Penn., left last night for Norman, Okla., to bring their boy home. The trip will end a search which sent detectives to at least a dozen States on false clues. Pictures and descriptions of the boy have been sent to every State and were published widely in the newspapers.

Just how the boy got to far-off Oklahoma no one is certain. A merchant in Norman, Okla., by the name of Malore, had advertised that he wished to adopt a child. On July 4 a woman, whose identity was unknown, brought the boy to Malore's house. As it was a legal holiday the adoption papers could not be made out, and the woman left the child, saying she would return the following day. No trace of her has been found since that time.

The theory on which the police worked was that the boy was stolen by itinerant players, who gave a performance at Greeley on the day he disappeared. There were two Indian families with the show, and it is now believed that one of these families took the boy with them back to the reservation in Oklahoma. No description of the woman who left the child at Malore's house in Norman has been received here, and whether she was Indian or gypsy is not known to the Jersey City police.

On the day of his disappearance the boy had been playing in the street in front of the Greeley Post Office while his mother waited for the mail to be distributed. She was not gone more than ten minutes, but could find no one who had seen the child.

There followed daily searches in the woods about the village, but it was like looking for a needle in a haystack. Twelve times the searching parties started out, sometimes remaining in the woods for two or three days, but no trace of the boy was found. One day some bones were unearthed, but they proved to be those of an ox which had strayed off into the woods six years before.

Then the father and mother, broken in health by their sorrow, sought the aid of the Jersey City police. Director of Public Safety Frank Hague had circulars with a picture and description of the boy sent all over the country. He sent detectives to run down each report that came to his office. A band of gypsies was followed to New England, but the child they had was not the missing boy. Detective James Rooney went to Sayre, Penn., and found a child there who he thought answered the description, but when Mr. Glass hurried to Sayre he was disappointed again. The child was a girl.

Ten days ago Chief of Police Pledger of Norman sent a telegram to the Jersey City police, saying he believed he had the missing boy. The child, he said, answered the description he had read in a newspaper. He was asked to send a photograph. Mr. and Mrs. Glass were sure, when the photograph arrived, that the search was ended. Chief Pledger was asked by telegram to look for a mole in the middle of the boy's back and another under his left ear. A telegram received yesterday from Pledger said the moles were there.

to establish peace in Mexico naturally was mentioned, the main object of the meeting was to arrange for the participation of the United States in the Pan-American Financial Conference, to be held in Buenos Aires, in the Autumn, and the subsequent Pan-American Scientific Conference at the same place.

It was denied that the conference was for the purpose of seeking the aid of American bankers to finance a provisional government that might be set up in Mexico as the outcome of the informal conferences held here on Thursday and Friday by the Secretary of the State, the Ambassadors of Brazil, Argentina, and Chile, and the Ministers of Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala. These conferences are to be resumed in New York this week, probably on Tuesday or Wednesday, and it is expected that when the conferees come together again those from the Latin-American nations will be prepared to state the attitude of their governments as to the recommendation that an appeal to stop fighting, compose their differences, and join in the establishment of a provisional government should be addressed to the factional leaders in Mexico by the seven nations represented in the conference.

From other sources, however, the impression is obtained that, while arrangements for the Pan-American conferences to be held in Buenos Aires were discussed at the meeting in New York today between the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary McAdoo will take up with New York bankers at once the matter of providing financial support for the Provisional Government which the United States hopes to see established in Mexico.

One of the surprising elements of the Mexican situation, in view of the known desire of the Administration to avoid resort to force, is the activity in the supply departments of the army. Little is known of what is being done, but there is said to be an unusual amount of work in the way of preparation for forwarding commissary supplies. Consideration had been given by the Government to the matter of using troops to keep open the railroad line between Vera Cruz and Mexico City in order to insure the transportation of food over that line to the people of the capital, but since the reoccupation of Mexico City by the Carranzista forces and their control of the railroad conditions in the capital have improved in a way to indicate that the trouble might be overcome. At the same time there is a suspicion that the War Department is taking no chances, and intends to be prepared if there should be a sudden call for troops to go to Vera Cruz to make certain that food supplies would be furnished to the population of Mexico City.

Senhor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister in Mexico City, who has rendered valuable services to the United States through his representation of American interests since the severance of diplomatic relations between this Government and Mexico, is soon to start for Washington. W. W. Canada, the United States Consul at Vera Cruz, has been instructed to afford Senhor Cardoso every facility, and it is believed that this Government desires the presence of the Brazilian envoy in this country at the earliest practicable moment. It is thought that Senhor Cardoso has been invited to the United States to furnish to Secretary Lansing and the diplomatic representatives of Latin-American countries at their conferences in New York, a first-hand view of conditions in Mexico so that they may be better able to decide what steps are necessary to solve the problem that confronts them.

The Carranza agency has received a telegram from the border tonight to the effect that Durango, capital of the State of the same name, has been occupied by the Constitutionalist forces under Generals Arrieta and Martin Triana.

The agency says it is reported that the Villistas under General Tomas Urbina were defeated and routed by the Constitutionalists under General Jacinto Treviño near Saltillo, and in consequence Saltillo has been evacuated, the Villistas fleeing and the Constitutionalists ready to occupy this important railway centre, which is regarded as a strategic point of high value.

The Carranza agency gave out this cable message from Jesus Acuña, Minister of Foreign Relations at Vera Cruz: "I am in receipt of a report from Mexico City which states that the railway line from the capital southwest to Toluca is now being reopened, for the purpose of bringing into the city large quantities of provisions purchased by the Constitutionalist Government in the State of Michoacan.

"The Zapatista remnants are still being pursued by General Coss's forces to the southward. In Mexico City a large number of stations have been opened under Government direction, and food continues to be sold at less than cost. The Post Office was opened Saturday. Saturday afternoon the Diplomatic Corps paid a visit of courtesy to General Pablo Gonzales. The citizens of Mexico City are highly elated, and express deep gratification over the orderly and circumspect behavior of the Constitutionalist soldiery now in the capital.

"Numerous trains are now arriving from Apisaco, loaded with foodstuffs. The arrivals of the last twenty-four hours include 5,700 tons of corn, 2,700 tons of flour, and twenty-seven carloads of beef cattle, with vast quantities of other supplies.

"The Constitutionalist Government has sent from Vera Cruz $2,000,000 in small treasury notes and is dispatching $4,000,000 more to relieve the embarrassment caused by the monetary situation. The people of Vera Cruz have contributed $40,000 for the relief of suffering among the very poor in Mexico City, and orders have been issued that every person applying at Government headquarters for employment shall be put to work on the various public works at once."

Carranza-Guatemala Clash.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Administration officials who were inclined yesterday to believe that a peace parley between Mexican factions might soon result, independent of the appeal to the military leaders which will go forward from Pan-American nations, were not so sanguine today. Reports from Mexico City that Dr. Juan J. Ortega had received his passports from General Carranza and been ordered to leave the country within twenty-four hours were responsible for this change of mind. Inasmuch as Guatemala is represented in the Latin-American conference, Carranza's drastic action is regarded here as indicating a disposition of unfriendliness toward the conference.

Ortega's forced departure from Mexico, together with the departure of M. Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister at Mexico City, will leave in the Mexican capital no diplomatic representatives of any of the seven nations participating in the Mexican conference.

Dr. Ortega, it is stated here, has not been on good terms with General Carranza for some time. It also has been learned that Carranza's agents in Washington during the last few days have been appealing to the Guatemalan Minister here, Mr. Mendez, urging him to support the cause of Carranza in the joint deliberations now being held. Their appeals, it is declared, have not been successful.

PUBLIC PROTEST IN VERA CRUZ

People Aroused by Reports of Action to be Taken by This Country.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VERA CRUZ, Monday, Aug. 9.—Last night a parade headed by a band followed a meeting to protest against the action of the United States as interference in Mexican affairs. Governor Aguilar made a short speech, advising the people to take things quietly, as the danger of intervention was not great and reminding them not to soil the name of Vera Cruz or give a pretext. The Government was in a difficult situation, he said, and needed the support of all Mexicans during this period. He stated that Mexico would not submit to have a President set up by force, as the people were fighting for the liberty to name their own President.

The Governor ordered cavalry patrols doubled and ordered the police at the first sign of disorder to break up the meeting. All classes are aroused over reports of pending action of the conference to force a President on Mexicans, and seem to be united against such action by the United States.

LANSING HERE A SHORT TIME.

Refuses to Discuss His Conference with Secretary McAdoo.

Secretary of State Lansing made a hurried visit to New York yesterday. He came, according to a report from Washington, to consult with Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo on the Mexican situation. The conference was not held at the Biltmore Hotel, where Secretary Lansing stopped while here. Secretary Lansing arrived on one of the morning trains from Washington, and started back to the capital at 1 P. M.

At the Biltmore Secretary Lansing left instructions that he was not to be disturbed, and attachés of the hotel said he was in his room at 10:30 o'clock. At 12:45 the Secretary entered the hotel alone.

Asked by a reporter if he cared to state the reason for his visit and if it had to do with the Mexican situation, he replied: "I have absolutely nothing to say."

"Did you have a conference with Secretary McAdoo?" he was asked.

Mr. Lansing glanced at his watch. "I am going to Washington at 1 o'clock and haven't time to talk," he said.

SCOTT AT EL PASO TODAY.

To Have a Conference with Villa and Special Agent Carothers.

EL PASO, Aug. 8.—General Hugh L. Scott, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, bearing a State Department commission to the Villa faction, is to arrive here at 2:45 P. M. tomorrow.

Conferences of General Scott, George C. Carothers, special agent of the State Department, and General Francisco Villa are to be arranged later in the day.

Pending General Scott's arrival with what are believed to be representations upon the subject of peace based on the plan of the Pan-American conference, the Villa Government has stayed the actual taking over of foreign merchandise at Chihuahua City.

CARDOSO ASKS WARSHIP.

Brazilian Minister to Hurry Here to Report on Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 8.—José Manuel Cardoso de Oliveira, Brazilian Minister to Mexico, who has represented the United States here since the withdrawal of its embassy, cabled the State Department at Washington today, requesting that a warship be provided to take him to Key West, on his way to Washington, where he will confer with the Brazilian Minister to the United States and Secretary Lansing.

He has personally thanked General Gonzalos, the Carranza commander, for agreeing to provide him with a special train and an escort for the trip to Vera Cruz on Tuesday.

Private Secretary Parker has asked for permission to transfer the archives and clerical staff to the old embassy building.

3 DEAD, HEAVY LOSS IN LIGHTNING STORM

the beach and saw him killed. None of the other bathers was hurt.

$200,000 Loss in Camden.

The most severe damage was done at Camden, N. J., where ten fires were started by lightning. Damage from these blazes and from flooded gutters and sewers was estimated at $200,000.

The first of these fires was in a three-story building of the Camden Curtain Rod Company at Broadway and Jackson Street, which was struck by lightning at the height of the storm. In spite of the prompt appearance of the Fire Department and the pouring rain, the building was burned out, with the result that 150 women were thrown out of work. The loss was about $50,000.

While most of the Fire Department was fighting this blaze the department store of Toone & Hollingshead, at Broadway and Kaighn Avenue, three blocks away, was struck by lightning, which ran down into the storeroom in the cellar and set fire to almost the entire stock. When a second alarm had been turned in for this fire almost the whole force of the Camden department was at work at neighboring blazes. The damage to the store was about $125,000.

The books were saved by Miss Anna Brennan, head bookkeeper, who lives two blocks away and ran out into the pouring rain when she saw the engines gathering. The police refused to allow her to enter the burning building, but she broke through the lines, rescued the books from the blazing office, and collapsed as she staggered out to the street.

During the hour the storm lasted eight other buildings in various parts of Camden were struck, but none of these fires was of consequence. Three small boys—Anthony Goldberg, Howard Robbins, and Richard Noon—ran under an awning at Tenth and Penn Streets, and hardly had reached the shelter when it was struck by a bolt of lightning, which knocked the three senseless to the street. It was at first thought that they were dead, but at St. John's Hospital, where they were taken, it was found that they were still living, but paralyzed from the waist down.

The police of Camden had been grappling for some hours for the body of a Chicago man who was drowned in the Delaware the night before, and had had no success. The concussions of the thunder raised the body to the surface.

Volunteers Fight Fire.

The storm gave the Eastchester Volunteer Fire Department its first activity in more than two years. An unoccupied frame house, two stories in height, belonging to Eugene Field, and situated at Fisher's Lane and Boston Road, the Bronx, was struck by lightning, which set the upper story on fire. As this is near the Sound, and inaccessible to the New York Fire Department, the Eastchester volunteers, under Chief George M. Holler, were called out, and did such effective work that the fire was confined to the upper part of the house and the damage to $200.

A stable and shed on the Astor estate at Pelham Parkway, 1,000 feet from White Plains Avenue, was struck about the same time. The buildings were used by Jessup Engram, but there were no horses or vehicles in them at the time. The damage was about $500, the Fire Department stopping the blaze before the structures were destroyed.

Heavy rains toward the Connecticut line sent torrents of water across the tracks of the New Haven Railroad near Mount Vernon, and trains between that station and Stamford were delayed from five to fifteen minutes on account of the disabling of the electric signals. Traffic was restored to normal conditions and there was no damage to the tracks. The New York Central reported that it had had no trouble.

The bathing beaches to the south of the city escaped with a few minutes of showers and light winds, and the privilege of seeing a magnificent electrical display several miles off shore. On Staten Island about 75,000 persons were out at Midland Beach, South Beach, and the other resorts, but there was no loss of life and no damage except to several small boats which were torn loose from their moorings by the wind.

Great crowds of bathers at Coney Island were driven to shelter on the porches of hotels, boarding houses, and other dwellings facing the beach and in the railroad stations near by. There was considerable crowding here, but only one minor accident. Festivities were interrupted for only a few minutes.

THE HARRIMAN NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK

The Jewel of Consistency

The time can be measured in days since the myopic prophets among the financial writers of the daily press advised us that the turn in the tide of American business would be marked by the activities of the great manufacturing interests of this country, resulting from the pressing needs of foreign nations at war.

Now, before the sound of their voices has died away, the investing public, impressed by the weight and force of the excellent arguments set forth, ready, able and willing to purchase the securities so strongly recommended, are implored by the same writers to let them alone.

The subject is admittedly somewhat outside the province of the Harriman National Bank, but we feel it a duty to many of our customers to speak this word. Manufacturers and dealers who are enjoying the benefit of war orders, or domestic orders, requiring additional banking facilities, will be welcome here and cared for financially, agreeably to their responsibility and their balances, on modern banking lines.

RICH BABIES AID POOR ONES.

Campaign to Raise $1,000 Yearly for Diet Kitchen Association.

Sixteen new members were enrolled yesterday in the Babies' Auxiliary of the New York Diet Kitchen Association, and, according to announcement, the campaign for members will be carried on vigorously until there are 1,000 baby members paying annual dues of $1 each. The organization was started in the names of these babies: John Jacob Astor 6th, Cornelius Bliss 3d, Adeline Havemeyer, Christopher Huntington, Elizabeth Jay, Whitney Willard Straight, Henry Hilgard Villard, Hugh M. Wade, Constance Pierpont Zabriskie, and Elizabeth Ziegler.

The new baby members are Ethel Kattrein, Helen M. Lee, Henry V. Poor, Jr., Alice Anita Stevens, Helen Weld Stevens, Weld M. Stevens, Jr., Mary Wehle, Clarinda York, Muriel Gould York, Thyrza Benson Flagg, Joan Florence Guggenheim, Nancy Guggenheim, Harold Van Buren Richards, Stanley T. Sheuell, William H. Woglom, Jr., and Anonymous.

The slogan of the auxiliary is "Babies with Dollars Help Babies without Dollars," and the purpose is to raise $1,000 a year for the employment of a competent trained nurse to visit the milk stations of the city and instruct poor mothers in the care of children. The nurse will also carry her educational work into the homes

Miss Helen Wade is President of the auxiliary. She has issued an invitation to all babies to become members. Applications should be sent to her at 1 West Thirty-fourth Street, the headquarters of the auxiliary.

BOY PREACHES IN TENT.

In Knee Trousers, J. Scott Dawkins, 15, Addresses Great Crowd.

A crowd that packed Tent Evangel in Harlem yesterday heard a sermon from a Philadelphia youth in knee trousers, J. Scott Dawkins. He is 15 years old and frail looking. He said the reason he had begun preaching so young was because he "could not help it." He delivered a long evangelistic sermon.

In the audience were several elderly clergymen and others of mature years, as well as many young people. The preacher spoke with composure and assurance, and quoted long extracts from the Bible at frequent intervals. He showed a familiarity with their meaning which might have been expected from a man who had made a deep study of theology rather than from a youngster.

After the service the Rev. Dr. MacPherson, who has charge of Tent Evangel, told the congregation that Master Dawkins might be called to New York again. He called attention to the fact that Spurgeon began to preach at 17 and Christ at 12 years of age.

BIG CROP PROSPECTS HELPING BUSINESS

U. S. Chamber of Commerce Finds the Country Generally Hopeful of Trade Future.

WAR ALARM IS PASSING

Wheat and Corn Yield Estimated at 10 Per Cent. in Excess of Last Year—Cotton in Good Condition.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The Committee on Statistics of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, after a detailed investigation over the whole country, has reported that the feeling of apprehension for the country's prosperity because of possible international complications is giving way to a more hopeful view. This report, which is supplemented by statements of conditions in the important businesses of the country, is in substantial agreement with the summary of conditions in the twelve Federal Reserve districts, issued last week by the Federal Reserve Board.

The report does not say that fear of foreign complications has passed. But the prevalence of good crops all over the country, combined with a slow but healthy improvement in many industries, seems to give ground for the general belief that the business of the country is now in a position to survive any strain that may be put upon it. Nevertheless, according to the report of the committee, of which A. W. Douglas is Chairman, there is general conservatism in buying, and indications are that this will prolong the present dullness at least until the value of the crops is known beyond question.

The weather is reported as the keynote of conditions for the last six weeks. While there has been too much rainfall, yet the advantages are estimated as far exceeding the damage inflicted. Particular stress is laid upon the promise for unusual production of food supplies this year. In the South there is a great increase in the raising of live stock, while larger plantings of corn seem to have offset reduced production of cotton. The oats crop is estimated at 1,400,000,000 bushels, rivaling last year's record crop. Small grains remain normal, and the potato yield is expected to equal last year's.

Biggest of All Wheat Crops.

The wheat acreage is reported far in excess of any previous year—12½ per cent. larger in Winter wheat and 10 per cent. in Spring wheat than last year. While floods have done great damage to lowland fields, the crop is estimated at 948,500,000 bushels—something less than 10 per cent. greater than last year's yield. The large corn crop has been affected in somewhat the same way, but while floods have injured the lowland plantings it is estimated that advantages in the hills will more than offset the loss. Cool weather is thought to have damaged irreparably the corn crop in Minnesota, Wisconsin, the Dakotas, Northern Nebraska, and the Peninsula of Michigan, but the estimate for the country's crop is 10 per cent. above last year's, or about 2,935,000,000 bushels.

The committee's estimate of cotton, like that of the Federal Reserve Board, shows a reduction this year of 5,000,000 bales from last year's record crop of 17,000,000 bales. This is explained as the result of a reduction of 16 per cent. in acreage and 40 per cent. in fertilizers. As a whole the crop is reported in good condition.

A large yield of rice is promised and a slightly increased yield of tobacco. Hay also in most sections is in good condition, although the rains seriously reduced the first cuttings of alfalfa. The fields of hops in New York are above the average, but lack of demand has made prices dull. The peanut crop in Virginia, North Carolina, and Alabama is doing well.

The Chamber of Commerce's summary of business conditions says:

"Lumber interests are everywhere very quiet. A general dearth of building outside of the large cities is having a very depressing effect on the sale of all building material.

"The conditions of mining vary sharply as to the thing mined. Copper mines are running full time and new ones are opening up. Zinc and lead mines are exceedingly busy, and the mining of iron ore is improving. Coal mining is everywhere dull, largely because of slack demand from the railroads and the slow business in most manufacturing. Slate mining in Pennsylvania is at low stage because of lack of demand. Silver mining suffers because of low prices of silver, and gold mining is not much better save in a few favored localities.

Gains in Steel Business.

"There is but little business in naval stores because of lack of demand. Phosphate mines of Florida still remain closed, because of the European war. Unfavorable reports come alike from the fisheries of Oregon, Washington, the Gulf, and along the Atlantic Coast.

"Manufacturing varies much, according to the articles made, though in general it is very quiet. The steel and iron business shows distinct improvement, with increasing orders.

"Business of cotton and woolen mills is only fair. Those manufacturers in different sections who have orders for war contracts are exceedingly busy. Furniture business in Michigan, Northern Indiana, and Chicago is alike dull. Paper mills are running only three-quarters time. Cement factories and those making bricks and tile report only fair business. The oil industry, as a whole, is exceedingly dull. There is very little demand for railroad ties."

SULLIVAN FIGHTS RUM.

Ex-Champion's Prohibition Plea Cheered at Asbury Park.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 8.—John L. Sullivan, the ex-champion pugilist, delivered a plea for prohibition here tonight. There were 500 persons present, who paid 50 cents each for their seats, and they cheered the old champion heartily.

"I was a boozer for 25 years," he said, "and John Barleycorn it was who knocked me out as a fighter. I quit ten years ago. The only way you can beat old John is to climb out of the ring."

Sullivan said that he had spent the last ten years in traveling, and he asserted that he had found much sentiment for prohibition.

STEFANSSON SEARCH IN ARCTIC CONTINUES

Two Whaling Ships Will Visit Wrangel Island for Him and Companions.

FROZEN IN TWO YEARS AGO

Secretary Thinks His Chief, Who Is a Dead Shot, Can Kill Game Enough for Many Months.

Yesterday was the second anniversary of the freezing in of the Karluk, Vilhjalmur Stefansson's exploring ship, and the end of a year and four months since Stefansson himself was seen last by men who afterward returned to civilization. The survivors of the expedition and the friends of Stefansson are hanging to a slender thread of hope that he may have been rescued or that his rescue may be effected this month, when two whaling ships go to Wrangel Island, north of Siberia, in the hope of finding that he and his companions have reached land there.

One of these ships is the Belvedere, commanded by Olaf Swenson, who on Sept. 7, 1914, reached Wrangel Island on the power boat King and Winge, and rescued sixteen members of the party under Captain Bartlett. Captain Lane of the Polar Bear, another whaler, also will make Wrangel Island some time this month, when ice conditions are most favorable, and will seek the explorer.

Stefansson and five members of his party left Martin Point, on the north coast of Alaska, on March 22, 1914, on an expedition into the unexplored region north of Alaska. On April 7, when the party was at the point known since as Camp Separation, Stefansson sent back his secretary, Burt M. McConnell, and two other members of the party, Crawford and Johansen. He took with him Storkensen and Anderson, two of the hardiest and most experienced men in the party; six of the best dogs, a sled, and a load of more than 900 pounds.

Stefansson expected to return the way he came, or if that appeared unfeasible to go east to Banks Island. McConnell and the others were sent back to have a boat sent to Banks Island if Stefansson and the others did not return to the north coast of the North American continent. On Stefansson's failure to return to the mainland, two whaling Captains were sent to Banks Island, but there was no trace of Stefansson or his party there. The whalers brought back word that the ice had broken up earlier than usual and that Stefansson, if he sought to reach Banks Island, had been prevented by open water.

Supplied with Ammunition.

"I believe that Stefansson's resourcefulness would enable him and his companions to live on the ice for two and a half or three years," said McConnell at his home, 156 West Sixty-fifth Street, yesterday. "The difficulty which he would face in trying to escape from the ice to the mainland or to Wrangel or Banks Island lies in the fact that his sled will carry only food enough to support the party for a short distance. On this account he will have to stay near spots where the hunting is good, unless he eventually finds himself carried by the drift to a point close enough to land to make a dash for it.

"Stefansson had with him 400 rounds of ammunition. He is a dead shot. On one of his previous explorations he supported himself and two companions for a year on the game which he killed with sixty-two cartridges. I have never seen him miss his mark with a rifle.

"There is plenty of game in the country where he now is—seals, polar bears, and foxes. The polar bears live on seal and stay where they are plentiful, and the foxes live on the carcasses left behind by the bears, so that all three are found together. It is not necessary to waste ammunition on foxes, which can be trapped and killed in other ways. Stefansson in all his expeditions has lived largely on game. He started on the present trip in search of game to prevent scurvy in his party.

"If he reaches land in the unexplored region the party may live on the land indefinitely. The 400 rounds of ammunition are enough, I should say, to keep the party in meat for about two years. If they strike a country that contains walruses, they can live a greater time. After the ammunition is spent, they would not be at the end of their resources. Stefansson learned from the blonde Eskimos the art of spearing seal. The steel of the sledge runners or the gun barrel could be made into spears. The party had with them an oil stove, in which they could develop heat enough to forge metal. They had matches with them to last for six years. Their fuel would come chiefly from the blubber in the seals and polar bears or walruses.

"The ice crust on which we left Stefansson and his party extended about 800 miles from Wrangel Island, north of Siberia, to Banks Island, north of Alaska. The ice drifts with the ocean current toward the Siberian coast, and might eventually bring Stefansson and his party within striking distance of Wrangel Island. They had with them a canoe which would enable them to cross the open water.

Search by Aeroplane.

"If they do not reach Wrangel Island, the only practicable plan of rescuing them will be that of sending an expedition with aeroplanes at a total cost of about $100,000. At the edge of this ice crust, about 800 miles long, the aeroplane would leave the ship and fly about 175 miles in a northwesterly direction. The aviators could cover a range with their eyes of about five miles on either side of their course, thus searching a strip twenty miles wide on their outgoing and incoming trips each day.

"The Canadian Government, however, is too much engrossed in the war to consider the plan. The Aero Club of America has approved the idea as a feasible one, but all efforts to raise the $100,000 have failed, and there appears to be no prospect now of starting such a relief expedition, although I am firmly convinced that Stefansson is alive and that such an expedition would be certain to locate him and his companions."

the newspapers of what we want, and tonight we are assigning territory to our organizers."

Colt Employes Loyal.

What success the labor organizers have had here among the employes of the Colt Company cannot be learned definitely, but it is known that many of the employes, particularly those who have been with the firm a long time, do not look with favor upon any plan that does not include recognition by the union of the bonus system. There are many employes of the Colt Company who have spent practically all of their working lives with the company, and have come to have a friendly feeling for their employers, especially since the bonus or profit-sharing plan has been announced.

The announcement of this policy was made at the first of the month, and it was received with favor by the men. The first 12½ per cent. payment was promised on the profits of May, June, and July of this year, and the men expect to receive their bonus in the very near future.

No estimates of what each man's share in the profits will be have been made, but, because of the number of orders that have been filled at the plant, the hopes of the employes are running high. They are, therefore, in no mood to strike or quarrel with their employers, according to report. The union organizers, however, have been busy among the men with arguments against the profit-sharing system, and some of the younger unmarried men seem to have listened to them. The union's chief argument against the bonus system of the Colt Company is that it is based on uncertain profits and the company has reserved the right to discontinue the profit sharing after the first of the year if it sees fit. The union men say this will be done as soon as the high profits from war orders fall off. The bonus system, they say, is only temporary and uncertain, while a definite advance in wages and a shortening of hours would be a permanent and positive gain.

While the union leaders were discussing their business tonight the officials of the Colt Company did not seem to be worrying. None of them would talk for publication about the possibility of a strike, and most of them displayed only a casual interest in the proceedings at the union meeting.

Johnston will go back to Bridgeport on Monday night and will attend the mass meeting of the 2,000 employes of the Locomobile Company of America, when the employes' committee will report its visit to the managers. The third notice posted last week offered a bonus to the men, but was so worded as to leave an opening for further negotiations if the men rejected the proposal and insisted on an eight-hour day. According to President Johnston and most of the Bridgeport leaders, the company will accede to the demands to be submitted tomorrow. They say, however, that if by any chance the Locomobile Company does stand by its bonus offer as an ultimatum, then the strike will start.

President Johnston reiterated tonight the union's denial of German influence in its affairs, but he admitted that the union leaders were taking advantage of the conditions caused by the war to strengthen their organization and obtain better wages and working hours for the men. If pro-German sentiment is a weapon that can be used, it is said, it will be used, but it will not keep the men from returning to work, in the event of a strike, if the demands of the union are granted.

500,000 SEEK 8-HOUR DAY.

Four Big Railroad Unions May Amalgamate to Fight.

Labor leaders announced yesterday receipt of information to the effect that the four big railroad unions of the country, taking in engineers, conductors, trainmen, and firemen, were contemplating amalgamating for the purpose of obtaining increased wages and an eight-hour day throughout the country.

President Lee, of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, had this amalgamation in view, the local leaders said yesterday, when he spoke in Denver a few days ago on the effect of recent attempts by railroad men to improve their condition and said:

"The financial result of the long arbitration of the demands made upon the Western roads for an increase in pay has been a continuous subject of discussion among the disappointed men, and it is more than likely that next year will see a general movement to procure concessions, and that the strike weapon will be used if necessary."

In the four railroad unions concerned there are said to be 500,000 members.

GOMPERS PLEA FOR MINERS.

Appeal to Help Free Colorado Men Goes to 2,000,000 Workers.

Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, had letters sent out yesterday to every branch of every organization affiliated with the Federation, calling on the labor men to help free the miners who were convicted after the Colorado strike. The letter, it was said, would reach 2,000,000 men. In it, after outlining the history of the strike, Mr. Gompers said:

You are familiar with the efforts to destroy the miners' union. A part of this effort were the trials of John R. Lawson, Louis Zancanelli, David Robb, and Ben Richardson. The brutal steps taken in each of the trials to convict these miners were of the same nature.

For the first time in the history of our country an officer of a union has been convicted of murder because of violence which grew out of a strike—convicted even though he was not accused of personal participation in the violence. This is a principle of tremendous importance to the whole labor movement. This injustice must not be allowed to stand, to menace men and women with ability to help their fellows. The members of organized labor of the whole country must support the unions of Colorado. Injury and injustice to them are injury and injustice to all.

Each local union was urged in the letter to take "positive action" in condemning and protesting against the conviction, and in demanding "that the great wrong done against Lawson and his fellow-workers shall be righted."

THE ALLIES

The allied forces of the Thompson-Starrett Company are Quality, Speed and Economy, and nothing has ever yet stood in the way of their giving satisfactory results.

On the other hand, none of those allies, separately or in pairs, can give the results which are obtainable from the coalition of all three.

What is more to the point, they cannot be approached separately in the Thompson-Starrett Company—none will act without the others.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, AUG. 9, 1915.

THE NEW BUSINESS OF LENDING.

We have always been a borrowing people. We have sold billions of dollars' worth of our securities abroad. On the London and Paris Exchanges there are American departments where the bonds and shares of our corporations are dealt in as on the New York Stock Exchange. In Amsterdam the latest Wall Street quotations on United States Steel, Rock Island, American Can, Missouri Pacific, and a score of other American issues are displayed on blackboards in the street windows of banking shops. The reason United States Government bonds are not quoted in the financial centres of Europe, as the bonds of nearly all non-European countries are, is that the United States Government itself has not borrowed capital abroad. Only American corporations and American municipalities have placed their share certificates, their bonds, and their short-term notes in Europe. When the war began a year ago New York City had $80,000,000 of temporary I O U paper coming due abroad and thought it very awkward. Tens of thousands of private investors in Europe, especially in France, England, and Holland, have American investments and talk about them more intelligently, often know more about them, indeed, than Americans.

The habits of the American and the European with money are very unlike. The Englishman with a few pounds, the Frenchman with a few francs, the Hollander with a few guilders, thinks straightway of investing his money, whereas an American with a few dollars, if he does not think of spending it first, will probably put it in a bank to draw interest or buy life insurance. The banks and the life insurance companies invest it in securities. Only in the last few years has it been thought feasible or worth the bother in Wall Street to make bonds any smaller than $1,000 pieces, or to make stocks accessible in small quantities to the "odd lot" buyer. The unit of trade on the Stock Exchange is 100 shares.

There is probably no other people in the world with so little investment intelligence in proportion to their capacity to produce and employ capital. Of those who save only a very small relative number themselves invest what they save. They put it in savings banks or trust companies, or into the great insurance reservoirs. As depositors in banks they are primarily interested in the hoarding aspect of saving, hardly at all in its economic aspect. As buyers of life insurance they combine saving and insurance to a degree unknown elsewhere in the world. Thus, in our country, the investment of money directly in securities has been confined mainly to institutions that collect the people's funds and to individuals having large incomes.

In Europe, on the contrary, a majority of those who save invest their money directly for themselves. It is more that way in France than elsewhere. When for political and other reasons it was deemed desirable that French capital should flow into Russia the bankers of France brought out Russian securities and recommended them to the people—bonds and shares of manufacturing and distributing corporations the names of which they had to learn phonetically, doing business in provinces and cities of Russia previously unknown to the French investor. He took the banker's word for it and put his francs into these things of Russian enterprise, and in a few years several billion francs of French capital in that way had been loaned to the northern ally. Today the Germans in Russia can hardly hit a Russian smokestack without touching a French pocketbook.

Now all at once the Governments of Europe want to sell securities to the American investor, who can well afford to buy them, but the difficulties are almost insuperable. They can borrow banking credit, they can pawn American securities, as France has done, or they can sell short-term notes, maturing in a year or two. It would be almost impossible to do in this country what other countries have always done in Europe, namely, to sell, or, as bankers say, "place," a large permanent loan, that is, to sell long-term French and English bonds to American investors. The large investing institutions are in some instances limited by law as to what they may buy. Savings banks could not buy foreign Government bonds. Insurance companies could legally do so, but, in fact, they could not go very heavily into that kind of investment without having to meet a great many interrogations. The individuals who have large incomes are not in the habit of buying foreign securities. And the great saving class, whose self-denial creates the bulk of the new capital available for investment, is hardly accustomed to buy securities at all.

If conditions were reversed a billion francs of American Government bonds could be placed with French investors on the word of their bankers. The thought of placing half that amount of French bonds in this country is staggering. No banker in Wall Street would suppose it could be done. Wall Street's opinion is probably right. Therefore, every inquiry on the part of England, France, Russia, or Germany as to the possibility of selling long-term bonds to the American investor in large quantities has been discouraged. The foreign borrowing continues to take the form of temporary accommodation. We lend credit at the bank, we take short-term securities, which can be hypothecated at the bank, or we lend money on collateral deposited here, but we do not lend fixed capital for long periods at interest. That is to say, all that Europe so far has borrowed here will become due and payable in a short time. She would much rather borrow on ten or twenty years' time.

THE PLATTSBURG CAMPERS.

The encampment of 1,300 civilians at Plattsburg, N. Y., for one month's hard work at soldiering, beginning tomorrow, will be valuable, first of all, for the lesson it teaches to that many men of education and standing in the community. The campers will form a complete regiment, under the command of United States Army officers. For four weeks they will submit to the rigors and discipline of camp life and receive practical instruction in trench digging, tent pitching, marching, signaling, and many other things the common soldier of these days must learn. Men from Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and other States, who occupy conspicuous positions in social, business, and professional life, will sink their individuality in a commendable effort to learn something of modern military science. They will be compelled to work like soldiers work in wartime. There will be no play. They will wear their olive cotton shirts and trousers and eat soldiers' fare from tin plates. When their ordeal is finished, every one of them will be in the way of serving his country well in an hour of peril. The instruction thus begun will not be neglected hereafter; men do not go into this sort of thing heedlessly, and the men of the August contingent of campers at Plattsburg will surely fit themselves to receive officers' commissions if a volunteer army is required in our time.

Of still greater value than the training these men will receive will be the influence of their example. The Summer camps, under army control, for the training of men for the reserve will be largely increased in the future. Each one of these 1,300 men will perform a double service for his country, for, besides fitting himself personally to do his fair share for national defense, he is impressing upon a multitude of young men an example of unselfish patriotism.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM AT WORK.

The agreeable announcement is made that the Federal Reserve banks are earning money at a time when it is more than ordinarily difficult to do so. Resources are so ample that there is no such volume of rediscounts as there would be in a more closely working money market. It is even more surprising to find that the best profits are in the least suspected quarters. Richmond, Atlanta, and Dallas were not the centres where it might have been anticipated that the best showing would be made. Yet the fact is that there is more rediscounting in those cities than in New York itself. The Eastern banks have run more to investments, which are more abundant here than in the South. But the Southern banks are rediscounting more freely, no doubt in connection with the "movement" of the cotton crop into the warehouses to await movement out when the price suits the owners. Thus it happens that one-fourth of all the country's rediscount business was done in Richmond and one-fifth in Atlanta. The rates on the rediscounts have been hardly half of what the Southern banks have been accustomed to pay.

So both sides have profited by the arrangement and the utility of the Federal Reserve system is far toward demonstration, even though present conditions are not normal. The lower rates to the banks ought to mean lower rates to their customers, who can no longer be pacified for high rates to them on a disingenuous plea of high rates paid by the banks, for the posting of the reasonable rates charged by the Federal Reserve system throughout the country embarrasses any banker disposed to charge his customers more than credit is worth. There now is a standard for money such as never before was available in the United States, and somewhat approximating the standards of leading banks in other countries.

BUDGETS.

The report to the Constitutional Convention regarding the necessity of a State budget has bearings also upon the same need for a Federal budget. In fact it was because of the experience of Chairman STIMSON as Secretary of War that he made the report of that character. He knew that for years the United States spent upon its army more than half of what Germany spent, and yet he was ashamed of the comparison of results. On the other hand "our expenditure, "from the lack of the proper work-"ing machinery between the Execu-"tive and Congress which a budget "system would supply, has largely "been wasted upon the unnecessary "army post in the districts of influ-"ential Congressmen."

That is only half the story. The navy yards absorb funds which might supply dreadnoughts. The river and harbor and public building bills are known as "pork barrels." These are the sources in which Congressmen show their efficiency and their attachment to their constituents by combining to extract from the Treasury funds for proposals which could not win on their merits. Throughout the orgy of expense from public funds for private politicians' benefit there is no trace of responsibility. The case is even worse for the protection of the United States Treasury than for the protection of New York funds, for the President lacks the power of our Governor to veto individual jobs.

It is a generation since BRYCE called attention to this defect in the organization of our finances. President TAFT rediscovered the opportunity for a genuine financial reform, but did not succeed in firmly establishing it. The Democrats have an excellent opportunity to steal Republican thunder, and the better the Republican the more welcome he will make the Democrats to follow in the steps of the reform which it is practically assured New York will adopt. The Democrats face a somewhat troubled financial outlook. At such a time it is especially opportune to remind the responsible statesmen that "a penny saved is tuppence earned."

CALIFORNIA'S ALIEN LAND LAW.

It is customary to assign hard legal jobs to Philadelphia lawyers, but now there is reason to put California lawyers in the same distinguished class. The difference between California and Japan is far from settled, and last week there was danger of a head-on collision. Under the California statute only those eligible to citizenship can hold land, and suit was brought against a Japanese who held a mortgage. The defendants pleaded that foreclosure of the mortgage would give title to the land, and that was forbidden to the Japanese plaintiff, therefore he could not hold a mortgage.

If the contention had prevailed, there might have been work for Uncle Sam when he is somewhat preoccupied. But the lawyers on the other side found a way out. It was argued that the mortgage was merely incidental to a business transaction, being collateral for a loan. There is no law against a Japanese engaging in business in California, and he is expressly allowed that privilege by treaty. Accordingly the court took the view of the plaintiff's lawyer that a Japanese can hold a mortgage in California, although the statute forbidding him to hold farm land is constitutional. As the case seems to stand, the Japanese is left holding a mortgage which perhaps he could not foreclose. Or perhaps the California lawyers would find a way for him to foreclose through an assignee, or to foreclose himself and forthwith sell the property taken.

PAN-AMERICAN CO-OPERATION.

It must be admitted that there is no clear indication as yet that the conference of Latin-American diplomats and representatives of the United States Government will lead to a satisfactory solution of the Mexican problem. But it would be rash to draw conclusions from the unofficial reports of the proceedings. Co-operative action to induce the various revolutionary chiefs to come to terms, lay aside their personal ambitions, and agree upon a reasonable plan of pacification is already assured. Each of the South and Central American States, however, will act separately in the matter, making the identical appeal the United States Government will make. If this plan succeeds, a Provisional Government competent to restore order in Mexico may soon be formed and financed. If it fails, the Administration will not lose the credit of having made a fair attempt, in co-operation with other American States, of having given proof of its sincere desire for Pan-American union, based, not on common political ties but on mutual sympathy and understanding. Our neighbors in the southern half of the Western Continent cannot fail to be impressed by the earnest desire of our Government to act in co-operation with them in promoting the welfare of all America. It is well that they should understand that the President's action in this matter has the cordial approval of the people of the United States.

The intimation in some of the Washington dispatches that the Latin-American envoys might not be disposed to lend their approval to armed intervention in Mexico is quite apart from the subject. If a military invasion of Mexico were in view, the co-operation of other countries would not be asked for or desired. Obviously, armed intervention has no place in the present discussions. The chief obstacle to the success of the conference seems to be the persistent obstinacy of CARRANZA. He claims rulership of all Mexico and demands recognition. A few weeks ago it seemed likely that he might be officially recognized, but recent events have shown that, so far from possessing the support of 90 per cent. of the Mexican people, he is as weak as ever and his pretensions lack justification.

It is the desire of President WILSON to aid the establishment of a sound Government in Mexico which will fitly represent the principles of the revolution. CARRANZA'S present opponents have avowedly fought for those principles as bravely as his own soldiers, and, as it seems, as effectively. How sincere any one of the military leaders may be in his devotion to principles of any kind is another question. But the turmoil has lasted too long, the country has been desolated, and the honestly acquired property of many foreigners, Europeans as well as Americans, has either been destroyed or imperiled. Innocent noncombatants have been slaughtered. The time has come to stop the useless warfare, and the duty the United States Government has to perform in Mexico is clearly understood. That it may be performed peacefully, with the sympathetic co-operation of the other American nations, is undoubtedly the earnest desire of the President and a large majority of the people of this country.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Psychologists Could Help a Lot.

In an article on "The Automobile and Its Driver," The New York Medical Record calls well-deserved attention to the fact that in formulating the laws, municipal and State, by which an attempt is made to minimise the dangers incidental to the common use of motor vehicles there has been nowhere any demand upon science for the help it could easily, and would gladly, give, in determining who is and who is not competent to do the work that falls upon every chauffeur.

From such rough tests as we apply to those who drive automobiles for hire, a little something can, indeed, be learned in regard to their probable conduct in some emergencies, and the professionals do have to show a moderate understanding of the machines they operate. The amateur, the private owner, though at least as likely as the others to be ignorant or reckless, is required to show only one qualification—the ability to pay a license fee. Both classes should obviously be subjected to the same examinations, but those now in vogue are not enough.

Of this or that driver one often hears that he has been "unlucky"—that though he is a careful man and experienced, he has had a number of more or less serious "accidents." As a rule, such men always will be unlucky and their accidents will continue indefinitely, and the reason is that, for the purpose of driving an automobile, they are hopelessly "defective." In other words, their response to the demands for quick action of the sort so often arising for the automobile driver are and will remain imperfect. Either what the psychologists call the "time reaction" is slow or it is inaccurate.

Every such driver is a danger to himself, to those who ride with him, and most of all to those whom he meets on the road. There are well-known and simple laboratory tests by which his peculiarity could be revealed, but nobody, or at least nobody in authority, has yet thought of applying them to the candidates for automobile licenses.

Teutonic Roses in France.

There is a double interest in the news that one of the Paris papers wants the French horticulturists — we would call them nurserymen—to give French names to all the roses they sell, including not a few now well known and popular varieties that were produced by the skill of German hybridizers.

In the first place the making of this queer request shows that the French, or some of them, at any rate, have time and inclination to consider very small and unimportant subjects. In the next place, the dispatch conveying the Paris paper's desire says that the heading over its request is "Unboche Our Roses," from which, by fairly trustworthy implication, we gather that there has been invented a new French verb, presumably "déboche."

How the Academicians will survive the addition of such a barbarous vocable as that to the language they love and guard so well it is hard to imagine. For them it will form another horror of war, but so useful will the word probably be, so adroitly and effectively does it satisfy in a second linguistic domain the need that makes Frenchmen call Germans "les boches," that efforts to suppress it will in all probability be without result.

But while the word, dreadful as it is, will have utility and fill a long-felt want, never so much felt as now, it seems hardly befitting a magnanimous people to take the German names from roses admittedly of German production. That they were "created" by crossing French roses does not make them any less Teutonic, under the common law of horticulture, and while there might be present excuse—a poor one—for banishing those particular roses from French gardens, there is none at all for keeping them there under new and false French names.

Threatening Trade Disturbance.

If Englishwomen in great numbers join the War Economy League which certain titled ladies have formed—and if really many of them carry out its pledge to cut off all except strictly necessary personal expenditures—they are likely soon to discover that saving has two sides and that unwonted fullness of one pocket usually means unwonted emptiness of another or several others.

And opinions differ so widely as to what is and is not "necessary." In discussing it invariably there arises the question, Necessary for what? Merely to keep alive and to avoid arrest for insufficient covering—that is one thing, but to make life endurable is quite another, and whether a particular thing is a luxury or essential to decent existence depends a good deal on birth, training, and established habit. Unless the great ladies and their followers in the Economy League are wise and careful in their economizing, their fine intention may have the effect of increasing the financial disequilibrations already produced by the great war.

And anyhow, economy, though indubitably a virtue, is a drab and rather grimy one, with a fatal tendency, if not watched, of transmuting itself into meanness. The spendthrift may and usually does have qualities likable, if not admirable or commendable, but the miser is without a redeeming trait, and his satisfactions are the lowest that humanity has invented or imagined.

OUR IDEALS REFLECTED.

Comments of Latin America on the Meaning of July the Fourth.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I take the liberty of inclosing herewith a translation of three articles which appeared in three Rio de Janeiro papers on July 4. It seems to me that notices so appreciative and complimentary to our country should have some circulation in the United States.

J. R. BROWN, Jr.

Rio de Janeiro, July 6, 1915.

From Jornal do Commercio of Rio de Janeiro.

The United States celebrate today the grand date of the declaration of their independence, which was the starting point for the political emancipation of all of the colonies of the New World.

Today, as yesterday, the powerful Republic is our model and our guide. The entire continent has grown, guided by the same ideal of liberty, peace, and progress which has made the grandeur, the fortune, and the prestige of our eldest sister. The pan-American sentiment, always reaffirming itself eloquently whenever the beautiful destiny of this part of the world is in danger, has created a new and strong policy whose fundamentals are based on the identity of the historical formation of these young countries and on the perfect similarity of their aspirations.

Brazil early comprehended the value and the significance of this close and cordial approximation. Our diplomatic policy has never changed in this respect. The tradition left by the great men of the empire was followed in a definite mode by Joaquim Nabuco, who conquered for us in that great country a situation of such a privileged sort that our work now is only that of maintaining this tie of affection and confidence.

Brazilians consider, and with reason, the Fourth of July their date also, and sincerely associate with the North Americans in their celebration.

To the North American colony resident here we leave in these lines the expression of our compliments for the patriotic date which the United States celebrate today.

From O Paiz of Rio de Janeiro.

The United States of North America commemorate today the anniversary of their independence.

Country of Washington, Monroe, Lincoln, Cleveland, Edison, and Roosevelt, the great North American nation from which have come the most striking manifestations of the human genius compels for itself the consideration, the respect, and the veneration of the rest of the world by its progress, science, richness, and strength.

Brilliant light which illuminates and guides the American continent, powerful and cultured nation on which in the present grave moment conflagrated Europe fixes her anxious eyes, the great country of North America is without doubt the balance on which the desired peace and the future interests of the entire world are being weighed.

In the person of their Ambassador in this capital, Edwin Morgan, we greet with enthusiasm the United States on the glorious date whose anniversary occurs today.

From Correio da Manha of Rio de Janeiro.

Today is the anniversary of the independence of the United States of North America.

A country closely joined to Brazil by strong ties of friendship and commerce, the country of Washington is the most brilliant example of what the energy and wisdom of a people who know how to love their country well can do. The history of North America is a rare and most noble example which should be followed by us in this part of the South American continent.

To the diplomatic representative of the United States in Brazil and to the industrious and respected North American colony living here we present our homage on this glorious date.

In Yellowstone Park.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I feel it my duty to warn any ladies contemplating traveling this Summer through Yellowstone Park by the hotel and stage route to be prepared to "rough it" with a vengeance—that is, if only two or three are in the party. Notwithstanding that the hotels charge $5 a day, they regularly put my sister and myself in a room with two or three strange women, said room for four or five containing one window, one washstand, two chairs, and two beds. A VICTIM.

Yellowstone Park, Aug. 6, 1915.

POLAND, 1683—1915.

Thy valor, Poland, stemmed the tide of fate
Onrushing from the East in olden days,
When proud Vienna saw, with dread amaze,
Vast Turkish hosts before her walls, elate
In victor pride, inflamed with zealot hate!
Then Sobieski did thy banner raise
Triumphant, bore it through the battle blaze,
And saved from Crescent rule the Christian State!

And what was thy reward, O Land of Woe?
'Twas thine to see thy kingdom torn and rent,
And all a proud and vanquished people know
Whose necks beneath a conqueror's yoke are bent!
Yet thou hast kept through all thy centuried night
An altar flaming clear with Freedom's light!

And now again the tide of war has swept
In mightiest wave the world has ever known
Across thy plains by battle scarred, and prone
A nation lies! War's fury that long slept,
To greater madness waked! The bounds it kept
In older times are swept away, and strown
Thy fields are with thy dead, while mean
Of dying men shows where War's cohorts stept!

And Warsaw fair, where slow the Vistula flows,
Where Kosciusko fell in Freedom's cause,
Now once again a conqueror's presence knows
While issue vast that all the world now awes
Hangs trembling in the balance stern of Fate
Whose dread decree all nations now await!

THE BRIDGE CONTROVERSY.

A Letter from Commissioner Kracke on Rapid Transit Delays.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I call your attention to a few matters of record which have a bearing upon the situation discussed by you in your editorial entitled "Rapid Transit Delays." I do not think your editorial is quite fair to the Department of Bridges, and for that reason take the liberty of writing you.

Referring to the Centre Street subway, you state: "There is a quarrel over who shall pay the interest, and the interest runs while the trains do not." With every desire to be as courteous as possible, let me say that there is no quarrel over who shall pay the interest for the connection from the Municipal Building to the Brooklyn Bridge, which is not under operation and is evidently the point of your editorial comment. This connection was constructed by the Department of Bridges under Chapter 90 of the Laws of 1907. I have been formally advised by the Corporation Counsel that the connection is not a part of the dual subway system and was not included in those agreements. Under the law by which the connection was constructed the Commissioner of Bridges is expressly prohibited from making any contract for operation with any corporation unless said contract shall provide that the corporation with which the contract shall be made "shall annually pay to the city for the use of the extension, structure, or other property provided by the city an annual rental of not less than the original amount of the interest payable by the city upon its bonds issued to provide the cost thereof, and in addition thereto an amount not less than 1 per centum upon such cost."

On July 27, 1914, being extremely anxious to safeguard the city in connection with this matter, I submitted the question to Corporation Counsel Polk. On Nov. 28, 1914, I was advised that under the law I must charge a rental for the use of this connection, and was further advised that the amount of the rental was not subject to discussion, but was specifically stipulated. I have no reason to believe that the officials of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company disagree with me in my interpretation of the law relating to this connection; as a matter of fact, I am informally led to believe that they concede I can take no other position than the one I have taken. They, on their part, have never expressed a willingness to pay the rental demanded by the statute.

With every desire upon my part to facilitate the efficiency of the transit accommodations afforded to the people of this city, I fail to see how I can be expected to secure operation for a line so constructed that only one company can operate it, when that company makes no move to meet the provision of the law upon which operation must be contingent.

In view of these facts, I do not think it fair to describe this situation as a quarrel over who shall pay the interest. It might be deemed wise to amend the law so as to facilitate operation. I am not prepared at this time to say what my views upon this would be, but I am quite unwilling not to have it clearly understood that my action is limited entirely by the law as it now stands.

Without going at all into the merits of the questions raised by the attitude of the traction companies at the Williamsburg Bridge, allow me to say that this department seems to a certain extent to have forestalled your advice that the difference of opinion be referred to disinterested parties, for in advance of the printing of this editorial statement I had referred the entire negotiations to the Board of Estimate for reference to the Transit Committee. I trust that this will be entirely satisfactory to you, as that reference will lay the matter before the committee primarily responsible in so far as the Board of Estimate is responsible for the dual contracts, and I note that you say in closing "that there is more need of the civic statesmanship shown in the dual contracts than a vigilance in bill collecting."

Much as I dislike to make any statement which might seem provocative, and keenly as I realize the fairness and temperateness with which you treat city affairs, I feel that I must say that "vigilance in bill collecting" flly and inaptly expresses the attitude of a city official who, as a matter of duty, insists upon certain questions of principle which are regarded by the administration as a whole as of vital necessity to the city.

F. J. H. KRACKE,
Commissioner of Bridges.

New York, July 29, 1915.

Mr. Brandeis on Woman Suffrage.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Not only the people of New York but millions throughout the country are anxiously watching the campaign in your State for equal suffrage.

Experience has shown that the American ideal of democracy and social justice requires for its fulfillment that women be granted the suffrage. My own experience in various movements with which I have been connected, and which I have tried to solve in some small way, economic and political problems that presented themselves from time to time converted me. As years have passed I have become more and more impressed with the difficulty and complexity of those problems and also with the power of society to solve them; but I am convinced that for their solution we must look to the many, not to the few. We need all the people, women as well as the men. In the democracy which is to solve these problems we must have not a part of society, but the whole.

The insight which women have shown into problems that men did not and perhaps could not understand has convinced me not only that women should have the ballot but that society demands that they exercise the right. LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

A Ford Highway.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Ford has revolutionized the automobile industry of the world. He has made it possible for the farmer, the merchant, the banker, the manufacturer, the rich and the poor, to own and enjoy the profits and pleasures of the motor vehicle. Is it not now in his province to go a step further and revolutionize the building of highways and good roads throughout the country, and to become the nation's greatest benefactor?

The Forrest Highway and others are all products of public spirited citizens, conceived for the upbuilding of the country, but incidentally promoting the necessity and demand for automobiles, particularly Ford automobiles. Would it not, therefore, be entirely fitting and quite appropriate if the Ford Motor Company could devise a way to participate in these great highway movements, to utilize their concentrated millions to a greater advantage to all owners of Ford automobiles? Why not a Ford Highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific? A Ford Highway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, and a Forrest Highway from Rome, Ga., to Birmingham, Ala.?

H. A. WHEELING, Secretary,
Forrest Highway Association.

A Broken-Hearted Dog.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Dog Lover" knows but little of dogs if he thinks they discriminate between the sexes in their affection. In answer to his skeptical query I will tell of a tarrier belonging to a family, one member of which was a confirmed invalid. The dog spent much of his time with her lying beside her on the floor or on the foot of the bed. When she died he lay outside her closed door for a fortnight and would not stir from it. He cried pitifully, as the sorrowing sister told me, and at the end of the two weeks died of no discoverable ailment. Undoubtedly he died of grief. M. L. H.

A Word on Noise.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If a "word" would have any effect on the hideous noise caused by the newsboys, as George Andrews suggests, I beg him to speak the word. Again and again I have tried to live in New York City, but the ramous voices of the newsboys, (generally full-grown men of foreign birth,) calling extras have driven me always back to Jersey.

THE STRANGE CHILD HEART OF GERMANY.

A People Unused to the Bitterness of World Discipline, Proud, Yearning, Naive, Now Racked and Torn by Vindictive Passions.

By J. GEORGE FREDERICK.

New York, Aug. 7, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I ask we pause for a few minutes to peer into the inner chambers of the German heart, so that we may perhaps have light on what seems incomprehensible?

Yesterday a German of the highest representative type—with whom for months I have debated the issues of the war—despondently refused my week-end invitation and said with tears in his eyes that his dearest friend in Germany had recently fallen in battle, and his father was losing his mind over the war. He produced a letter written in Germany maintaining with almost fanatical insistence that Germany was an instrument in the hands of God, a "child of the infinite" for the salvation of the world. Like a deep religion he devoutly believed it, with the trusting faith of a child.

For the first time since the start of the war there flashed upon me a vision of the inner chambers of the German heart, the true composition of that world marvel of temperament which has confused us with a contradictory mixture of value and inhuman menace. I saw that its ideas came from those to whose authority it was obedient. I saw that the German heart was essentially a child heart; was stormed in soul with the swift and vindictive passions of childhood; now bubbling with friendliness, now rent with hatred. I divined in this German child heart an utter innocence of understanding of aught save the passions that racked him; whose argument was invective not logic, yet who, for all that, was yearning behind that bitter mask to be enfolded in the comforting arms of a friendly, forgiving world. High-strung and proud beyond words, he was like a child who, half in innocence, has committed an atrocity; unable to bring himself to see or admit it or ask pardon for it, but cruelly torn in heart that he is made to suffer punishment and isolation for deeds whose significance he does not realize.

The German heart, it seems to me, in one sense, is being subjected to an unnatural and unfair strain, as of a child being compelled to meet the stern standards and judgments devised for adults—and this time adults not its own parents and masters in Germany, but strange new adults of the whole world. Precocious, imperious, self-conscious, and self-centred as any child inevitably is, it is spiritually a crime that Germany in these, her own hours of spiritual childhood, scars her body so badly because her juvenile incorrigibility must at last force upon her the elder parental discipline of the word's adult standards.

But oh, that there had been some magic of pedagogy which might have kept her from the last resource of the international ferrule! Oh, that there had been more parental wisdom for the bending of the young nation to a gentler humanity! Germany, I protest, is naught but a child in every aspect of her history and character. As the youngest of the modern civilized family she has been the most admired, the most precociously efficient; but at heart her years determined her soul-quality—she cannot yet project herself into other souls. Like the child she is, her own feelings, her own desires absolutely dominate her so that she cannot even see or sense anything else. This is the very essence of childhood—it is unsocialized. We ourselves in America are but striplings, perhaps only partially emerged from the same childhood. This war, perhaps, is the natal day of our own manhood, in its realizing projections of ourselves into the old world's miseries.

I beg that the German actions and words be henceforth viewed in this light (at worst) of willful childhood; that her folklore, her naïvete, her delightful holiday customs, and domesticity be remembered as signs of her innately juvenile heart, and that we understand even that her militarism is at worst a crude boyish strutting in armor, without the deeply sinister adult responsibility which similar actions on the part of older nations might imply. It is the grave—but do not let us say the vengeful—duty of the adult civilized world to teach and hold the child to high standards. But may we also remember the greater responsibilities of adulthood and not forget to love in the midst of our mutual pain. J. GEORGE FREDERICK.

EDUCATION AWRY.

A Criticism of its Values, Standards, and Modern Tendencies.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

College entrance requirements appear to be drifting into an exaggerated importance. The movement for uniform and higher standards of admission to college has been greatly serviceable, but as is commonly true in the case of needed reforms, it seems likely to go too far. The object of prescribed entrance requirements is merely to fit students to take profitably the courses of study which are offered by the college. But at present the prescribed preparatory courses are controlled in their method and issue by the necessity of getting the student safely into college. The result is a species of cram and superficiality. The subjects are not taught with the old-time care and thoroughness; the student is rushed through the course. For example, Caesar, Cicero, and Virgil are required in Latin. The student all too frequently comes up with his certificate covering the prescribed books and orations, but with deficient knowledge of the Latin forms and syntax. The English literature courses are so much easier to teach than the drill courses in practical English composition that the student can tell you about the plays of Shakespeare or the Speech on Conciliation, but is uncertain in the use of the language himself.

In view of the very small percentage of high school students who pass into the college course, the domination of the high school course by the college appears to be unwarranted; certainly the emphasis upon college preparation is too heavy. The science subjects upon which Herbert Spencer and Huxley years ago insisted as imparting all the discipline of the older subjects, with high practical values in addition, have not really yielded in experience the results which we were expecting from them. It may be granted, furthermore, that the older subjects continue, in a measure at least, to yield valuable results in mental training. Possibly no better apparatus for the development of accuracy and the rational faculty has been found than the Latin syntax. On the other hand, it appears absurd on the face of the matter that the enormous multiplication of the subjects of human interest and the activities of human life should be well nigh unrepresented in the only courses of study to which 95 per cent. of the school population are wholly confined.

The movement in favor of a citizen soldiery I cannot bring myself heartily to approve. I hope I am not an extreme pacifist. We must adjust ourselves to the actual world situation. It is unsafe to settle national policies upon the dreams of idealists. Accordingly, we shall continue to need a national army to do police duty, but the size of that army ought to be severely restricted to the actual national necessity. We want no half dozen soldiers riding the back of the producer. We want no superciliousness and arrogance of the soldier toward the civilian, no more of the glamour of the military career and the tawdry magnificence of gold braid and the dress parade. And so, while meeting with prudence and sanity the real needs of the country, (Japanese and German invasions are the absurdest of jingo dreams,) we do not require military discipline in our high schools. I should say that we ought to reverse our present policy of educating our boys in the war spirit, which with sedulous care we cultivate in all the lower stages of the education process. With its sham instruments of drum, toy pistol, and tin sword we infuse it as a dominating influence in the boy's play. With its formal, mechanical, and coercive discipline we enthrone it too commonly, as I venture to think, in the youth's education. Unless this habit is changed, the successive generations will continue to think first of the arbitrament of the sword.

High Heels.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a man's folly and there is a woman's folly. The latter seems to name for its specialty the courting of trouble in pursuit of an object in itself laudable. For example, a journalist in a recent article relating her experiences on the firing line in Flanders in pursuit of news, tells us that she was forced to walk many miles over rough, miry roads on account of the breaking down of her automobile, and that this walking became an ever-increasing torture because she was wearing high-heeled shoes.

Why, in common sense, do not women dress the part they play? If they know that high-heeled shoes are unnatural and impractical on a military highway in wartime, why can't they realize that the difference is one of degree only in everyday life? Add to this the fact that such shoes are hideously inartistic and unhygienic, throwing the spinal column out of line and destroying all grace of carriage, and the case against them would seem to be convincing. But no! The vogue of French heels is even on the increase. The shopgirl who stands all day wears them; the nursemaid who trundles the baby wears them, and even my laundress wears them as she stands at the tubs. Why condemn the "lily-footed Chinese" for binding her toes if we also deform our feet and by so much decrease our usefulness? Greek women knew naught of high heels, and it would seem reasonably safe to follow their rules for beauty and freedom of motion.

ON ENGLISH DECADENCE.

Poor of London Like the Poor Elsewhere, Only More Petted.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A few years ago, while residing in the neighborhood of Gramercy Park, New York, I watched a number of old women who, early each morning, shuffled their miserable way along the railing guarding the park, now and then raising the covers of the garbage pails ranged along the sidewalk, and helping themselves to the contents.

Had this disgusting and pathetic spectacle occurred in London or Liverpool and been witnessed by a certain type of American writer it might have been deemed good material for an article denouncing the callousness of the upper classes of England, and enlarging upon the unspeakable wretchedness of the poor of that land. Such incidents, however, to one who has studied the matter, are no more typical of general conditions in this country than are the child labor scandals of the South, or than the illiteracy of the mountaineers of Tennessee and Kentucky is representative of the percentage of uneducated working people of America.

One is moved to amazement at the utterances of Mrs. Atherton during an interview published in the Magazine Section of THE TIMES on Sunday, July 25. The England which she describes may have been that of a century ago—even this is doubtful; but it is most assuredly not of the present generation. I have lived and worked among the poor of England and of America for many years, and it seems to me that there is little difference between them, except that in this country the working people are daily educated in the belief that they are superior to and more prosperous than those of any other country in the world, while those of England are continually pitied and petted. To judge the working people of a nation by those of the slums in a great city is to do grave injustice to a government and its people. There are probably more foreigners in London than in New York—immigration, in times of peace, being less restricted in the former than in the latter city—so that London slums are recruited from the derelicts of the whole world. Abject poverty is usually the aftermath of drunkenness and shiftlessness wherever found.

I should like to know by whose authority Mrs. Atherton makes her statement concerning the coercion of the English working man in war time and of his willingness to be conquered by Germany. From a less distinguished woman this would be laughable, It is true that the Britcn needs to visit other countries before he is able to appreciate his own, but does not Mrs. Atherton know that even more than his ale the Englishman values his liberty of speech, and that not for the wealth of the Indies would he barter the right in time of peace to cont

HOPES TO DEVELOP AMERICAN DRAMA

Augustus Thomas Suggests the Amateur Writers Work in Sectional Groups.

MENTORS TO DIRECT THEM

Playwright Says War Has Paralyzed Foreign Stage—An Opportunity for Novices.

Augustus Thomas, who has been made artistic director of the company formed to carry on the work of Charles Frohman, is interested in the development of the American drama. One of the first American dramatists, he is just now more deeply interested than ever because his new position has made it incumbent upon him to get plays of merit, and the dearth of available material, because of the war, has quite naturally turned the producers' attention to home sources.

Mr. Thomas yesterday told of a plan which he thought would have a far-reaching effect on the dramatic output of this country.

"Since last August playwriting has been extinguished in seven nations," said Mr. Thomas. "The theatres of six countries are closed. Previous to last August 60 per cent. of the dramas, comedies and operettas shown on the American stage came from Europe and England. America, which has always made the greatest demand of all countries for theatre entertainment, must hereafter produce its own supply. Playwriting is paralyzed throughout Europe for five or ten years to come. Except the few plays we have from Maugham, Barrie, Pinero, Besler, Chambers and Morton, no plays will even come out of England for years to come.

"But in this fact is the American playwright's golden opportunity. Not since the night the first theatre in America threw open its doors have the writers of American comedies, satires, farces and musical operettas been yielded such an absolutely clear field. A nation of 80,000,000 must hereafter look exclusively to its own writers for its theatre entertainment. As the art directing head of the huge Frohman institution, I am fully realized that for many years to come there is an end to the practice of managers seeking plays abroad. This, therefore, enforces the policy of hastening the development of home products.

Stimulus for Americans.

"The total paralysis of playwriting in Europe is one reason behind my plan for stimulating American playwriting, but it is only one reason," Mr. Thomas continued.

"I have long held and frequently expressed the opinion that the potential dramatist is first a newspaper man, because the newspaper man has that indispensable training, not elsewhere found, in dialogue, in character study, and has the flare for the dramatic. I believe that the future of the American drama has its finest promise in such products as shall come directly from the soil; such stories as shall be indigenous to the communities which they express. Our country is so large that we may never produce what may be definitely called 'The Great American Play,' but the various sections are so distinctive and individual that many great sectional plays will be evolved.

"The material for these plays now lies in the minds and may be on the tables of many ambitious young men in the local rooms of the newspapers, but no method has been perfected as yet be devised for calling this material into shape' the theatre and the nation will be the gainers.

"Allow me to illustrate my theory by example. During the last Winter, after lecturing before Professor Baker's class in drama at Harvard, I made a second visit to the university for the purpose of working in collaboration with the students. We proceeded on the assumption that a definite order had been received from a manager for a play. Then the class was divided to the task; decided upon the actor or actress for whom the play was to be written; started with either a suggestion or an idea and built a working scenario leading from that idea.

"The experiment was successful, and in two morning sessions of three hours each, Professor Baker's class of thirty-five produced what can be recorded as an excellent story for a play.

"The story was left in the custody of the class, which was to appoint a small committee for its amplification into a proper play.

Experiments at Harvard.

"The reported result of the experiment was so heartily received by the Society of American Dramatists that the society voted to try similar experiments among its own members; and for several consecutive Saturday nights during the season those members met and worked after the same fashion, first under my leadership and then under others. In this work two stories were evolved and given to committees for their development into plays.

"These dramatist pot-boilers have not yet made their appearance and the committees of dramatists appointed to work upon them were not always in agreement, but something more valuable than the production of the pot-boilers resulted from the collaboration. Some members of the committee decided to work on their own account on the stories presented; others began to work in pairs, which is perhaps the most satisfactory allotment for collaboration, but the whole society was energized by the idea, and its various members went to work with renewed vigor.

"The success of the experiment at Harvard and in the Dramatists' Society, and especially the practicability of work in that manner, indicate that if in centres of the great sections, let us say, Philadelphia, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Paul, Chicago, New Orleans, Boston, St. Louis, Detroit, and other cities, a sufficient number of newspaper men could be found to form a little working coterie to which company I or others might come who are familiar with the work such a company of writers could successfully collaborate upon a play. I do not think that this play would necessarily be great or even successful, but I do believe that after it was produced the men who had been instructed by its production would employ the same methods to make plays of their own subjects about which they no doubt feel deeply and are thoroughly informed."

DEFIES DIVORCE DECREE.

Mrs. Morse Notifies District Attorney She Has Married Again.

District Attorney Perkins yesterday refused to say what action, if any, he would take with regard to the "challenge" issued to him by Mrs. Gurney T. Morse, who wrote a letter to the newspapers on Saturday evening saying that she had remarried again in defiance of a court order. The District Attorney said he knew nothing about the matter except the bare notice he had seen in the papers, and could make no statement until the matter was called to his attention through some official information. Mrs. Morse—the name of her new husband is not known with certainty—says she was divorced in New York State and forbidden to remarry, but has decided to do so anyway. "According to the law," says Mrs. Morse, "I have committed bigamy, and I challence the District Attorney to prosecute."

But legal authorities said yesterday that, from the data at hand, what Mrs. Morse had done might be only contempt of court, and might be no crime at all. It is presumed that the District Attorney's office will begin an investigation today.

The elusive Mrs. Morse, who escaped on Saturday night from reporters who were waiting for her in the lobby of her apartment house at 547 Riverside Drive by climbing to the roof, getting out through the skylight, dropping eight feet to the roof of the next house, and walking down the stairs of that building to the street, completely disappeared yesterday. It was understood that just before she had refused to see reporters she had had a telephone conversation with a man named McReynolds and had made arrangements to go with him to Kingston, N. Y.

The belief was held that the McReynolds who had telephoned her was the man she had just married in defiance of the court order, and this was strengthened by the statement in her letter that her new husband was "a lawyer of great ability and distinguished family, related on his father's side to a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and on his mother's side to a recent Ambassador to England." It is supposed that the reference is to United States Supreme Court Justice McReynolds and Joseph H. Choate, but neither of these nor any members of their families could be reached yesterday to find out if they had any such relative.

Efforts to find Mrs. Morse and her husband in Kingston and vicinity were unavailing. She left her apartment hatless and without baggage. Her apartment was found topsy turvy yesterday, and all property had been removed except a suitcase, packed full, which was lying in a room underneath a window opening on the street, where she had dropped it yesterday on finding that reporters were waiting outside. No trace of her could be found. The woman's statement that she had entertained Mrs. Pankhurst on one of her visits here could not be confirmed from any source, and women prominent in suffrage councils said they had never heard of Mrs. Morse.

ENGLISH THEATRES POPULAR

Lynn Harding Says Soldiers on Leave Want to be Amused.

Lynn Harding, the English actor, arrived yesterday on the White Star liner Lapland to play the part of Svengali in Joseph Brook's revival of "Trilby" this season.

"The theatres and music halls in England are doing a better business today," Mr. Harding said, "than they did twelve months ago, because the cities are filled with officers and soldiers on leave from the front, and they want to see something cheerful. They do not want to see war plays. Away from London the places of amusement are packed nightly, if the shows are good. Hundreds of promising young actors have enlisted and have gone to the front."

ATTACKS ROCKEFELLERS.

Pinchot Wants Government to Buy and Run Colorado Mines.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 8 — Gifford Pinchot tonight proposed that the United States buy the mining properties in Colorado owned by John D. Rockefeller and work them as public claims as a means of settling definitely the labor strife there. The proposal was made at a meeting held in the City Hall Plaza to protest against the sentence to life imprisonment of John R. Lawson, President of the Colorado Miners' Union. The demonstration was under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ.

Labor leaders, including Samuel Gompers and Frank Morrison, respectively President and Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, and the Rev. Dr. Samuel Batton, Chairman of the Church Federation, condemned the sentencing of Lawson and attacked the integrity of the Colorado courts, declaring that they were dominated by the Rockefeller interests. Mr. Pinchot called the conviction a "travesty on justice." Both he and William Green, Secretary-Treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America, advocated prison bars for John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

"If Lawson is guilty, not for actual murder but for leading the striking miners, then Mr. Rockefeller, as the leader and employer of murdering gunmen, should be in a cell, the same as Lawson," they proclaimed, while the crowd cheered.

REV. G. D. HADLEY STRICKEN.

Jersey City Rector, Operated On at Hanover, N. H., Near Death.

Members of St. John's Episcopal Church in Summit Avenue, Jersey City, were shocked last night when it was announced from the pulpit that the Rev. George D. Hadley, their rector, who is spending his vacation near Hanover, N. H., was not expected to survive an operation he had undergone for a ruptured appendix.

Mr. Hadley was out horseback riding Thursday afternoon, when he suddenly complained of severe pains in his side. Before he could get home the agony grew so intense that he had to be taken from his horse. He was placed in an automobile and, accompanied by Mrs. Hadley and his brother, Irving H. Hadley, was rushed at top speed to the hospital at Hanover, where an operation was performed by Dr. Gile, assisted by Drs. Silver and Stetson.

Mr. Hadley was very much interested in civic movements. He is Chairman of the Social Service Committee of the Jersey City Chamber of Commerce.

DETAIN RICH PASSENGER.

Vancouver Man, Crippled by Rheumatism, Held for Examination.

William A. Anderson, a wealthy resident of Vancouver, British Columbia, who returned yesterday from England on the White Star liner Lapland, was detained, by the orders of the United States public health officials, for examination by the Medical Board at Ellis Island today, on account of his being a cripple and liable to become a public charge.

Immigration Inspector H. A. Snyder, who had the case, said he could do nothing in the matter, as Dr. Brooks of the Federal service had ordered Mr. Anderson to be held for examination.

In his explanation to the immigration officer Mr. Anderson said that he had been living in Vancouver for eighteen years and crossed to Liverpool sixteen months ago on the Baltic, to have his right foot operated upon. While over there, owing to the dampness of the climate, he contracted rheumatism, which had settled in his right leg and crippled him so that he had to use crutches. He hoped to recover the use of his leg after he got back to the Pacific Coast.

The passenger was indignant at first when he was informed by Purser W. Grenside that he would have to remain on board all night and go to Ellis Island today for examination, but recovered his spirits with the hope that he would be released and permitted to start for Vancouver tonight. His baggage had been placed on the pier and examined, but on application being made to the customs official in charge he was allowed to have it taken back on the ship for the night.

PUBLIC LIBRARY GETS LEGACY OF $100,000

Money Had Been Willed by James Hood Wright to Old Washington Heights Library.

FRIENDLY SUIT WAS STARTED

Referee's Report Shows Knickerbocker Hospital Will Get $580,000 from the Estate.

Phoenix Ingraham, as referee, has decided, in his report just filed in the Supreme Court, that the New York Public Library is entitled to $100,000 out of the estate of James Hood Wright, who died in November, 1894. The report shows, too, that there is approximately $580,000 that is soon to be paid to the Knickerbocker Hospital at Amsterdam Avenue and 131st Street, the legal title for what is commonly known as the J. Hood Wright Hospital.

The case involved the construction of the Wright will, the history of the old Washington Heights Library, the power of the New York Public Library, (including the Tilden, Astor and Lenox foundations,) to take the old library over bodily and all the benefits that went with the old institution. The decision is of importance particularly because it establishes the right of one institution, performing the functions of another that it takes over, to enjoy all the benefits and advantages that belong to the institution taken over.

The Supreme Court referred the matter to Mr. Ingraham upon the application of Mary R. Wright, the widow, as trustee with others, to have the estate cleared up after the death of Miss Elizabeth J. Wright, the sister of the testator, who died in June, 1913.

It is recited in the report that Miss Wright's interest in her brother's estate consisted of the income for life from a trust fund of one-third of the residuary estate, which amounted at the time of her death to $820,000. Out of this, under the will, certain legacies, including the $100,000 in dispute, were to be paid, and the remainder to go to the Knickerbocker Hospital, which at the time of Miss Wright's death possessed the legal title of the Manhattan Dispensary. The report shows that $140,000 of these legacies have been paid, and that the trustees have approximately $680,000 in their hands ready to dispose of according to the order of the court.

Referee Ingraham after deciding in favor of the New York Library incorporates in his report that portion of the Wright will bequeathing the money to the old Washington Heights Library, and interpreting which, the referee says:

"The controlling factor in the construction and interpretation of a will is the intent of the testator, and if that intent can lawfully be carried out this should be done regardless of technicalities, and this principle is familiar and has often been announced and stated in various terms by the law."

Mr. Ingraham then relates the history of the old library and Mr. Wright's fondness for the institution which he practically supported entirely during his lifetime. Mr. Ingraham says:

"Prior to and at the time of the death of Mr. Wright, the Washington Heights Library was a corporation maintaining a free circulating library at the corner of 156th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, in a building rented for that purpose. From about the year 1875 Mr. Wright had been interested in this library and had been for many years before his death its principal financial supporter. By an order of the Supreme Court, dated Aug. 24, 1896, the corporation assumed the name of Washington Heights Free Library."

Referee Ingraham then quotes the Tilden act of 1901, showing that the New York Public Library has the power to take over other libraries, and "it was also provided that the New York Public Library should have power to hold and enjoy and dispose of the property so conveyed to it; that any devise or bequest contained in a will to any corporation conveying its property under that act, whether made before or after such conveyance, should not fail by reason of such conveyance, but the same should inure to the benefit of the New York Public Library."

In October, 1901, the Washington Heights Free Library, pursuant to the terms of the Tilden act, conveyed all its property to the New York Public Library. The State Regents approved the conveyance, the report recites, and the New York Public Library continued to maintain a free library on the St. Nicholas Avenue site until 1914.

In concluding the decision, the referee says:

"Furthermore, I agree with the contention of the New York Public Library that the interest of the Washington Heights Library under this will was a vested one and capable of being transferred to another corporation performing the conditions of the gift."

Another important question is also decided by the referee in the matter of stock of the Guaranty Trust Company held by the estate. Originally there were 250 shares of the stock of the old New York Guaranty and Indemnity Company, the predecessor of the Guaranty Trust Company, held by the estate. When the new company took the place of the old, and later, under a new issue of stock by the new company, the trustees of the estate bought an aggregate of $42,500 worth of the new stock, it was placed in the corpus of the estate. Referee Ingraham decides that this action of the trustees was proper and that the principal of the estate should get the new stock and the increased valuation that comes from it. It was contended for the sake of clearing up the legal point that increased valuation should accrue to the life beneficiaries of the estate.

TO AID NAVY ADVISERS.

Aeronautic Engineers Name H. A. Wise Wood and E. A. Sperry.

The American Society of Aeronautic Engineers, recently organized at the request of Thomas A. Edison, yesterday appointed Henry A. Wise Wood and Elmer A. Sperry, together with a Special Committee, to serve on the Navy Advisory Board. Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels requested the Society to make the appointments, and Mr. Wood and Mr. Sperry were chosen because of their knowledge and wide experience in the various branches of aeronautics.

Their co-operating committee consists of Orville Wright, Glenn H. Curtiss, W. Starling Burgess and Charles M. Manly, who will be consulted on matters pertaining to the construction of aeroplanes and aeronautical motors; Peter Cooper Hewitt, John Hays Hammond, Jr., and Joseph A. Steinmetz will advise on the application of aircraft to modern warfare; and Captain Thomas A. Baldwin, A. Leo Stevens, Ralph H. Upson and Raymond B. Price will take care of the dirigible balloon and parachute fields.

Messrs. Wood and Sperry were chosen by vote and were the choice of more than eight-tenths of the 200 members of the society. Mr. Wood is a son of former Mayor Wood of this city, and is President of the American Society of Aeronautical Engineers, Inc. Vice President of the Aero Club of America, and was appointed a member of the Aerodynamics Laboratory Committee by former President Taft in 1912. Mr. Sperry is Vice President of the society, a member of the Aero Club and the father of the Sperry gyroscope stabilizer for aeroplanes, which received the first prize of $10,000 in June, 1914, given by the French Government.

OKUMA KEEPS OFFICE, FORMS NEW CABINET

Japanese Premier, at Special Request of the Emperor, Reconsiders Purpose to Retire.

TOKIO, Aug. 8.—Premier Count Okuma has decided, at the special request of the Emperor, to remain in office, and has arranged the following Cabinet:

Premier—Count SHIGENOBU OKUMA.
Minister of Foreign Affairs—Count SHIGENOBU OKUMA.
Minister of Finance—TOKITOSHI TAKETOMI.
Minister of Marine—Vice Admiral TOMOSABURO KATO.
Minister of War—Lieut. Gen. ICHINOSUKE OKA.
Minister of Justice—YUKIO OZAKI.
Minister of Communications—KATSUNDO MINOURA or Viscount MASAKATA SENGOKU.
Minister of Commerce and Agriculture—HIRONAKA KONO.
Minister of Education—S. TAKATA.
Minister of the Interior—KITOKURO ICHIKI.

The assumption by Count Okuma of the Foreign Ministry, following the declination of Takaaki Kato to retain that portfolio, is to be temporary, pending the selection of a permanent Minister.

The Association of Okuma Supporters has sent circulars throughout the country urging that support be accorded to Premier Okuma on the ground that his ideal is to make Japan a nation of foremost rank, capable of competing with the most powerful countries. The Count, the circulars say, resigned because the allegations of election bribery created a situation repugnant to one of his lofty principles, but nevertheless he was unwilling to be a cause of concern to the Emperor, who had asked him to remain in office.

Notwithstanding the pressure brought to bear on Count Okuma to retain his place, differences of opinion have sprung up among his supporters. The leaders of the Osaka branch of the Okuma organization sent a telegram to the Premier urging him to insist on retiring.

The appointments for the War, Justice, and Commerce portfolios are the same as in the Cabinet which resigned on July 30 in consequence of charges of election irregularities affecting members of the Government. Vice Admiral Kato, named for Minister of Marine, was Admiral Togo's Chief of Staff in the battle of the Sea of Japan, and last year was appointed Commander in Chief of the First Japanese Squadron. Mr. Taketomi, selected for Minister of Finance, was Minister of Communications in the retired Cabinet, and M. Ichiki, named as Minister of the Interior, was Minister of Education.

M. Minoura, whose name is mentioned for Minister of Communications, has held several public offices and is editor of the Hochi Shimbun. Viscount Sengoku, alternative choice for this place, is a member of the House of Peers and a manufacturer, and formerly was Secretary of the Home Office. M. Takata, designated Minister of the Interior, is Dean of Waseda University and a member of the Higher Educational Council.

POSTPONE ELECTION OF HAITIAN PRESIDENT

Minor Disorders Are Reported and Marines Capture Bandit Chief.

PORT AU PRINCE, Aug. 8.—Election by the Haitian Parliament of a President of the republic, to take the place of General Vilbrun Guillaume, who was removed from the French Legation by a mob on July 28 and shot to death, which was to have taken place today, was postponed indefinitely.

The American naval force at Croix-des-Bouquets, near Port au Prince, repressed some disorder today on the part of a band of brigands. The chief of the band was taken a prisoner and placed on board the United States cruiser Washington.

Other disorders are reported to have occurred at St. Marc and Aux Cayes. Details are lacking.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Officials of the State and Navy Departments were greatly encouraged today by a telegram from Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, commanding the United States naval forces in Haitian waters.

The Admiral's dispatch stated that conditions in the island republic were improving, as a result of renewed confidence regarding the intentions of the United States toward the country on the part of the native officials.

Except for a slight disturbance at St. Marc, forty-four miles north of Port au Prince, the entire island was reported quiet. American marines were sent to St. Marc to restore order. Haitians in the coast towns, the Admiral said, exhibited the best of feeling toward the Americans, and were co-operating with the officers in charge. News from the interior also was said to be favorable.

Admiral Caperton will continue his efforts to disarm regular and revolutionary soldiers, as well as the civilian population.

Admiral Caperton announced that the proposed Presidential election had been postponed because the time was deemed inopportune for political excitement.

Rear Admiral Caperton reported tonight that he had taken over the administration of the customs office at Cape Haitien, and had placed Paymaster Charles Morris of the cruiser Washington temporarily in charge. No mention was made of the reported seizure of the customs office at Port au Prince.

Arrival of the Haitian gunboat Nord Alexis at Port au Prince with 800 disarmed Haitian soldiers was reported. The soldiers had pledged themselves to keep the peace

Bull Moose Leader Talks About District Attorney Fight.

George W. Perkins arrived home yesterday from Buffalo where he had gone to check a threatened stampede of local leaders of the Bull Moose Party to the Republican fold. He expressed himself as more confident than he has been in a long time that the Progressive Party is in good shape to make a hard fight in the next election. Of the return to the Republican Party of Frederick M. Davenport, last year's Bull Moose candidate for Governor, Mr. Perkins said:

"Mr. Davenport's withdrawal will not cause any let-up in the party's activities in this State. In my judgment, Progressives everywhere should not allow local conditions and elections to obscure the great national issues to be settled in the forthcoming election. Local questions should be met and decided so far as possible on the basis of each candidate's character and fitness for the office proposed, rather than on his party affiliations.

"Our one prime duty now is to prepare for the great national campaign of 1916, and in all things be careful that we do nothing to weaken, and everything possible to strengthen, our ability to be of real service to the country in solving its great national economic problems."

Mr. Perkins specified the office of District Attorney of New York County as one of those on which he believed the Bull Moose Party should fuse with other parties.

RAIN MARS MEETING AT THE GRANT TOMB

Veterans Among the 100 Gathered Were Forced from Shelter of Steps.

ARRANGEMENTS WERE POOR

Mrs. Anita C. Brooks in Charge of Commemoration of Thirtieth Anniversary of Burial.

A meeting to commemorate the thirtieth anniversary of the burial of General U. S. Grant was held late yesterday afternoon outside the tomb in Riverside Drive. There were about 100 spectators, including several veterans of the civil war, and because of the poor arrangements they passed an uncomfortable hour. Despite the heavy rainfall and the fact that no decorations or speakers' rostrum had been provided, they remained loyal until 5 o'clock, when they were ordered off the steps of the tomb, where they had been protected partly from the storm.

The program had not been completed at that time, but Captain George D. Burnside, the custodian of the tomb, announced that the official closing hour had arrived, and that he could not grant special privileges. Mrs. Anita C. Brooks, Honorary Vice President of the National Veterans' Relief Corps, who had charge of the exercises, pleaded in vain. She had obtained permission to hold the meeting from the Park and Police Departments, but she was forced to admit that she had not been in touch with the officials of the Monument Association, and Captain Burnside remained obdurate. The rain was falling in torrents, and the meeting was forced to disband.

It started at 4 o'clock, and was called to order by Bugler P. W. Hughes with a blast on his bugle. A prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Joseph F. Von Herrlich of Holyrood Chapel, and he was followed by Major James E. Gray, Lieutenant Commander of the Confederate Veterans' Camp, who eulogized General Grant for his treatment of the defeated army of the South. Then he introduced Mrs. Brooks.

It was at this point that Mrs. Brooks discovered the lack of a rostrum, and she had a park bench set in place. Just as she was about to start her address her attention was called to the fact that there were no decorations. She called a halt, and directed that a strip of bunting be swung between a cane and an umbrella. Again she began her address, and again she stopped abruptly.

"Oh, give me my suffrage flag," she called to a man on the outskirts of the crowd, who said he was J. H. Tracy of the Spanish War Veterans' Association. The flag was raised, with an umbrella as a pole.

When Mrs. Brooks had delivered her address she read a telegram from Rabbi E. B. Brown, the last surviving pallbearer at the Grant funeral; and then there was more trouble. Rabbi Brown could not leave his home in Georgia, and had sent his speech to be read. Mrs. Brooks said the speech would be read, but a Mr. Brooks, who had been detailed to that duty, could not be found.

Mrs. Brooks jumped down from the bench to investigate the delay and was informed that the speech had disappeared. She was told that nobody was willing to read it, because it attacked President Wilson.

Dr. Alexander Cumming, President of the University for Foreign America, spoke for seacoast protection. Other speakers were the Rev. Dr. W. A. Kirkwood of the Broadway Tabernacle and William Osborne McDowell of the League of Peace. Among the civil war veterans in the audience were Colonel H. S. Boorman of the American Legion of Honor and Elwood Hales of U. S. Grant Post, 29. He is 91 years old.

DOUBLE VICTORY FOR BROOKLYN—NATIONAL REGATTA ENTRIES—YACHTING—ATHLETICS—TENNIS

BROOKLYN CLIMBS TO SECOND PLACE

Double Victory Over Chicago Brings Superbas Close to the Phillies.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—The Cubs were unable to cope with the rejuvenated Dodgers this afternoon and dropped both games of a double header to the visitors, who went to second place in the league race. The first game went to Brooklyn by a score of 10 to 7, and the second, which went to eleven innings before it was halted, resulted in a second victory for the visitors by a score of 5 to 4. In the first game the visitors boosted their batting averages at the expense of Vaughn and Zabel. Neither one of these pitchers was able to cause a cessation in the stick work of the Dodgers and runs were counted up against the Cubs without any apparent difficulty.

Douglas, who was on the mound for Brooklyn, held his opponents under control until the ninth and then his weakening gave Brooklyn a fearful scare. Five hits were obtained in succession, and Sherrod Smith was sent to the slab to stop the fusillade that tumbled four runs across the plate.

The second game was a different kind of a struggle and it was Jake Daubert's double in the eleventh inning that paved the way to Brooklyn's victory. He was the first man up in this frame, and trotted to the plate with the winning run, as a result of two long flies, one by Wheat and the other by Stengel. Nap Rucker pitched eight innings of this game, when he made way for a pinch hitter.

After the first game had started, Hank O'Day made his reappearance as an umpire. He was appointed while the game was in progress and appeared on the field about the middle of the first game.

By dropping both ends of the program the Cubs fell back to third place, trailing Brooklyn by one contest. The score:

O'DAY BACK IN HARNESS.

President Tener Reappoints Former Umpire to His Old Position.

CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—Henry "Hank" O'Day, veteran umpire, today was reappointed by John K. Tener, President of the National League. President Tener was in a box seat at the start of the first game of the Brooklyn-Chicago double header, and when Umpire Quigley took the field to officiate single-handed, President Tener sent word to O'Day to come to his box, where they conferred a few minutes. O'Day then hurried away for his umpiring regalia and returned in the fourth inning of the initial game, and officiated as arbitrator on bases. He was given a rousing welcome by the "fans," who applauded him for fully ten minutes.

Braves Fall Before St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—St. Louis overwhelmed three Boston pitchers in the opening game of their series here today and won, 7 to 2, the world champions losing their fourth straight game. Ragon was hit for three runs in the first inning. He was succeeded by Hughes, who granted but two hits in five innings. Davis entered the box in the eighth and three hits, including a home run, off him gave the locals four more runs. A ninth-inning rally saved Stallings's team from a shut-out. Score:

GIANTS WIN AT DETROIT.

New York Nationals Shut Out S. & S. Team Before Big Crowd.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Aug. 8.—The Giants jumped to Detroit from Cincinnati this afternoon and played an exhibition game with the S. & S., a semi-professional team of this city, which they won by a 4-to-0 score. Manager McGraw used two pitchers, Schupp and Ritter. This is the first time the Giants have shown here, and that they are popular in Detroit was shown by the crowd at Mack Park, which numbered well over 5,000.

One run would have been enough for the Giants to win the game, for both Schupp and Ritter gave but few hits. Both sides had men on bases almost continually, but the pitchers tightened in the pinches and, aided by brilliant fielding, kept the score low. The score:

Phillies Bat Five Pitchers.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Aug. 8.—In a heavy hitting contest today Philadelphia won the first game of the series from Cincinnati, 14 to 6. Cravath, with four doubles, brought in eight runs and scored three times himself. Mollwitz made a triple and three singles out of four times at bat. Alexander was hit hard, but on account of Philadelphia's big lead was never in danger and was taken out at the end of the eighth. The locals worked five pitchers, all of whom were wild. Score:

FEDERALS TO CUT PRICES EVERYWHERE

Experiment in Newark Yesterday Attracted 18,000 — Gilmore Pleased with Result.

Within a short time the Federal League will make the important announcement that a policy of popular priced baseball will be adopted in all eight cities of the independent circuit. That means 10 cents for the bleachers, 25 cents for the pavilions and 50 cents for the grand stand. This innovation was practically decided upon by President Gilmore after he and several other Federal League officials witnessed the big crowd which went to the Newark Park at Harrison yesterday at the reduced prices of admission. The attendance was more than 18,000.

On the 10-cent admission to the bleachers, President Gilmore and his associates expect to make the basis of their future fight against organized baseball. The two major leagues have expected something of this sort for some time, but they hardly expected that the independent league would take such a radical financial step as this.

President Gilmore said at the Waldorf last night that the wholesale reduction of prices did not mean any reduction of the Federal League players' salary or any falling off in the standard of the ball they have been playing. One of the Federal League owners said last night that negotiations were already under way with seven prominent major league players whose contracts expire at the close of the present season.

The Federal League is making its fight now on the supposition that the feeling off of interest in baseball this season is because the prices are too high. It is the result of an economic condition, President Gilmore says, which is noticeable in the whole commercial world. He said that at yesterday's game in Newark 60 per cent. of those in the 10-cent bleachers were men. In the 25-cent pavilion it was necessary to stop selling tickets. Only one game of the double-header with Kansas City was played, the rain stopping the second one.

The Federal League President is determined to put a stop to the practice of pitchers discoloring the new balls as they are put into play, and has made a new rule under which a violation will be punishable with a $50 fine.

President Gilmore and President Harry F. Sinclair will go to Boston this week to look over the new park of the Boston Braves before deciding on the plans for the proposed park to be built in this city.

Newark Scores Enough Runs in the First Inning to Beat Kansas City.

Another Jersey City Rumor.

While it was officially denied last night that there was any probability of the Jersey City Club being transferred to New London, another rumor concerning the International League supplanted it. This was to the effect that at the close of the present season the Harrisburg Club would be transferred back to its old home in Newark and the Jersey City Club would be placed in Harrisburg. It was said that the financial obligations of the former Newark Club practically necessitated a return to the old home. Mr. Barrow of the International League will probably repudiate all of this, but it is what is being talked about.

EVERS WON'T QUIT TEAM.

Captain of the Braves Says He Needs a Rest,

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—"They've almost got my goat, but I'm going to stick it out," declared Johnny Evers, Captain of the Boston Braves today, when he was asked if the report that he would quit the game for the season at the end of the present series with the St. Louis was authentic.

"I can't quit the team," he declared, "although I want a rest and I need it. But Gaffney has been too square with me and so has Stallings and the club has too much money invested in me for me to lie down at this stage of the game. I can't afford it. The club needs me. But I'm sick, mentally and physically. I'm still weak from that attack of pneumonia last Winter, and my leg is still sore. I have to bandage it every day and I can't play like I used to in this condition.

"But that's not the thing that worries me. It's the fight the papers are making on me, and especially in Pittsburgh, where it is bitterest. I'm not a dirty gutter rat and roughneck, and I can't stand for people to think so. I have a family, and I don't want them and my friends to think that. I fight on the ball team—I mean verbally—but in the years I've been in baseball I've never done any dirty trick toward another player. I've never spiked a man and I don't resort to that sort of tactics.

"I don't mind the fans riding me. I like it, because I take it that they're 'kidding,' but these things in black and white hurt a man. If I were well and strong physically I wouldn't mind it, but my present physical condition is against me. But I'll stick it out as long as possible. I'm going on East with the team, and after we get back home, if I can take some sort of rest for a few days now and then, I may get along all right."

DE PALMA LOSES RACE.

New Time Sheet Places Mulford in Lead for Des Moines Contest.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Aug. 8.—An investigation into awarding of prizes in Des Moines's tragic 300-mile automobile speedway contest yesterday, in which two men were killed and two injured, seemed probable tonight, when it was announced that a protest would be filed with the American Automobile Association.

After a long session Saturday night the decision of the judges following the race in the afternoon was reversed and instead of Ralph de Palma being declared the winner, Ralph Mulford was placed first. Mulford's time was announced as 3:27:08.25.

Coroner Claude Koons decided today that an inquest into the deaths of the two men killed on the speedway yesterday would not be necessary.

Mulford received the first prize of $5,000 and an extra $100 by the judges for leading at 100 miles. De Palma took second prize of $2,000, and also $100 for leading at 200 miles. Eddie O'Donnell, in third place, got $1,000. The other prize winners were W. W. Brown, fourth; W. Barndollar, fifth; Pete Henderson, sixth, and W. J. Shrunk, seventh place.

Tom Alley, who drove for H. W. Ogren, tonight declared that he intended to protest against the official ruling of the race officials. He said he was entitled to either fifth or sixth place.

There was little change in the condition of Driver Billy Chandler, who was injured in the second of the accidents yesterday, in which his mechanician, Harry Keler, was killed, or of Louis Pleo, who was in the car in which Joe Cooper, the driver, was killed. Cooper's body was taken to Sebring, Ohio, his home, tonight.

Auto Record for Half-Mile Track.

WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 8.—It was announced today that a new world's automobile record for twenty-five miles on a half-mile track was made during a race here yesterday by Arthur Klein, who covered the distance in 38:59. The previous world's record was made a week ago by Bob Burman at Rock Island, whose time was 38:25. Klein's record is considered remarkable inasmuch as he made two stops, losing about 30 seconds to make a readjustment in his car.

Bicycle Run and Races.

Members of the Century Road Club of America held a run to Orangeburg yesterday. On arriving there three races were held. In spite of the fact that a number of the riders returned to New York by train, the events were all well filled. The two-mile handicap was won by J. Caldwell. H. Tarlinton was the Short-Mile race, while the half-mile novelty event went to J. Crowley. The pacemakers were A. L. Everard, chief; Frayzee brothers, J. G. Schmidt, P. Peterson, E. Gerard, E. Hart, W. Lock, W. Grenda, D. W. Moore, and J. Crowley.

Stiff Country for Walkers.

Members of the Walkers' Club of America covered thirty miles of stiff country yesterday in their regular Sunday tramp. The start was made from Van Cortlandt Park and the objective point Suffern. The route taken was by Broadway to Yonkers, Warburton Avenue to Hastings and Broadway to Tarrytown, crossing the Hudson River at Nyack, and through the towns of West Nyack, Clarkstown, Mannet, Spring Valley, and crossing the Ramapo River into Suffern. Among the walkers were R. Remer, Pathfinder J. H. Hocking, A. E. Rodé, Alexander Jessup, W. Moore, G. Cheshire, W. Smidt, P. Ryan, and W. O'Connor.

Walkers Visit Staten Island.

Through some of the most picturesque parts of Staten Island was the route selected by the members of the American Walkers' Association for their regular Sunday tramp. The trip was to Midland Beach and return from St. George, through Stapleton by way of the Richmond Road, and then on to the beach, where stop was made for luncheon. After a two-hour rest the return trip was started to New York. Among those who walked were A. Koltar, B. Postman, T. Trefrey, P. Gasser, J. Haligan, W. Bockeman, S. Freedman, F. Trinker, F. Leufert, H. Harris, M. Meyers, and D. Goldberger.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION IN AMERICA AND EUROPE

Two weeks ago we had four days of advance and two days of reaction; last week we had five days of advance and one day of reaction. The more sustained forward movement last week was accompanied by a broadening of the market which undoubtedly reflected a wide public interest, but the manner of the market's movement suggested beyond that that the market was in many respects under organized control. In the earlier stages of the forward movement which has now carried the general level of prices to the highest point reached since the early part of 1913 the trading suggested plainly enough activity on the part of pools or groups interested in particular issues, but more lately it has come to appear that the market as a whole had been taken in hand by powerful interests, whose purposes were no longer confined to a few individual issues, but were directed to broad-scale dealings in the market as a whole. Wall Street is always quick to jump from general indications to specific explanations, and one hears mentioned these days the names of some of the men who are credited with the management of what has become a broad bull movement in the stock market. Wall Street guesses on this score, if they be guesses, may not be altogether accurate, but even if surmises as to the individuals most concerned be incorrect there remains little doubt of the great activity these days of very powerful interests who are engaging in stock market operations on a scale not paralleled in any recent year.

Of the things bought by important interests in the course of such a forward movement in the stock market some things are bought to keep because their ownership fits in with plans of broader scope than those which have to do merely with a successful stock market campaign, but many other things are bought by the same interests merely to resell at a profit. In one case an interest in the property itself is acquired, in the other case it would be truer to say that all that is intended to be acquired is an interest in the stock market. No doubt the relative stability of a stock like Bethlehem Steel after the enormous advance which has taken place in a relatively brief period is explainable on the ground that all during the later stages of the advance the floating supply of the stock has been very limited. Things are heard in Wall Street which suggest that some of the insiders in Bethlehem Steel would gladly begin at this time to take profits on their holdings were they free to do so. There is recalled in this connection, however, what Wall Street has understood for some time, namely, that when the very large orders which the company has received from Great Britain were taken assurances were given that control of the company would not be allowed to pass to new and possibly to unfriendly hands until these orders had been filled. It is necessary for the outsider to take account of such factors as these in determining for himself how far a free market actually exists for some of the stocks which show enormous advances. He must also take account of the difference in the position of those stocks which may have advanced on buying intended to make sure of control and of those stocks which have been bought only to be resold. Such matters do not affect the intrinsic worth of the properties represented by these stocks, but they do very materially affect their market position.

But if the market has been tutored, so to speak, by powerful interests, to whose activity the market may owe a good part of its upward swing, this tutoring could not have been carried on successfully had conditions not favored a large rise in prices. The sustained strength of the market even after a large rise bears witness to the confidence which is felt in the continuance of the favorable movements which have been manifesting themselves in the country's business. That improvement has been very great, although proper allowance must be made for the fact that so far at least the improvement has not been uniformly distributed. Many lines, while faring better than they did in the first half year after the war, have not yet shown recuperation to anything like the extent of the gains which have been made in a few conspicuous lines. The war stocks have been reflecting the most spectacular phase of this expansion in business, but not war orders alone, which account for the radical improvement which has taken place in the steel trade, the most important of the country's industries. New proof was supplied last week of the vigorous character of the betterment which has been under way in that industry since last December. Output has been increasing and prices advancing and the trade has come to give new proof of its confidence in a continuance of these conditions in the shape of active buying of pig iron for future delivery, which has brought about a substantial rise in that raw material. It has generally been true that as the steel trade goes, so goes the trade of the country at large, and while the demands growing out of the war undoubtedly give ground for modifying to some extent the inferences to be drawn from the great upward swing in the steel trade, it can hardly be assumed that those demands destroy entirely the barometric quality of the steel trade as a gauge of business tendencies.

The market itself fairly reflects the uneven distribution of the improvement which has come about in business, for by no means all departments of the market have shared equally in the upward swing. The most conspicuous contrast is that afforded between the industrials as a group and the railroads as a group. Had the latter advanced recently as rapidly as have the industrials, the stock market would today be above the high point of 1912 instead of being still, on the average, a number of points under it. That is one of the adverse phases of the market, for it would be a more wholesome market were the railroads improving in proportion to the improvement in industrial issues. It would be more wholesome in itself and in what it indicates, for probably the chief reason for the hanging back of the railroads is the feeling among investors that public regulation has pursued a course which has made the railroad stocks less desirable as investments than they formerly were. That is not as it should be. Regulation of the kind which would commend itself most in the long run is regulation which safeguards not only the shipper but the owner of the railroad as well, for the owner of the railroad is, or should be, the source from which is obtained the capital essential to the continued upbuilding of the country's transportation facilities. Make the railroads less attractive to the investor and in the long run you necessarily make them less serviceable to the shippers.

There have, however, been signs of a change for the better in the attitude of public regulators toward the railroads, and investors have been reflecting that change in a change in their own attitude toward railroad stocks. But that has been coming about very slowly. Too many proofs of the unfavorable state to which the railroads have come are present in the shape of railroads still in the hands of receivers and of stocks paying less return than the investor expects on his money. It is by no means intended to convey the impression that receiverships and reduced dividends are the products solely of excessive regulation. In some cases they are the result of a lack of regulation in certain needed directions, but there can be no doubt that much of the trouble which today confronts the railroads as a whole can be traced to the unsympathetic or the actually unfair exercise of the power of public regulation.

There are those who believe that a new period is coming for the railroads in this respect. They see signs of it in some recent actions of public regulators, and they hope for further proof of it in the shape of the grant of the rate increase for which the Western railroads have applied. Moreover, they have begun to give practical expression to this belief and to this hope in somewhat freer buying of railroad stocks. There can hardly be any doubt that much impetus would be given to enterprise by definite proof that the railroads would be handled less stringently in the future. It is, of course, not all a question of countenancing any unfair railroad practice but merely of leaving the railroads sufficient freedom to handle their affairs in business-like fashion, and to allow them compensation large enough to insure their solvency and in addition to that to show earnings sufficiently attractive to draw to them fresh supplies of partnership capital. While the railroad facilities of the country, at least in a narrow sense, are ample at the present time, the country will surely in due course need the development of existing lines and the construction of new lines, and it would be short-sighted to make capital indifferent to meeting these needs. The stock market has been giving some signs that it believes that the country will avoid that short-sighted policy.

STUDY EXCHANGE PROBLEM.

London Puzzles Over Way to Pay Its Debts to Us.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Better support for the new war loan, bringing a recovery in price, helped the markets to end the week steady. The recent boom on the New York Exchange was reflected here only in a small demand for the steel issues and a further sharp rise in the Canadian equipment companies.

The market had a full week's warning of the impending fall of Warsaw, and the financial district is reconciled to at least one more year of war. This makes the effectiveness of Great Britain's blockade of Germany a vital issue, but the City thinks that an amicable adjustment with the United States of the difficulties raised by the blockade operations should be easy.

The American exchange problem dominates London to an increasing extent. The Treasury officials have appealed for greater economy in the use of gold, and a private arrangement between the banks for this purpose, which was reached on Thursday, indicates the probability that the Bombino and their allies will export gold more freely during the Fall, although no definite understanding to this end has yet been reached.

Despite last week's small mobilization of American bonds, some authorities are advising that England retain these while possible, and combine considerable gold exports with open borrowing in New York to finance abnormal imports, which are expected to reach a very high level in November. The British trade position is likely to be complicated still further by increased enlistment, which will reduce the amount of manufactures for export.

News of the recent shipment of £8,000,000 of gold from Australia to San Francisco attracted attention, but cannot have permanent importance. Money is already easier and bills are in demand for discount below 5 per cent.

BOURSE KEEPS QUIET TONE.

Receives Calmly News of the Fall of Warsaw.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—The Bourse received the news of the fall of Warsaw calmly. Russian rentes were not affected, but industrials were depressed. French rentes are unchanged, closing at 69. The Bourse is hopefully discussing rumors that pre-war positions will be liquidated at the settlement at the end of this month. Agents de Change meet tomorrow to discuss the situation. They intend to suggest that the Bank of France intervene and aid in the settlement by making advances.

Exchange on London is higher at 26 francs 95 centimes, but dollar exchange is stead at 5 francs 65 centimes. American securities again advanced this week. Prices in the Spanish group were unchanged, as were also the quotations on French bank stocks.

The Bank of France received 93,000,000 francs of gold in the past week. Business is still inactive, owing to the fact that State loans are absorbing all surplus funds.

AUSTRALIA SHORT ON SHEEP

Millions Lost Through Drought—High Prices for Wool Expected.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SYDNEY, Australia, July 8.—The American public might as well be forewarned now as later that from all indications the wool output from Australia, which, with Argentina is the world's chief supplier of that staple, will be short next year.

The sheep industry was dealt a staggering blow by the drought this year, and as long as the war continues vast armies must be clothed. The prospect is that neutral nations and private individuals all over the world will feel the pinch of high prices.

In New South Wales, particularly in the famous Riverina region, the losses have been very great. Some estimates place the loss in sheep in this State at 10,000,000. Although figures are admittedly not quire accurate at this early stage, it seems to be fairly certain that in this State alone the wool production was, in the season just closed, 895,000 bales, as against 976,000 last season; and that up to Dec. 31, 1914, the number of sheep in this State was 34,726,000, as against 39,843,000 in the year 1913—a difference, not counting the losses which have occurred since the first of the year, of more than 5,000,000.

Of course, though the Australian sheep men have by reason of the drought had a disastrous time of it, there is for them hope that the rainfall next Spring will be plentiful, there is the certainly that there will be a sustained active market for wool, and there is the assurance that mutton will be higher, and though at Sydney the loss in shipments to Continental Europe—France, Germany and Belgium—is represented by the big difference between the shipments last season and this season, namely 584,935 bales, there is the compensating fact that the shipments to the United States and Japan were the greatest in the annals of the Australian wool trade.

The marked increase in the Austral-American commerce in the commodity, due undoubtedly to the big military orders placed in the United States by British mills, is shown by a comparison of the shipments from Sydney to American ports in the seasons of 1913-14 and 1914-15. These were, respectively, 25,000 bales and 92,600 bales.

As for Japan, which is supplying the Russian Government with war woolens, the figures for the two seasons were 23,000 bales and 65,000 bales.

And what of the immediate future as it relates to the present conflict?

Perhaps it may be best regarded in the light of a speech made a few days ago by James Kidd, President of the New South Wales Sheep Breeders' Association. He said that no doubt Germany and Austria were being starved, but how long it would be before the crash came no one could even guess. The two chief wool exporting countries, he pointed out, were Australia and Argentina. Last year these two countries supplied Germany with 700,000 bales of wool, and this year the amount had fallen to 11,000 bales. Some months ago Germany had seized 100,000 bales in the north of France, but this had doubtless been used for last year's requirements. The raising of sheep had retrograded in Germany, he said, for whereas twenty years ago she raised 29,000,000 of the animals, in 1912 she raised but 3,000,000 and none of her allies could now supply her with wool to any material extent. In view of all this it seemed that the question of clothing would become a very important factor in determining the duration of the war, for men could not possibly lie in the trenches and fight unless they were comfortably clothed and well fed.

To revert once more to the position of the United States on the wool question: Certain patriotic sheep men in that country have been fostering the idea that Americans can soon become self-sustaining in the matter of fleeces and that the Australian system of marketing the commodity is a poor one. With all credit to these men's Americanism, let it be said that Australia is many years ahead of the United States in every branch of the production of raw wool, and it will be only by the same slow, patient and efficient methods that have obtained in the Commonwealth in this direction that the United States can even hope to rival the Antipodes.

FOREIGN SAMPLES SHOULD PAY DUTY

Cloths, Entered Duty Free, Are Said to Reduce Tariff 7 Per Cent. on Whole Purchase.

That the interest of domestic textile manufacturers is thoroughly aroused as to the desirability, from their point of view, of stringent regulations for the entry into this country of commercial samples, is evident from the attention paid the subject in the latest issue of the Quarterly Bulletin of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. The importers' position relative to the admittance of these samples, and their attitude toward the regulations of the Treasury Department, made effective last week, were set forth in yesterday's issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The wool manufacturers' publication charges that the sale of duty-free samples of woolen cloths has become a substantial industry in New York and elsewhere, and that these foreign samples have habitually been sold in large quantities to manufacturers of clothing, shoes, &c.

"For a long time," says the Bulletin, "it had been believed that the liberal privileges granted to textile importers were being abused by some of them, and that considerable quantities of samples of foreign textile goods were passing into commercial use or manufacture, displacing thereby the products of American mills, and depriving the Government of proper revenue. It will be observed that this latest decision (the new Treasury Regulations) is the most precise and restrictive of all, for it requires, in so many words, that textile fabrics of nine inches or less in length—that is, very small samples indeed—may be considered as of no commercial value, and admitted free of duty without being cut, punched, or otherwise mutilated, but that all samples more than nine inches in length will be assessed for duty unless they are cut, punched, or indelibly stamped in such a way as to destroy their value for merchandise.

"This is a justifiable precaution, in view of the experience of the years before. A twenty-seven-inch sample of imported woolen cloth is large enough to be utilized for the manufacture not only of caps and boys' trousers, but also for undercollar purposes, shoe uppers, &c. These foreign samples have habitually been sold in large quantities to manufacturers."

The official organ of the woolen manufacturers says there remains, however, a class of samples that can still be admitted free of duty, much, it is alleged, to the disadvantage of the domestic manufacture of the finer goods. The bulletin says that a very large quantity of woolen and worsted clothing is sold at retail by means of small samples of cloth of about eight or ten square inches in size. These samples, in large variety, mounted in sample books or upon loose cards, are exhibited to retail customers to enable them to select the kind of fabric, design, and coloring of which they desire their garments to be made.

The woolen men's bulletin backs up its contention in this way:

"The quantity of the samples used in this manner is so large that, in many instances, as much as 20 per cent. of the cloth purchased from the mills is cut up to provide these small swatches. If the cloth is imported, so much of it as is required for samples can be cut into the small swatches before shipment to, the United States, and thereby escape the payment of duty.

"The practical effect of this is equivalent to a reduction, in the rate of duty on the whole purchase, from 35 per cent. to 28 per cent.; to wit, if out of an importation of twenty-five pieces five are brought in free as samples and the other twenty as cloth at the regular duty of 35 per cent., the result to the Government in revenue, and to the competing manufacturer in the United States, is just the same as though a duty of 28 per cent. had been paid on the entire lot. Some purchasers at wholesale have frankly told representatives of American mills that this difference is enough to turn the scale against the domestic product, and is the reason why certain cloths formerly bought in this country have been displaced by imported substitutes.

"While it is quite true that the small samples have not themselves a salable value, the very fact of the destruction of the pieces out of which they are made proportionately enhances the value of the pieces that remain intact. If, for example, the importer buys twenty-five pieces at a cost of $50 each, amounting in the aggregate to $1,250, and then, to facilitate the resale of his purchase, destroys the salability of five pieces by cutting them into small pieces, then, obviously, the remaining twenty will represent the original total cost of $1,250, and should be invoiced, accordingly, for duty purposes, if the samples are admitted free. But what actually occurs is that the twenty pieces are returned for duty at their prime cost of $50 each, or $1,000, although their real cost, as has been explained above, is $1,250, plus the cost of making five pieces into samples.

"Clearly, the importer should pay the duty upon the total foreign cost of his purchases, and it is only by law or Treasury regulation it should be possible for the customs officers, in such cases, either to assess the duty on the cloth of which the samples are composed, or else to enhance the unit cost of the pieces brought in entire by the proportionate expense involved in the destruction of those cut into samples. When the importer forces this selling price upon the United States he must, of course, compute as part of the cost of the cloth he has to sell the value of the cloth destroyed for samples, and the expense of converting it into samples. If this is done abroad it is a part of the foreign cost, and as such should be dutiable. To resell the imported goods at a price which disregarded the cost of the cloth converted into samples would invite financial disaster and, of course, it would not be done.

"It would seem as though it ought to be possible for the Treasury Department to correct this manifestly unjust and illogical situation by a ruling that samples made abroad for use in the resale of the goods by the importer in the United States should be assessed for duty on the foreign cost of the material of which they are made, plus the expense of making them into samples.

"Such a regulation would not interfere in any way with the free admission of samples for use in making the initial sale to the primary American purchaser, which samples are relatively few in number, and are provided for satisfactorily in the instructions recently published, as set forth in Treasury decision 34,874. If, however, the needed correction cannot be effected by means of a Treasury regulation, a provision to accomplish the result should be incorporated in the tariff act itself when next revised."

DR. DAVIS ANSWERS PRISON COMMISSION

Admits Some Charges and Says Others Are Grossly Exaggerated.

MAKES VIGOROUS DEFENSE

Lack of Funds Is a Feature—Says Daily Papers Might Teach How to Make Bombs.

Dr. Katharine B. Davis, Commissioner of Correction, in a letter to the State Commission of Prisons, cites the twenty-three criticisms made upon institutions under her control in the report of the commission and replies specifically to each.

Miss Davis denies some of the charges or stamps them as grossly exaggerated. She admits some defects in the institutions, but says they are due to insufficient appropriations and cannot be remedied without additional funds which have been denied her. Other policies which are criticised she defends as founded on the right principles.

Miss Davis begins by deploring the fact that the commission saw fit to make its investigation at a time when changes were to be made which would have eliminated some of the faults which the commission complains of. These changes, she says, were the extended leave of absence granted to Warden Hayes and the introduction of a new routine made necessary by the passage of the bill extending the indeterminate sentence and parole to the penitentiary and the workhouse.

Dr. Davis Sees Improvement.

To the first criticism, that methods are too harsh and repressive, Dr. Davis replies that there has been a wonderful improvement in discipline since she took office, but that she had not thought it wise to make radical changes until the new indeterminate sentence went into effect, when the prison would be reorganized as a reformatory.

As to the charge that more than 1,000 prisoners are confined two in a cell, Commissioner Davis replies that this has been made necessary by lack of accommodations and increase in number of prisoners, but that the double cells are larger than those in the State prisons.

The charge that diseased prisoners and healthy are placed together is called grossly exaggerated. The healthy have been kept from the sick, she says, except in a few cases where prisoners, who had shown no symptoms on the initial examination, had later developed disease. To the complaint of lack of sanitary equipment, Commissioner Davis replies that this cannot be helped until money is provided for the change. It is admitted that sick prisoners are not given special diets, but the reply is that this is impossible while 16 cents a day is allowed for food.

Dr. Davis admits that prisoners are confined in their cells for 14 hours over Sundays and holidays, and as much as 60 hours when a holiday immediately precedes or follows a Sunday, but says that until a year ago prisoners were kept in their cells for even longer periods in State prisons. Warden Hayes, she says, took an advanced stand when he permitted all prisoners to go to the mess hall for their meals.

Charges that cells are not sufficiently disinfected, that blankets are not kept clean, and that prisoners are not given sheets or nightshirts are admitted to have some foundation, but the reply is that the department is doing the best it can with the means at its disposal. Miss Davis says she thinks prisoners should have sheets or nightshirts, but that a request for funds for that purpose has been denied. She adds that "honest laborers throughout the State in construction camps did not have them."

Calls Daily Papers Dangerous.

The criticism that prisoners are not allowed to have daily papers is thus met:

"They are not. I have not cared to have them learn to make dynamite bombs from specifications furnished in the daily press. Weeklies and monthlies are allowed."

Criticism of conditions in the punishment cells, or "coolers," brings the following reply:

"I do not believe in punishment that gives physical pain, but punishment cells must not be so comfortable that men prefer to remain in them rather than work."

She denies that keepers have beaten or clubbed prisoners except in self-defense or where the prisoner put up a fight against transfer to the disciplinary cells.

Miss Davis admits that the hose was used once on prisoners, not as punishment, but to quell an incipient riot. Regarding the charge of lack of outdoor exercise, she says that only 500 prisoners work in shops, and that it is intended to provide recreation for them if they work well and behave.

To the recommendation that Warden Hayes be removed Miss Davis says that no ground has appeared for charges against him which could be sustained.

RAINS ON BETHLEHEM BAND.

Park Throng Stays Through Storm to Hear Music.

The Bethlehem (Penn.) Band played right through the rainstorm in Central Park yesterday afternoon, and of the great throng that had gathered fully three-fourths remained within hearing. The musicians, who came up from Bethlehem yesterday morning and spent the early part of the day at Coney Island, crowded up under the band stand to keep from getting wet, but did not stop playing. As soon as the rain was over the seats in front were again filled.

There were 100 pieces in the band that played yesterday, and a number of the musicians said they were not in the least surprised when it began to rain. It rains every time they come to New York to play, they said, and told of the downpours that they "brought with them" in recent years.

About 10,000 persons surrounded the band stand when the music began at 4 o'clock, park attendants said. With A. M. Weingartner, a steel worker, leading, the men played an elaborate program which included Safranek's "Atlantis," Meyerbeer's "Dedication and Benediction," from "Les Huguenots," and the overture from "Wilhelm Tell."

Charles M. Schwab was not at the concert yesterday. He usually attends the annual concerts given here by the steel works men, but he was out of town on business yesterday, and had expressed regret that he could not attend.

After their concert the Bethlehem men had dinner at Sherry's. They returned to Bethlehem last night.

MILITIA RAID GAMBLERS.

Louisiana Governor Calls Out National Guard, Who Seize 150.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8.—Failure of officials of Jefferson Parish to enforce the laws caused Governor Hall late yesterday to order a battalion of the National Guard to raid a gambling house in Southport, a suburb of New Orleans, according to a statement issued tonight by the Governor. Nearly 150 persons were arrested, including Joseph Hyland, the proprietor, and his employes. The patrons were paroled.

One person arrested in the gambling house, the Governor said, was a Deputy Sheriff of the parish, who had his official badge displayed at the time.

MUST PAY ALIMONY DUE FOR 48 YEARS

Court of Appeals Holds That Death of Both Principals Does Not End Claim.

ESTATE LIABLE FOR $28,000

Money with Which It Will Be Paid Brought to Husband by Second Wife.

The full bench of the Court of Appeals has just decided that alimony granted to Mrs. Deborah Van Ness on May 23, 1867, when she obtained a divorce from Cornelius Henry Van Ness, who died in 1911, without having paid a single installment, may be collected by the executors of her estate. Mrs. Van Ness died in January of this year at the age of 91 years. Alimony was granted at the rate of $600 a year, making the sum due at the time of her death $28,800, without counting the interest.

Mr. Van Ness married twice after being divorced by his first wife, who was Miss Deborah Bradt when she married him in 1845. Mr. Van Ness, in 1875, married Mrs. Emma Louise Burr Wright, who brought him the estate of more than $800,000 which remains. His third wife was Miss Alice Wood who, after falling from her bicycle in front of Mr. Van Ness's home in Cornwall, N. Y., was taken into his house for treatment, and there first met him. She was 26 years of age, and he 82 when she married him in November, 1899.

Transfers Crude and Careless.

By ante-mortem deeds and by will Mr. Van Ness turned over his entire estate to his last wife. Surrogate Fowler refused to admit the will to probate, saying in part:

"The crude and careless fashion in which the aged husband transferred all his very large property to one who, though his wife, was a comparative stranger to him, is some evidence of a condition of senility and incompetence charged at the times under investigation in this case."

The will case was later adjusted before Justice Greenbaum in the Supreme Court under an arrangement whereby about $100,000 was distributed among relatives of Mr. Van Ness's different wives, and the remainder of the estate was to go to his young widow.

Not a Question of Wives.

However, Mr. Van Ness's subsequent wives and the history attached to them had no bearing on and was not considered in the alimony question before the Court of Appeals. The question there presented by the law firm of O'Gorman, Battle & Vandiver, representing the young widow, was that since the first Mrs. Van Ness had died she had no interest in the alimony which she had failed to collect during her lifetime, and therefore her executors were not entitled to act as a substitute in her stead and collect.

Answering this contention, Judge Scudder, writing the decision, which was concurred in by Chief Judge Bartlett and the Associate Judges, Hiscock, Collin, Hogan, Cardozo, and Seabury, said:

"I do not see how in justice it can be said that if the husband failed to pay according to the terms of the judgment, and the wife thereafter died, the judgment in her favor lapsed as to the amount already accrued and cannot be enforced by her personal representatives.

"The husband cannot be heard to say that the wife had not required the alimony for the purposes of her support. The court, by the decree, determined on a full consideration of the conditions existing that it was proper the husband should not be relieved to that extent from the obligation of the judgment."

Alimony Defined.

The decision then defines alimony thus:

"But alimony is not a personal claim in the same sense that a cause of action for slander or assault is personal. It is personal in a sense that it is a provision made by the court in favor of the wife for her maintenance and support, and cannot be diverted from that purpose.

"It takes the place of the husband's liability, which ended with the divorce. If there had been no divorce the husband's liability would have continued while the marital relation existed, and liability on the judgment should continue to the same extent.

"Therefore, the alimony sued for in this action, which accrued prior to the death of the wife, was not a personal claim that died with her, but a right which survived in favor of her personal representatives. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the object of the law and seriously impair the value of the decree in the wife's favor by depriving her of the credit which she would have to obtain means of support."

Under this ruling Mrs. Alice Van Ness Parsons, the only child by the first marriage, will come into the $28,000 sued for, plus interest.

United States Senator O'Gorman argued the case in defense of the estate, while Mrs. Parsons's interests were looked after by the law firm of Agar, Ely & Fulton of 31 Nassau Street.

LOOK UP "COUNT'S" PAST.

Schumann-Heink's Daughter Admits Writing to Denver's Enigma.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 8.—In investigating the antecedents of Richard Miller, the man who calls himself a German Count, now dying at the County Hospital, the authorities have evolved the theory that Marie, a daughter of Schumann-Heink, the singer, may be able to throw some light on the man's history.

The singer's daughter, who is now Mrs. J. Hubert Guy of San Francisco, has admitted that she wrote one letter to the so-called count. She says that the letter was formal in character, and was written after a casual meeting on a train. It begins "Dear Richard."

There are other letters. One of them is addressed to "My dear darling, little Dickie," and is signed by the Austrian name Mirzl, a form of Marie.

The police believe that Mrs. Guy knows the real name of Miller. They base this belief on the letter which Mrs. Guy admits writing and two other letters which were found among the man's effects. The letter which Mrs. Guy admits writing and the other two missives apparently are in the same handwriting.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 8.—John N. Carlisle of Watertown resigned his place in the Highway Department yesterday. When Mr. Carlisle as Commissioner was succeeded by Edwin Duffey he accepted an advisory place in the department.

In his letter of resignation Mr. Carlisle said:

"Taking our system as a whole we have more improved roads and better roads than any other State or country, and the people of New York have a right to be proud of what has been accomplished. Necessarily, with our very large mileage, there are, and always will be, a few roads that need repair and attention, but a comparison of the conditions of the State highways with city and village streets is not unfavorable to the State."

At the time of Mr. Duffey's appointment it was announced that Mr. Carlisle would be retained in the department until midsummer. He has been receiving a salary of $33 a day while serving as adviser. The salary of the Commissioner is $10,000 a year.

PANIC ON EXCURSION.

One Man Drowned When Storm Hits Eagles' Boats.

The annual excursion of Newark Aerie of Eagles, which went to Alpine on the Hudson yesterday, docked at 1 o'clock this morning on the return trip. The day had been an eventful one, as one man fell overboard and was drowned above Weehawken. He is said to have been Henry Dey of Glen Ridge, a wealthy chewing gum manufacturer. He was sitting on the barge rail when he lost his balance. An electric storm which swept the barge Empire and Steamer Isabel, which carried the excursionists, caused a panic and many women fainted.

Life preservers were fought for and the captain and crew had considerable difficulty in restoring quiet. In addition to the drowning and panic, there was much fighting aboard, which increased the excitement. The worst of the troublemakers were put off the boat at Hastings and had to make their way back as best they could.

Close to Governor Whitman at the station stood a man who was a stranger here. He was believed to be a guard for the Governor. Mr. Whitman declined to make any statement regarding the threatening letters which led to the placing of special guards about his house. The house is still under guard.

ASSAILS HOME RULE PLAN.

Grants No Real Power, Citizens' Union Asserts.

The Citizens' Union gave out yesterday an analysis of the home rule proposal reported to the Constitutional Convention last week by the Cities Committee. The analysis was prepared by Laurence A. Tanzer, Chairman of the union's Constitutional Convention Committee. These, among other objections, are raised to the proposal:

"The proposal does not confer 'home rule' in any fair sense of the term. Home rule means power granted to cities to govern themselves. This proposal gives no such power. It gives only power to propose to the Legislature measures for a city's government, to be granted or withheld by the Legislature at its option, and even this power of petition extends only over a narrow field.

"No power whatever is granted to the people of a city except that of proposing to the Legislature once in eight years a new charter. If that is rejected by the Legislature they cannot propose another until the eight years are up.

"The means of exercising the narrow powers granted are so cumbersome and obstructive as to render even these illusory. The adoption of a new charter will require three elections, the labors of a Charter Commission, and a sixty days' submission to the Legislature. This process may take a period of from one and a half to four years.

"The present vicious system of special city legislation is permitted to continue. Cities will still be subject to that constant interference by the Legislature with their local affairs which has given rise to the movement for home rule. Their charters will not only be subject to veto by the Legislature but even if permitted to go into effect will be subject to alteration or repeal by the Legislature at any time.

"Partisan political control of municipal affairs will be perpetuated.

"All sense of responsibility will be destroyed. When an act required submission first to the people of the city or to the local authorities and then to the Legislature, neither will feel responsibility. Each will look to the other, and irresponsible legislation will result."

MANY RIDE ZOO ELEPHANT.

Visitors Indulged for First Time Since Gunda Became Erratic.

For the first time in several years people were allowed to ride the elephants in the Bronx Zoo yesterday, and several hundred took advantage of the opportunity to take trips on Alice.

Gunda, the big elephant which was shot recently, used to be the chief beast of burden, and when he became erratic the practice of allowing visitors to ride the elephants was discontinued.

Alice proved tractable, and everything went off well except for a single accident. Mrs. Lillian D. Ghee of 118 West 134th Street, while being assisted down from Alice's back in the elephant yard by Dick Richards, head elephant keeper, misjudged her distance and fell to the ground, dislocating her ankle. After treatment by Dr. Eiss of Fordham Hospital she went home.

NATIONS AGREED ON MEXICO PLAN; APPEAL READY

"Very Definite Policy" Decided On, Lansing Announces After Consulting the President.

MORE HOPE FOR PEACE

Latin-Americans Meet Here Tomorrow to Give Formal Sanction to Joint Program.

THINK PRESSURE WILL WIN

And Armed Intervention Will Not Be Necessary—General Scott Meets Villa at the Border.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—"We have reached a stage where a very definite policy has been decided on," said Secretary Lansing today in announcing that the conference of representatives of the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala concerning Mexico would be resumed at the Biltmore Hotel in New York, at 2 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. The Secretary of State added that he was much encouraged over the situation.

The adjournement of the conference on Friday under an agreement to meet in New York on a date to be fixed by him, was taken, said Mr. Lansing, in order to give him an opportunity to consult President Wilson.

The details of the definite policy determined upon were not obtainable from Secretary Lansing. As far as can be ascertained, the purpose of the meeting in New York will be to obtain formal approval from all the American governments concerned to an appeal which will be sent to Carranza, Villa, Zapata and the Governors of the States of Mexico to compose their differences and set up a central provisional government.

The program of the United States also calls for indorsement by the six Latin-American nations of its purpose to encourage others to undertake the establishment of a government if any of the factional leaders show a contrary disposition and to give that government the active moral support of the United States through recognizing it immediately and cutting off shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to any Mexican faction that may oppose the new authority.

The six Latin-American diplomatic representatives who are parties to the conference called by the Secretary of State have been granted powers by their governments to join in the appeal which will be the first step in carrying out the United States program for the pacification of Mexico. In the absence of any official statement on the subject the understanding here is that the text of the appeal will not follow closely the warning statement issued by President Wilson to the Mexican factions on June 2, but will be of the same general tenor. The inference from what was said in official circles today was that the appeal had been modified by the conferees and it was necessary for that reason to submit its text to the President before it could be forwarded to the factional leaders. The President has now given it his approval and the appeal, it is expected, will be formally indorsed at the conference to take place in New York on Wednesday.

Administration Encouraged.

There are other features of the American plan that are understood to require the indorsement of the six Latin-American nations, and it is supposed that discussion of these will be resumed at Wednesday's meeting. But the Administration feels that considerable progress has been made toward bringing Mexico's troubles to an end. The Administration has determined that the disturbances in the Southern republic must cease, and while it is not willing to go to the extreme of armed intervention, it is credited with contemplating positive action to give stability to the Government that may be established in the republic as a result of the present efforts.

The attitude of Carranza indicates that he does not intend to be a party to any movement for pacifying Mexico that does not give him the main say in determining the program. According to his agents here, he is preparing an address to the American people, in which he will seek to show that his Government is the de facto authority in Mexico and should be recognized as such. That he is prepared to resist representations to be made to him by the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala has been indicated, according to the belief here, by his action in expelling from Mexico Señor Ortega, the Guatemalan Minister to Mexico City. The reasons for this expulsion are not known, but the theory here is that Carranza ordered Señor Ortega out of Mexico in order to emphasize his disapproval of Guatemala's participation in the Pan-American-Mexican conference. Much resentment has been felt in Mexico, particularly among the Carranzistas, over the fact that Guatemala was represented among the nations invited by the United States to take part in the effort to bring Mexico's troubles to a close. It was asserted in Mexican newspapers that Guatemala was hardly the nation to attempt to teach Mexico good government, and feeling on the subject was intensified by the fact that Mexico and Guatemala have not been on good terms.

The only information that the State Department has on the subject of Señor Ortega's dismissal was contained in a brief telegram from Senhor Cardoso, the Brazilian Minister in Mexico City, who has been representing the United States there. "I regret to inform you," said Senhor Cardoso to the Secretary of State, "that the Guatemalan Minister has been directed to

ITALY MASSES ARMIES TO AID HER ALLIES

500,000 Men Ready to Go to France and 150,000 to the Dardanelles.

According to Captain Victor del Sanctis of the Italian Army, who arrived yesterday on the Italian steamer Duca d'Aosta, although his Government has not officially declared war upon Germany, it is sending 150,000 troops to assist the Allies in forcing the passage of the Dardanelles. This army has been training at Taranto on the Adriatic coast, and will shortly embark from Brindisi for the Levant in 140 transports which are now assembling at that port.

In Northern Italy, Captain del Sanctis went on to say, there are 500,000 well-trained troops mobilized on the plains of Turin ready to be sent to the aid of the Allies in France, which, he thinks, will be a material factor in hastening the ultimate victory of the Allies.

Captain del Sanctis said he had come over to the United States to purchase war supplies for the Italian Army and would be here for some time.

BRIBE OF KRUPP GUNS REJECTED BY RUMANIA

Thirty-six Batteries and 2,000,000 Pounds of Wire Offered for Passage of Munitions to Turkey.

MILAN, Aug. 9.—A dispatch from Bucharest to the Corriere della Sera says that following the departure of Prince von Hohenlohe-Langenburg, the German Ambassador to Turkey, from the Rumanian capital a representative of the Krupp Gun Works arrived at Bucharest and offered the Rumanian Government thirty-six batteries of artillery, with ammunition, and 2,000,000 pounds of barbed wire to let ammunition destined for Turkey pass through.

Following the intervention of the British Minister at Bucharest, however, the newspaper says, the offer was refused.

SUBMARINE SINKS BIG TURKISH WARSHIP

Constantinople Announces Loss of Kheyr-ed-Din Barbarossa, 9,900-Ton Ship Bought from Germany.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 9. — The Turkish battleship Kheyr-ed-Din Barbarossa, of 9,900 tons displacement, and formerly the German warship Kurfürst Friedrich Wilhelm, has been sunk by a submarine of the Entente powers according to an official announcement issued today by the Turkish Government.

The majority of the officers and men composing the crew of the Turkish battleship were saved.

The official statement telling of the loss of the battleship adds:

"The loss of the Barbarossa, which was sunk this morning, however regrettable in itself, does not affect us excessively except that it places the strength of our ships compared to that of the enemy in the ratio of one to ten."

The Kheyr-ed-Din Barbarossa was built at Stettin in 1891 and was purchased, together with the battleship Torgut Reis, from Germany by Turkey in 1910. The vessel was 354 feet long, 64 feet beam, and had a depth of 24 feet. Her complement consisted of about 600 officers and men.

The battleship carried four 11-inch guns in turrets fore and aft, two 11-inch guns in a turret amidships, eight 4.1-inch guns, eight 3.4-inch guns, and twelve one-pounders. The vessel also was equipped with two submerged 18-inch torpedo tubes.

FRENCH AIR SQUADRON SHELLS SAARBRUECKEN

Twenty-Eight Aeroplanes Drop 164 Bombs, Setting Many Fires—Two Shot Down.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—An official statement issued in Paris tonight says:

"This morning an air squadron consisting of thirty-two aeroplanes, convoyed by some scout speed planes, sallied forth to bombard the station and factories of Saarbrücken, northeast of Metz. The atmospheric conditions were not favorable, the valleys being concealed under fog and the sky cloudy.

"Notwithstanding the difficulties attending the proper steering of the aircraft, twenty-eight aeroplanes reached their goal and dropped 164 shells of various calibre. The speed planes meanwhile were keeping away the German aviators, who were attempting to cut off the squadron from its base.

"Many fires were observed in the territory shelled."

The German official report of the day's operations on the western front refers to the shooting down of two of the aeroplanes returning from the raid on Saarbrücken, where, it was asserted, no military damage had been done. There is a large coal harbor at Saarbrücken.

Canada, Which Has Sent to New York $133,000,000, Running Short of Gold.

The first direct shipment of gold in large quantity from England to this country since the war began is on its way by train to New York from Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The gold was transshipped at Halifax over Canadian lines to the American border, heavily guarded by Canadian detectives. At the border the guards of the American Express Company took the bullion in charge and proceeded with it by way of Bangor, Me. The gold was shipped in a special car. It left Bangor last evening and is due to arrive this morning at the Grand Central Station.

The value of the shipment has not been revealed, but it runs well up into the millions. The amount was estimated last night at $100,000,000, though one prominent New York banker said that this figure was excessive.

It is understood that the great importation will be deposited in the Sub-Treasury to the account of J. P. Morgan & Co. The greatest secrecy was observed in the shipment, but local bankers last night admitted to THE TIMES that its information was correct and that the gold would arrive today.

An attempt to ship $15,000,000 in gold from New York to England just after the beginning of the war failed. The German liner Kronprinzessin Cecilie, which was carrying the treasure, after being almost in sight of the English shores, turned back and found refuge in Bar Harbor, Me.

Convoyed by Warships.

It is understood that the steamship which brought the British gold to Halifax was convoyed by warships. It was pointed out last night that the Bank of England would not be likely to ship in small quantities in view of the depression in sterling exchange existing here. Only a very large shipment, it was contended, would have the desired effect of bettering the exchange situation.

It is the effect on the exchange situation that looms up as the most important consequence of a $100,000,000 gold shipment from England. A new low record for sterling exchange, 4.75½, was reached yesterday. There was no prospect of a rise in sight, and the financial district had been wondering from day to day where the money would come from to pay for the large war orders placed in this country by the Allies through J. P. Morgan & Co.

The gold shipment indicates that the attempts to establish a large British credit in this country, negotiations for which have been under way for some time, have not progressed either as smoothly or as swiftly as desired. The low exchange rate naturally added to the difficulties of floating a credit here.

Until now the only British gold received in New York since the war began has come from Ottawa, but it is well known that the available Canadian supply has been very nearly exhausted. Since Jan. 1, 1915, approximately $133,000,000 in gold has been imported from Canada. J. P. Morgan & Co. imported about $55,000,000 of this amount, and other banks the rest.

$133,000,000 From Canada.

At the beginning of the war New York City had $100,000,000 in corporate stock falling due in London. The city borrowed here the funds necessary to meet this debt. Approximately $90,000,000 in gold was sent to Ottawa and deposited there to the credit of the Bank of England. The $133,000,000 which was sent here from Canada since then, consequently, represented a balance of $43,000,000 in New York's favor. This was admittedly a drain on Canada. England, on the other hand, was conserving her gold supply, having shipped only small quantities to France.

The recent British bond issue of $5,000,000,000, which was subscribed for principally in England, brought a great amount of gold into the coffers of the Bank of England. The last statement of the Bank of England showed an increase in the gold supply of $6,556,125, making the bank's total gold supply $311,108,775, as compared with $138,110,345 in the same week in 1914 and $195,067,170 in 1913.

Local bankers, when asked last night for details of the gold shipment, were reticent. Presumably, they said, the gold would be used to pay off American creditors. They could not state, they said, how long the supply would last. One banker added that it could not be regarded as certain that a British loan would not be necessary now. The betterment of the exchange situation, it was suggested, might now facilitate financing without further shipments of gold across the Atlantic.

England so far has floated no public loans in this country. A number of banks, it is understood, have made private loans, but these have not formally passed through the hands of the Brit-

WOMEN BALK THIEF ON CHANLER ESTATE

Lessee, with Pistol, Forces Him to Surrender as Wife Points Out Hiding Place.

FIRES AT ANOTHER WHO FLED

President of Consolidated Card Co. Turns His Prisoner Over to Great Neck Authorities.

Special to The New York Times.

GREAT NECK, L. I., Aug. 9.—Stanley A. Cohen, President of the Consolidated Card Company, who is occupying the William Astor Chanler estate here, one of the show places on the north shore of Long Island, was aroused about 3:30 o'clock this morning, by the shrieks of his wife, who called from her bedroom, adjoining:

"Stanley, Stanley. There are two burglars here."

Mr. Cohen sprang out of bed, thoroughly awakened by his wife's cries, grabbed his revolver, and rushed into her room. As he entered he saw, in the darkness, the shadowy figure of a man scurrying through the door from Mrs. Cohen's bedroom into the hall. The man ran almost noiselessly, but Mr. Cohen heard soft footfalls on the stairs and ran to the head of them.

"I fired down the stairway," said Mr. Cohen tonight. "It was pitch dark and of course I couldn't see anything. I suppose I didn't hit my man for when I reached the lower floor after running after him, and got the lights switched on, he was out of sight.

"My wife had called that there were two men in the room and, though I hadn't seen the other fellow, I supposed he had got out, too. Nevertheless I determined to search every room in the house, and I was up on the third floor with Victor Phillips, a guest, when I heard my sister-in-law, Mrs. C. H. McLoughlin, scream and call to me.

"'There's another man here,' she called. Well, I raced down stairs again with Mr. Phillips and just as we entered my wife's room where the lights had been switched on we saw a man slipping out from behind the portieres in a bay window. My wife and Mrs. McLoughlin, who had run to her when she heard her scream, had caught sight of him hiding, and apparently hoping we'd go back to bed and forget him.

"I stuck him up in regular Western style," Mr. Cohen continued, laughing as he recalled the adventure, though it had been no laughing matter, he admitted, in the morning, and Mrs. Cohen and her sister were still shaken last night from the shock to their nerves. "I shouted to him: 'Throw up your hands,' and, by Jingo, he did it all right. Then I 'frisked' him just like a policeman. He didn't have a gun, so I kept him 'stuck up' while one of the servants telephoned for the police."

Justice of the Peace George Hayden was the only official the servant could reach, and Mr. Hayden, after an hour, got Constable William Ninesling, who led the prisoner off to the Nassau County Jail in Mineola. Judge Hayden is ready to sit in any case, no matter what, but it isn't any part of his duties to catch burglars while this town supports a Constable.

Mr. Cohen, after getting rid of his burglar, searched his home and found that only a gold watch and chain belonging to Mrs. Cohen were missing. The burglars overlooked a lot of jewelry in their haste to get away.

"I think they must have been in the house from about midnight," said Mr. Cohen. "We went to bed a little before that, and from the looks of things down stairs they'd been there quite a while. They'd ransacked the pantry, eaten, and drunk, and there were cigarette butts all over the place. They certainly took a chance.

"I asked the fellow we caught what he was doing here, and he said he'd met a chap in New York last night who had offered him a job in Great Neck. He had told him he'd have to be at work at 5 o'clock, our fellow told us, and then he explained: 'I was just waiting to go to work.' How's that for nerve."

In jail the prisoner said he was Frederick Brown, 25 years old, and lived in Manhattan. He wouldn't give any address. He repeated his story of having met his companion in Manhattan, and declared he didn't know who he was.

SAYS WILSON WILL RUN AND WIN NEXT YEAR

Now 2,000,000 Votes Stronger Than His Party, Senator Ashurst Says After 14,000-Mile Canvass.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 9. — Senator Ashurst of Arizona started today a fortnight's canvass of Michigan, with the declaration that it will be "Wilson in 1916, and the rest nowhere." Coming at the end of a 14,000-mile tour of the United States, lasting since March 1 last, Senator Ashurst's statements were regarded by politicians here tonight as significant.

Mr. Ashurst on his tour has talked with cowboys and bankers, lumberjacks and professional men, and, after carefully weighing and digesting the sentiment he has found, he declares that Mr. Wilson is today 2,000,000 votes stronger than his party. He says that if there were a Presidential election today Mr. Wilson would carry New York handily, and come closer to sweeping Michigan than any other living Democrat.

"Woodrow Wilson will run for President," he said, "because he will have no other choice. I measure my words when I say that he will be re-elected President without any trouble. The people will have no other leader.

"From the standpoint of the great mass of the people there is but one question, and that relates to the war in Europe. The people know they have the one man to lead them safely through. Woodrow Wilson is that man.

"The Republicans have but one forlorn hope. Some of them affect to believe and many of them do sincerely believe that there is one more President wrapped up in the tariff question. They will find their mistake a sad one.

"Neither will the currency question detract greatly from the great issues involved. Many Republicans, notably Senator Weeks, voted for the currency bill."

SWEDEN ASKS AID IN CABLE PROTEST

But United States Will Not Join in Any Complaint Over Interrupted Communications.

NO GROUND FOR ACTION

General Belief in Washington That Sweden Is Actuated by Friendship for Germany.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The Government of Sweden has recently intimated a desire that the United States join in a protest to Great Britain against interference with cable communications between the Western Hemisphere and Continental Europe.

These intimations were not in a form that required a direct answer, and it is doubtful that such an answer will be given. But Washington feels that the question answers itself with the statement that the cables are owned by the belligerents. It is safe to say that the next American note to Great Britain on the subject of the British blockade will make no reference to interrupted cable communications.

All cables connecting with northern Europe pass through the British Isles, and it is understood that their ownership is British. A British censorship of messages passing over them would, therefore, afford no ground for an American protest, except in the unexpected contingency of interference with American diplomatic communications. At the outbreak of the war, the lines from the Azores to Germany were cut, presumably by the British, and that was regarded as a legitimate act of war.

For many months the United States has been in close touch with all the other important neutral powers regarding the inconveniences imposed on neutral commerce by the British blockade. Sweden has been more earnest than the rest in representing her displeasure at the British course. But even Sweden has not suggested that the United States join in any such protest on the general subject of the blockade. The United States has already protested on that score, and the disposition of the smaller nations seems to be to await the outcome of the American negotiations.

The United States meanwhile views with friendly approval the sympathetic interest manifested by other neutral powers in the correspondence now under way between this country and Great Britain. President Wilson in notes already sent, both to Great Britain and Germany, made it plain that he felt that the United States was acting not only for herself but for all the neutral civilized nations.

Sweden's activities have therefore been taken officially at their face value. But there is a popular impression that Sweden is actuated more by friendship for Germany than because of losses she has sustained as a result of the British blockade. Rumors have recently been frequent of increasing friction between Sweden and her hereditary foe, Russia, and they have revived reports current here some time ago of friendly co-operation in certain matters between the German Embassy and the Swedish legation.

PRESIDENT AIDS WOMEN IN WRECK

With Dr. Grayson He Gives Assistance to Party Whose Automobile Had Overturned.

CORNISH, Aug. 9.—President Wilson took an automobile ride this afternoon, and during his trip went to the assistance of three automobilists whose machine had run over an embankment and capsized about three miles from his Summer home. He arrived at the scene of the accident within a few seconds after it happened.

The President was automobiling with Mrs. Francis B. Sayre, his daughter, and Dr. Cary T. Grayson, his Naval Aid and physician, on the road between Windsor and Ascutneyville. It had just stopped raining and the road was still slippery.

As the President's automobile rounded a curve he and his companions were startled to see another machine overturned at the bottom of an embankment. Mr. Wilson ordered his automobile stopped, jumped out, and ran down to investigate. He found C. C. Judd, Miss E. A. Swasey, and Mrs. Emma Hathaway, all of Norwich, Vt., underneath the overturned automobile and helped to pull them out. They were badly bruised and frightened, but an examination by Dr. Grayson showed that none of them was seriously injured.

The President and Dr. Grayson assisted the two women to the road, and then Mr. Wilson directed that the secret service men accompanying him remain behind and render all assistance possible. The people in the overturned automobile did not recognize the President and did not know who had helped them until later, but they thanked him profusely for his aid.

For several minutes the President remained standing in the mud beside the road examining the wrecked car and making sure that he had done everything he could. After determining that there was nothing further that he could do the President continued his ride. The secret service men took the two women to Windsor, Vt., in another machine and sent a wrecking crew to pull the damaged car back to the road.

KAISER'S FLEET DEFEATED OFF RIGA; GERMANS CROSS VISTULA AT WARSAW; DIVIDE RUSSIAN FORCES IN SOUTH

Twenty-one Big Vessels Were in the Riga Attack and Three Craft Were Damaged, Petrograd Says

PETROGRAD, Aug. 9.—This official communication was issued tonight:

A German fleet of nine battleships and twelve cruisers with a large number of torpedo boat destroyers persistently attacked the entrance to the Gulf of Riga Sunday, but everywhere was repulsed.

Our seaplanes, throwing bombs, contributed to our success.

A cruiser and two torpedo boat destroyers were damaged by our mines.

An official explanation of the attack of the German fleet on Riga, given out later, says:

The Gulf of Riga would allow the Germans to give powerful aid to their army, now occupying the western coast of the gulf.

With the object of penetrating the gulf, the fleet appeared Sunday off Dirben Channel, which is the only practicable way for large ships to enter. The enemy made three attacks with the object of breaking the mine barrier, protected by our fleet.

Our seaplanes and warships co-operated to repel the enemy. The Germans did not succeed in passing our defenses. Three of his ships were damaged by mines near Dirben. None of our ships was lost.

BRITISH CAPTURE HOOGE TRENCHES

They Carry 1,200 Yards, Including All the Ground Lost on July 30.

GERMAN GUNNERY INFERIOR

Sir John French Says It Was Worsted in Ypres Fighting—Other German Repulses.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The British forces near Ypres today retrieved the losses suffered near Hooge ten days ago by capturing 1,200 yards of German trenches. This success has served to divert public attention temporarily from the magnitude of the German sweep in Poland, but operations in the West still lack general significance.

Night attacks by the Germans were repulsed in Artois, in the Argonne, and in the Vosges. Desultory artillery exchanges were reported from various points today. Rheims has been bombarded again.

Field Marshal Sir John French's report is as follows:

Since my communication of Aug. 1 the artillery on both sides has been active north and east of Ypres. In these exchanges the advantage has been with us.

This morning, after a successful artillery bombardment, in which the French on our left co-operated effectively, we attacked the trenches at Hooge captured by the enemy on July 30. These were all retaken, and following up this success we made further progress north and west of Hooge, extending the front of the trenches captured 1,200 yards.

During this fighting our artillery shelled a German train at Langemarck, (five miles northeast of Ypres,) derailing and setting fire to five trucks.

The captures reported amounted to 3 officers and 124 men of other ranks and 2 machine guns.

Following is the official communication issued in Paris tonight:

The day has been comparatively quiet on the whole front. In Artois, between the Somme and the Oise, and in the valley of the Aisne, some artillery fighting has been reported, and Rheims again has been bombarded.

In the Argonne, near Fontaine-aux-Charmes, the enemy attempted to capture our positions, but they were repulsed everywhere.

In the Vosges there was only artillery firing.

Following is the afternoon report of the French War Office:

There was much going on last night in the Artois district. In the sector to the north of Arras, a German attack at a point north of the railroad station of Souchez was repulsed. In the sector of Neuville-St. Vaast, to the east of the road to Lille, the Germans, after exploding a mine, bombarded our positions violently and endeavored to come out of their trenches. They were at once checked by the fire of our infantry and our artillery.

In the Argonne, not far from the road running from Vienne-le-Château to Binarville, the enemy last night delivered an attack upon our advanced posts and trenches, making use of hand grenades and bombs. They were driven back to their lines by our fire.

In the western section of the forest, which extends from Haute Chevauchée to Vauquois, there was fighting with bombs, hand grenades and rifles, which lasted a portion of the night.

In the Vosges, a fresh German attack against our positions on the Linge was delivered at about 1 o'clock in the morning, but repulsed in complete failure. A curtain of fire maintained by our troops inflicted perceptible losses on the enemy.

This is the German official report issued in Berlin:

A battle developed at daybreak near Hooge, east of Ypres.

In the Argonne forest French advances failed.

Yesterday French aeroplanes were brought down at Dammerkirch and near Black Lake, while early today aeroplanes were shot down by our battle aeroplanes near Ypres, Gondrexange and at Harboney. The two latter aeroplanes belonged to a squadron which previously had dropped bombs on the open town of Saarbruecken, which is situated outside the zone of operations, without doing military damage and slightly injuring a few citizens.

GERMANS PRESS PEACE CAMPAIGN

Indications That Newspaper Propaganda Is Desired by the Authorities.

GOOD TERMS HINTED AT

Article from a German Diplomatic Source Suggests Belgian Annexation Open to Debate.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—Apropos of the reported German peace proposal to Russia, The Times publishes the following Amsterdam dispatch, dated Aug. 7:

"About two months ago the Cologne correspondent of the Tijd made a rather remarkable prophecy. He said he heard from a responsible person that the central powers, after freeing their own territory from the enemy and prosecuting the war on hostile soil, would be in a position to make known their views as to peace. The circumstances would be such as to exclude the idea that they would consent to an unfavorable conclusion of the war, but, on the other hand, the responsibility for the continuance of the war would rest with the Entente powers.

"It would appear that the moment for a press campaign on these lines is considered to have arrived. In its morning edition yesterday the Nieuwe Rotterdamsche Courant gave prominence to an article which attracted wide attention in Holland. It stated that it had received this article from a diplomatic source through the channel of one of its foreign correspondents. It does not require much acuteness to see that the article is of German origin.

"Wiser Counsels May Prevail."

"The article says:

"'It is impossible to reach a conclusion on the battlefield; therefore wiser councils may prevail among the belligerent peoples, if not among their Governments.

"'As to the British, it is not impossible that they, whose army and fleet are unbeaten, will ultimately listen to the voice of reason. There is no single reason why their opponents should offer conditions that would exclude a rapprochement and prolong the war unduly.

"'The chance of attaining peace by exhausting the enemy is small, for all the belligerents' general staff everywhere desire to impose upon the enemy a peace which would make it impossible for him to resume hostilities for generations. There is little chance of realizing this wish.

"'There is far more probability of realizing the desire of the Socialists in all countries to negotiate for peace on the basis that the victors will not annex peoples of a race and language different from their own, though such a basis would, of course, need to take account of the results achieved on the battlefield.

"'These two claims may appear irreconcilable, but it should be remembered that, apart from conquests in Europe, there are many other means of restoring a balance, and providing compensation.'"

Peace "Display" Was Expected.

The Times in an editorial article on the German "peace proposals," says:

"It has long been foreseen and foretold that whenever the Germans entered Warsaw they would probably indulge in a grand histrionic display of their pacifist proclivities for the benefit of the ingenuous amongst their own people, and still simpler hearers they hoped to find amongst neutrals. We cannot yet feel quite sure that the performance will come off."

In reference to Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's message to an American press agency The Times says:

"We doubt whether even an Imperial cablegram with the Imperial signature would create enthusiasm for peace on these terms amongst Americans. They know too well what is at stake to mistake the attitude of the Allies in this matter. Their own best writers and thinkers, Mr. Choate, Dr. Eliot, Mr. Roosevelt, Senator Lodge, and others, have placed the issues before them too forcibly and too clearly.

"Neutrals who may harbor kindly visions of glory won by mediation and

MACKENSEN SWINGING EAST

RINGS CLOSING ON FORTS

Novo Georgievsk Now Cut Off on the East Between the Narew and the Vistula.

BESIEGERS NEARER KOVNO

Also Report Progress Against the West and North Fronts of Stronghold of Lomza.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—Attempts of a powerful German fleet to force the entrance of the Gulf of Riga on Sunday were repulsed, according to an official bulletin issued by the Petrograd War Office last night.

The occupation of Praga, across the river from Warsaw is reported by Berlin. This brings to a dramatic climax the first phase of the drive at the Polish capital and the region of Eastern Poland of which it is the dominating centre. Praga is essentially a part of the capital with great railway stations on the roads running to Petrograd and Moscow.

Few details have been received of Grand Duke Nicholas's final stand at Praga but the indications are that the withdrawal of the Russians became imperative in order to escape from the German lines, which were gradually drawing together in their rear.

Warsaw is now the apex of a vast letter V, the arms of which are the River Narew on the north and the Vistula on the south. The German lines spread along these rivers are contracting gradually as the armies in the north and those in the south approach each other. The strip of territory across which the Russians may withdraw to safer positions is now hardly more than thirty miles across.

Besides this enveloping movement immediately to the east of Warsaw, Berlin reports a steady hammering at the great Russian fortresses of Kovno and Lomza, the chief significance of which is their proximity to the lines of railway communication to Petrograd. Novo Georgievsk is the only place west of Warsaw at which a Russian garrison remains.

In the far north, on the contrary, the Russian lines are apparently holding and the London morning newspapers emphasize what they call Russia's improved situation in the Riga district.

"The Russians," says The Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent, "are forcing a vigorous aggressive, and the Germans have been swept clear from the Riga region."

The Times's Petrograd correspondent says:

"The Riga position has been relieved by Russian successes south of the town, and the whole region for twenty-five miles from Riga has been cleared of the enemy."

Germans Suffer Terrible Losses.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 9, (Dispatch to the London Daily News.)—Russian resistance in the triangle between the Vistula, Narew and Bug is such that the Germans have for twenty-two days been unable to cover more than about a mile a day and are still unable to pierce the wall which separates them from the main force retreating toward the Brest-Litovsk line.

The determination of the Russian infantry on the Narew has been especially successful in helping to permit the entire Russian Army to occupy the new position without any loss, whereas the Germans, especially at Kovno, have suffered a débâcle. Two thousand prisoners who arrived at Vilna yesterday complain that the Russians remain in such force that none of their reserves has yet been in action and that the Germans cannot contemplate sending any of their fourteen corps westward.

Careful observers argue that the enemy have probably changed their plan. They began their Summer campaign against Warsaw. They may now be confining themselves to seizing whatever land they can in Poland and West Russia as an offset to their loss of colonies and use it as a counter in the final settlement.

Wedge Driven in Russian Line.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE AUSTRIAN ARMY IN POLAND, Aug. 9, (via London.)—The defeat of the Russians on Sunday in the fighting on the line between Lubartow and Mischow resulted in driving the groups apart, leaving a large gap between. Russian troops fighting north of Lubartow fled northeast across the Wieprz at Lessekowice, about twelve miles north of Lubartow, while those around Mischow fled northwest to reach the Wieprz by way of Baranow.

It is impossible at this moment to determine how serious a danger for the Russians this breach may prove, but probably they are amply protected against a dangerous inroad upon their line of retreat by troops withdrawing from Ivangorod along the highway running parallel with the north bank of the Wieprz to Radzyn.

In resisting the Austrian advance the Russians made a desperate attack at Miechow. The retreat of their left wing over the Wieprz at Lessekowice was a rout of pronounced character.

OFFICIAL BULLETINS OF DAY'S OPERATIONS

Mackensen's Austro-German Armies Near New Russian Line on Bug River.

BERLIN, Aug. 9, (via London.)—Praga, the suburb of Warsaw of the eastern bank of the Vistula, has been occupied by German troops, according to an official statement issued today by the German Army Headquarters' Staff, which reads:

In the eastern theatre attacking troops before Kovno have pushed forward closer to the fortress. Four hundred and thirty Russians, including three officers have been taken prisoner and eight machine guns captured.

We also have made progress against the northern and western fronts of Lomza. In the fierce fighting which accompanied these operations, three officers and 1,400 men were taken prisoners, while seven machine guns and an armored motorcar were captured.

South of Lomza, the Ostrow-Wyszkow highroad was crossed and the Russians who, in certain places offered stubborn resistance, were driven off.

Novo Georgievsg also has been cut off in the East between the Narew and Vistula Rivers.

Praga, opposite Warsaw, has been captured and our troops are advancing further toward the East.

In Warsaw a few thousand prisoners were taken.

In the southeastern theatre the army of General von Woyrsch has crossed the Garwolin-Kurow highroad, northeast of Ivangorod.

During the pursuit of a left wing army group, General Field Marshal von Mackensen forced the Russians back across the Wehr. The centre and right wings are approaching the line of Ostrow-Gans-Kuchrusk (?) on the Bug.

Vienna Tells of Pursuit.

VIENNA, Aug. 9, (via London.)—The official statement issued today at the Austrian War Office was as follows:

The enemy, who retreated from the Vistula front, is being pursued. Austro-Hungarian and German forces yesterday crossed the main road from Warsaw to Lublin in an easterly direction between the railway from Ivangorod to Lukow and the village of Garwolin. The left bank of the Wieprz and the right bank of the Vistula near Ivangorod having been cleared of the enemy, our troops crossed the Wieprz in a northeast and northerly direction.

The battlefields of Lubartow and Miechow showed traces of the enemy's hasty flight. The number of prisoners captured by the army of the Archduke Joseph Ferdinand has been increased to 8,000.

Between the Wieprz and the Bug the battle continues.

On the Dniester up to Uscieczko, near the Bukowina border, our troops repulsed the Russians at several points, capturing 1,600 men and five machine guns.

Press Germans Back in North.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 9.—The War Office tonight made public the following official communication:

South of Dvina Sunday our troops pressed the enemy in the direction of Frederikstad, (southeast of Riga), and in the sector above Schoenberg, (south of Frederikstad.) In the district northeast of Vilkomer (northeast of Kovno) the German advance guards were dislodged, sustaining heavy losses in some of the villages.

Sunday night the enemy renewed his attacks on the fortifications of Kovno. Our positions during the course of the day underwent an intense artillery bombardment by the enemy and his attacks against our advanced positions were of an extremely desperate character. According to the latest reports received, the German assault against the western front of Kovno last night was everywhere repulsed with enormous losses to them. Our artillery responds energetically to the enemy's fire.

Near Ossowetz and in the region of Jedwabno there has been violent firing.

On the left bank of the Narew Sunday there was isolated fighting, particularly in the direction of Lomza, the section north of Lomza, and the Ostrov Road.

In the other regions and on the right bank of the middle Vistula there have been no important actions.

On the roads to Vladova, as well as on the Bug, the Zlota Lipa and Dniester Rivers the situation is unchanged.

REFUGEES CROWD INTO RIGA.

Fields Outside Filled with Cattle and Horses Saved from Germans.

PETROGRÁD, Aug. 9.—Refugees from Courland continue to pour into Riga by the thousands, and the fields outside the town are filled with herds of cattle and droves of horses that have been rescued from the German invaders of the province.

Considerable distress exists among the refugees. As far as possible huts and tents have been provided for them, but throngs nevertheless are sleeping in the woods. There is a great shortage of bread in consequence of the removal of the machinery from the mills.

LEFT LUBLIN TOWN BARE.

Russians Also Devastated the Surrounding Country, Even to Grass.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—The Morning Post's Budapest correspondent, describing the retreat of the Russians prior to the occupation of Lublin by the Austro-German armies, says that everything that would have been of use in war was burned and destroyed. Houses, crops, wheat, the grass on the fields even, had been made useless. Burning hay was scattered all over it so that no animals could be grazed on the line of advance. The Russians were no doubt following on the lines of 1812 strategy.

Lublin was left intact. Only some 30,000 inhabitants out of 70,000 remained, but nothing of any use, either in cereals or raw materials, was left in the town. Its great factories are empty. Not a tool or a machine was left in them. The railway buildings were torn down and the line destroyed.

The anxious and despairing population mutely witnessed the appearance of the Austrian cavalry within the town and hid whatever they had.

Pope Condoles with East Prussians.

BERLIN, Aug. 9, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.).—Pope Benedict has addressed a letter to the Catholics of East Prussia, according to the Overseas News Agency, "expressing his fatherly sympathy for the terrible war horrors brought upon them by the Russian invasion." The letter, the news agency says, was accompanied by a large sum of money for the relief of the victims.

ROME, Aug. 9.—A notable advance from Monte Nero to the southern slopes of Burgstall, in Cadore, and the feat of hoisting to a height of over 10,000 feet mountain artillery with which an Austrian post was shelled from its entrenchments on Malga Palude, in the Trentino, are features of an official statement, dated yesterday, and given out by General Headquarters today. It reads:

In the Tonale Pass zone our Alpine detachments, advancing boldly along a difficult ridge of rocks, which rises from the south over Val del Monte, (Noce,) surprised and dispersed on the morning of the 7th troops of the enemy entrenched southeast of the peak of Ercavallo, capturing bombs, fuse cartridges, and other material.

On the same day other detachments of the enemy entrenched at Malga Palude, northeast of the peak of Ercavallo, were driven from their position by the accurate fire of our mountain artillery, which had been hoisted to a height of more than 10,000 feet on the crags of Ercavallo.

In the valley of Sexten, in Cadore, after careful preparation by our medium calibre artillery during the past few days, our infantry advanced, gradually forcing back the enemy, and reached from Monte Nero as far as the southern slopes of Burgstall, where they have been reinforced.

On the Carso plateau yesterday the enemy, with the object of hampering the progress of our approach works, launched weak but frequent counter-attacks, which were immediately repulsed. He tried to stretch wire entanglements before our lines.

Our artillery bombarded a column of the enemy on the march from Devetaki to the front. By accurate fire it also caused explosions and outbreaks of flames in the neighborhood of Marcottini.

A later bulletin issued tonight says:

On the upper Comelico (Cadore) our troops established themselves solidly on Cimo Undioi.

In Carnia one of our detachments defending Cavallo Pass between Freikofel and Val Grande attacked the Austrians' trenches opposite on the morning of the 7th and drove out the occupants. At nightfall the enemy in force attempted to recover this position, but was repulsed with heavy losses.

In the Plava zone our troops occupied some enemy entrenchments near Zagora and Paljano, taking a quantity of ammunition, hand grenades, and trench mortars.

On the Carso Plateau the action continued to develop favorably for us.

During yesterday the enemy again began to throw bombs on the Monfalcone shipyards, causing a fresh outbreak of fire, which was mastered rapidly by our valiant troops, although they were shelled continuously by the enemy's artillery.

VIENNA, Aug. 9, (via London.)—The War Office today issued the following bulletins concerning the operations on the Italian front:

The southern part of Doberdo Plateau has been under a heavy artillery fire which our artillery successfully answered.

In the Plava region there has been increased artillery activity. A feeble attempt by hostile infantry to break through our position near Zagora failed.

On the Carinthian front small hostile detachments attacked unsuccessfully at several points. Before our positions on the Bladner-Joch (7,540 feet high) the enemy left 100 dead.

In the region of the Tyrolean frontier one of our patrols on the crest of the Corno Bioca (11,265 feet high) repulsed a hostile half company, inflicting heavy losses without losing a single man.

WOULD IGNORE WILSON NOTE

German Professor Says It Was Written Under British Influence.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—The Morning Post quotes an article by Professor Flamm, head of the shipbuilding department of the Charlottenburg Technical University, published in the Täglicher Rundschau, on the last American note to Germany. Professor Flamm says:

"President Wilson, sailing in England's wake and acting under the influence of London, has given a reply that cannot be upheld before any rightly thinking forum; a reply which is in most violent opposition to his demand for right and humanity.

"Both Governments have thus defined their point of view, and a further exchange of notes seem to be superfluous. America adheres to its one-sided demand. Germany's dignity and power require, however, that a demand compliance with which would mean the sacrifice of the lifeblood of hundreds of thousands of brave warriors, the irresponsible sparing of the enemy and the infliction of most serious damage to the mother country shall be ignored."

Eugene Meyer, Sr., Native of Alsace, Contributed $10,000.

Eugene Meyer, Sr., now retired but formerly a member of the banking firm of Lazard Frères, is in receipt of official acknowledgment from the French authorities of the delivery of $10,000 as a contribution by Mr. Meyer to the Société Française de Secours aux Blessés Militaires (French Red Cross). Mr. Meyer's contribution was made through M. Jusserand, French Ambassador in Washington.

Mr. Meyer was born in Alsace, but has been an American citizen for nearly fifty years, and made his contribution to render some assistance to the land of his birth. Mr. Meyer has heretofore rendered other service to his native land and in recognition thereof was decorated some five years ago by the French Government with the Legion of Honor.

Russians Capture 308, with Camel Convoy and Cattle.

PETROGRAD, Aug. 9 (Via London, Tuesday, Aug. 10).—A communication concerning the fighting in the Caucasus was made public by the War Office tonight. It says:

"In the Caucasus, in the direction of the Euphrates, our cavalry charged the Turks and sabred many of them and captured eight officers and 300 men and a convoy of camels, a herd of cattle, a telegraphic station and munitions, arms and provisions. Our forces are pursuing the Turks without cessation.

"Saturday and Sunday fighting developed along the whole of the front from the River Tortum to the Euphrates. We attacked the Cariandag Ridge and occupied a portion of the north double pass of Merghemir."

BERLIN IS INTENT ON BALKAN EVENTS

Expects Speedy Decision by Bulgaria, Still Unpledged Despite Protocol with Turkey.

SHE IS ASKING EVEN MORE

Rumania, According to Berlin's Judgment, Is Now on the Verge of Economic Ruin.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
From a Staff Correspondent.

BERLIN, Aug. 9, (via The Hague.)—Political interest is centring increasingly on the Balkans. The specialists now agree that Bulgaria, which holds the key to the situation, is facing a final decision.

Information received here indicates that Rumania is on the verge of economic ruin as a result of what is called its dog-in-the-manger policy. With last year's crop going to waste and this year's hopelessly tied up, her economic plight is arousing no sympathy here.

The feeling in Berlin is that at no time during the war has Germany's military and diplomatic position been so strong as it is today.

Incidentally Russia's defeat and the Balkan developments are serving the useful purpose of acting as a lightning rod to the heated feeling toward America, resulting from the last Wilson note.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—A protocol signed between Turkey and Bulgaria, regarding the Dedeagatch Railway, leaves Bulgaria unpledged as to her attitude in the European war, according to a dispatch to The Times from Sofia under date of August 2. Bulgaria, the correspondent declares, is determined not to allow her hands to be tied.

The protocol is said to transfer to Bulgaria all Turkish territory west of the Mariza River. The concession is made by Turkey in the hope of thus establishing friendly relations with a neighbor whose attitude is considered of the greatest importance. Although the protocol is said to have been signed, discussion of the final details has brought up several obstacles and negotiations are now apparently at a standstill.

The Bulgarians are reported to be demanding further concessions which the Turks are unwilling to yield in the face of Russia's reverses.

GERMANS IN AFRICA READY.

Great Quantity of Munitions Was Received Just Before War Started.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—The Times says this morning:

"We learn from an authoritative source that one of the last discoveries made by the victorious South African troops in German territory was that of some 27,000 rifles, all ready packed in cases, as well as cases containing parts of a large number of machine guns, and an enormous quantity of ammunition. These had been landed a few weeks before the outbreak of the war, and were, of course, greatly in excess of any possible requirements of the garrison at that time. In the course of his trial De Wet admitted that he was marching to the German border to obtain ammunition. The inference is tolerably clear."

FRENCH WINNING IN AFRICA.

Several German Posts in Kamerun Taken by Encircling Operations.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—Encircling operations by French troops against German forces in the Kamerun, the German colony in West Africa, have resulted in further successes, according to an official statement issued by the Ministry of the Colonies today. The statement says:

"Encircling operations by French forces in the south and east Kamerun are proceeding successfully. On July 17 columns from the south took Bitam, which the enemy had evacuated during the night, thus completing the conquest of that part of the Congo ceded to Germany in 1911.

"On July 23 columns operating in the east stormed the post of Moopa, forcing the enemy to retire on Mombi, which in turn was captured four days later. Reconnoissances were immediately dispatched against Nganela Nyassi.

"Our troops are displaying great activity on the Gadji-Beri Bimba front. Gadji, after a violent combat, was evacuated by the Germans."

ENVOY SHELLED BY BRITISH?

Turk Says He Was Shot At While Coming to Arrange a Truce.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS, Gallipoli Peninsula, Turkey, June 15.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Though the British asked for the nine-hour armistice which took place on May 24 in the Ari Burnu theatre of war, they were afterwards inclined to drive a hard bargain for it, according to Major Kemal, Adjutant to General Essad Pasha, commander of the Third Ottoman Army. Major Kemal was intrusted with the negotiations preceding the armistice.

"The British sent a parliamentary into our lines on May 22," said Major Kemal to The Associated Press correspondent. "The officer came with a white flag and I was detailed to ascertain his wishes. These were that we grant an armistice for the purpose of burying the dead, many of whom had lain between the Turkish and British lines for twenty-nine days—since April 23. The stench had become unbearable to the British, the officer stated, and a period, in which all military operations were to be suspended by both sides and in which the bodies might be interred, seemed very desirable.

"I transmitted these wishes to my superior, after having made arrangements for another meeting with the parliamentary on another day. I was to come to a certain spot and all British troops were to be instructed not to fire upon me. Unfortunately, this part of the program was not carried out. When I, on the following day, came to the place which had been selected for our meeting I was fired upon by the British artillery with shrapnel. I suppose my coming had not been announced everywhere; at least, I prefer to suppose that.

"There was the usual blindfolding, and a little later I met the British officers who were to act for Sir Ian Hamilton. I presented our conditions for the armistice, and a discussion of them took place immediately.

"As is the practice during armistices, the terrain between the two hostile lines was to be divided into two equal parts by a line of sentries. Over this boundary the dead were to be exchanged, that is to say, we would bring across this line such British dead as were found on our part of the terrain and the British would do likewise, each party burying, naturally, its own dead on its own side of the line of sentries.

"To this the British agents agreed, of course. But the rifles found on both sides of the boundary had also to be disposed of. In discussing this point I found that the British were inclined to drive a hard bargain. I was in favor of an exchange of rifles, each party returning such rifles as were found with the dead intact. The British balked. A long wrangle ensued. From this I gathered that the British were under the impression that we needed the few rifles on their side of the line. I assured them that such was not the case. We finally agreed to exchange all rifles minus their locks.

"Next day the line of sentries was established and the dead were buried. For nine hours we had peace at Ari Burnu. Officers and men from both camps met and talked together as much as linguistic attainments permitted or pantomime made possible. Some even exchanged presents. When the nine hours were up the state of war was resumed."

HINDENBURG STATUE WITH HOHENZOLLERNS

Colossal Effigy Will Be Unveiled in the Siegesallee on Aug. 28.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Aug. 9, (Dispatch to The London Daily Mail.)—A colossal wooden statue of Hindenburg, thirty-nine feet high, is to be unveiled in Berlin on Aug. 28 in the open square at one end of the famous Siegesallee, which is lined with statues of the Emperor's ancestors.

The monument is to be erected in accordance with a new German scheme for raising money for war charities. The statue is to be "armored" with a coating of nails. Any German patriot who wishes to drive a nail into the effigy will be permitted to do so on payment of a mark. It is estimated that 1,600,000 nails will be required before the figure is fully covered.

BRITISH DEPORT KAISER'S PIANIST

Maria Janotha Arrested and Expelled as an Undesirable Alien.

THIRTY YEARS IN ENGLAND

Has Been Honored by British Royalty—Poles Criticise the Government's Action.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The deportation of Mlle. Maria Cecilie Natalie Janotha as an undesirable alien has been quietly carried out by the Metropolitan police.

Mlle. Janotha, who has lived in this country for thirty years, has been court pianist to the Kaiser and his grandfather, the Emperor William I., while she has been honored by the English royal family with many distinctions and frequently invited to play at public and private functions at both Buckingham Palace and Marlborough House. For years she has been a prominent figure at exclusive social functions.

Her arrest was effected early Sunday morning at her residence at Holland Road, Kensington. She made a vehement protest against the order, but was told that it came from the Home Secretary and could not be appealed against. She was taken to Tilbury and there placed on board the Flushing boat.

When the war broke out Mlle. Janotha was maintaining a large house and staff of servants at 20 Grosvenor Street. Splendidly furnished and containing a number of fine art productions, the house was the scene of many brilliant gatherings. When the aliens' restriction order was made she registered herself, giving her age as 65 and her birthplace as near Warsaw.

Since the outbreak of the war Scotland Yard authorities have kept in constant touch with the movements of Mlle. Janotha. The fact that she had the entrée to the houses of many highly placed persons was held to make this step all the more necessary.

At the Russian Embassy Mlle. Janotha was described as a German Pole.

"I am surprised to hear that she has been arrested," a member of the Embassy entourage said, "in view of the fact that she is a Pole. On the representation of the Polish Committee the British Government had agreed to make exceptions in the case of Poles, whatever their nationality, and this is the first case I have heard of in which a Pole has been deported. We certainly know nothing about her to account for her deportation."

In Polish circles in London the news caused great surprise. A prominent member of the Polish Committee said: "I think a mistake has been made, and great hardship inflicted upon a harmless woman. My opinion is that she is a very unwise woman. She is, as everybody knows, court pianist to the German Emperor, and I think that very unwisely she has boasted too much of that."

This man gave the interesting information that Mlle. Janotha was arrested three weeks ago, but was released the next day.

Maria Janotha holds membership in many Academies of Art in Italy, Great Britain, and Austria. She received the Victoria Badge from Queen Victoria and holds the highest honorary diploma from the St. Cecilia Royal Academy in Rome. She edited Lady Tennyson's songs. She was the recipient of many decorations, including one from the German Empress.

GERARD AVERTS REPRISALS.

Through His Efforts Germany and France Modify Prisoners' Treatment

BERLIN, July 31, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Through the efforts of James W. Gerard, the United States Ambassador to Germany, the French and German retaliatory measures arising out of the case of Lieutenant von Schierstaedt and Lieutenant Count von Strachwitz and a patrol of German soldiers have been averted.

Reports received in Berlin said the Germans, who were in the hands of the French, were being mistreated. Lieutenant von Schierstaedt was said to have been sentenced to deportation to French Guiana, and to have been chained to another convict. The German press demanded reprisals, and six French officers captured by the Germans were picked out for harsh treatment.

Some time ago the American Ambassador, at the request of the French Government, informed the Berlin Foreign Office that the Germans would be treated as prisoners of war and not as criminals. It is now understood that von Schierstaedt will be returned to Germany and the sentences of Count von Strachwitz and the soldiers of the patrol revoked. They will be treated as ordinary prisoners of war. The six French officers selected for retaliatory treatment are to be returned to the regular officers' camps.

MASCONOMO STORY PUZZLES WASHINGTON

No Complaint Was Filed Over That "Disguised Ship,"—Similar One Found Baseless.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—State Department officials are puzzled over the statement made by the German Information Service in New York on Friday that the German Embassy had filed with the Department a photographic copy of an affidavit purporting to have been made by Paul Richard Fenner, an American radio operator, to the effect that while he was serving on the British ship Masconomo, the vessel was disguised by hanging large signs over her sides bearing the name "Texas," and her British identity otherwise concealed by flying the American flag. The deception was practiced, the affidavit had it, while the Mosconomo was passing through the zone of German submarine activity off the British coast.

Officials of the State Department who looked into the matter today, said that they could find no such complaint with reference to a vessel named the Masconomo, but had discovered that the Germany Embassy had made a complaint with reference to the British ship Carnovan, which was almost identical with the complaint concerning the Masconomo, although the location of the alleged offense was different from that described in the Fenner affidavit given to the press by the German Information Service.

On Saturday officials of the department said that the complaint against the Masconomo had been received and was being investigated. A further investigation today, however, disclosed that they had confused the case with that of the complaint against the Carnovan. It was said at the department after an examination of the records that no representations concerning the alleged misuse of the United States flag by the Masconomo had been received by the Department from the German Embassy.

The department, it was said, had received a complaint from the German Embassy that the British steamer Carnovan had been at Nassau, Bahama Islands, and in waters in that vicinity disguised as an American vessel. It was charged that she had displayed large signs bearing the name "Texan." The name alleged to have been used by the Masconomo was "Texas." An inquiry was sent by telegraph to Nassau, but the United States naval telegraph censor at Key West did not understand that it was official and held it up. There was some delay in obtaining information on that account, but the State Department finally got its telegram through to Nassau. The answer was to the effect that the Carnovan had not been at Nassau or near by at the time described in the German complaint, and that no ship disguised as the German communication had described had been seen in those waters.

The question now is: Where is the affidavit of Fenner which the German Information Service gave textually to the press with a statement that a photographic copy of it had been filed with the State Department? The representations made to the department by the German Embassy in the case of the Carnovan approximated so closely the allegations contained in the German Information Service statement that the mystery becomes deeper.

BRITISH IMPORTS LEAP.

Increase of Nearly $81,000,000 Reported for July.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The British Board of Trade figures for the month of July show an increase in imports of $80,858,315. The principal increases were in food and metals.

The exports show a decrease of $173,607,555, chiefly in coal, yarns, textiles and machinery.

The imports from the United States in the half year ended July 30 amounted in round numbers to $620,000,000. In the same period a year ago the imports reached $350,000,000, while the year before they were $345,000,000.

Exports for July were the largest recorded since the war broke out. An interesting item in the exports, the direct result of the blockade against German trade, is the increase of nearly $2,500,000 in chemicals, drugs, dyes and colors.

GERMANS PRESS PEACE CAMPAIGN

conciliation pressed upon them by the 'diplomatist' and from many other quarters would do well to remember how President Lincoln and Mr. Seward met efforts of that kind during the civil war. They will find remarks of Seward's about the conduct of people who had been discussing among themselves the affairs of the United States without consulting the Washington Cabinet, and they will learn what Lincoln thought of 'a mistaken desire to counsel in a case where all foreign counsel excites distrust and must be rejected with firmness.'

"We have not the least fear that counsel of the kind will be tendered to the Allies from any quarter. It would too certainly meet with a very decided rebuff. Probably the Germans themselves are under no illusion on this head. The object of the present revival of peace intrigue is doubtless rather to shift the blame for the prolongation of the war upon the Allies than to excite any real peace movement among responsible neutrals, but the scheme is too transparent to succeed."

Hopes the Report is True.

The Morning Post says editorially:

"We hope the report is true, for it would mean that Germany realizes the difficulties which stand in the way of her great scheme for surrounding and crushing the Russian armies. It is certain that if Germany were sure of success on these lines she would not propose a peace, for it is not the German custom to be magnanimous. Therefore, if it is authentic, Germany's offer of peace would be an excellent sign.

"It is undoubted that Germany has also approached France with her insults and seductions, but France throws back with scorn and contempt the enemy's suggestions, and relies on her soldiers for an answer. And so it is with all of us. We stand together."

ROTTERDAM, Tuesday, Aug. 10, London)—There is much talk in Holland of the possibility of opening a discussion between the belligerents on peace terms. The Dutch Anti-War League last week at The Hague adopted a resolution, urging the Dutch Government to call a conference of the neutral powers in the interest of peace, the conference to sit until the end of the war for the purpose of preparing for and introducing mediation measures at the proper time."

Peace Offer to Russia Unconfirmed.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 9.—Persons in close touch with Court circles here say that they know nothing regarding the peace offer alleged to have been made by the German Emperor to the Emperor of Russia through the King of Denmark.

The reported proposal was said to have involved the trade of part of Poland for Galicia.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The British Government has received no official report of Germany's rumored peace proposal to Russia.

Official circles neither affirm nor deny the report, holding that if true the proposal is probably in such a tentative form that it would not be incumbent on Russia to communicate it formally to the Allies.

A GERMAN HINT TO RUSSIA.

Could Not Be Blamed if She Deserts Allies.

The semi-official Cologne Gazette of July 25 printed the following:

"The London agreement pledging the Allies to conclude no separate peace more and more reveals itself as what we had always considered it—an impudent snare set by the English in which their allies have been trapped. It only remains to ask whether, and for how long, the other signatories will feel themselves bound by this premature treaty. The French, of course, have for a long time not been free to make decisions. In their blind hatred of Germany they have sold themselves body and soul to the English, and as they have given over important bases on the Channel coast to the English, they are no longer masters in their own country.

"The Russians are much less dependent on the English. They could not be blamed if they withdrew from an agreement which was entered into on false assumptions. Before it committed itself to its old rival in Asia, the foreign policy of Russia had always revealed a healthy egoism. It is to be hoped in Russia's own interest that this egoism will prove stronger than the obstinacy of the war party, which is blinded by hatred of Germany. To be sure, there is as yet no sign that the Russians are inclined to draw this conclusion."

CITE BELGIAN NOTES AGAINST THE ALLIES

Germans Publish More from Alleged Secret Documents in the Archives at Brussels.

CHARGE ISOLATION PLOT

Ministers Represented as Reporting Schemes to Check the Influence of Central Empires.

BERLIN, Aug. 9, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung continues, according to the Overseas News Agency, to publish instalments of a series of documents purporting to be secret Belgian diplomatic reports found in Brussels by the Germans. The present instalment largely comprises comment attributed to various Belgian diplomatists regarding alleged political conditions in England, France and Italy during the years 1908 and 1909 so far as the international relations of those countries were affected.

The Overseas News Agency in its summary of the documents continues:

"Baron Leghait, Belgian Minister at Paris, is quoted as having, on Jan. 30, 1908, asked whether French jingoes understand 'whether the new grouping of powers is the result of a vast program which was wonderfully schemed in London, and in the execution of which Delcassé, the French Foreign Minister, is more tool than imitator.'

"The Minister at Berlin once more refers to Germany's peaceful attitude, saying, on Feb. 2, 1908, 'nobody ever had here in Berlin the absurd and impossible idea of aggression against England, but everybody fears English aggression.'

"The same Minister states, on June 5, 1908, that France 'has returned to Delcassé's policy, but shrouded it in a mantle of hypocracy.'

French Ambassador "Suspicious."

"The Ambassadr of France to Berlin, whose reports on German affairs have been published in a French Yellow Book, was characterized on May 13, 1908, by his Belgian colleague thus: 'He is distrusting, suspicious, smells everywhere after thoughts, and is badly informed, as are all diplomatists who make use of spies.' The same Minister, on May 30, 1908, arraigned the members of the Triple Entente as follows:

"'Russia and England, who both, although with different results, only for the sake of aggrandizement, yea, without plausible pretext, conducted wars of conquest in Manchuria and the Transvaal; or France, who just now begins the conquest of Morocco, disregarding solemn promises and without other legal title than the transfer of English rights which England did not possess.'

"The same letter says further: 'The Triple Alliance guaranteed thirty years of peace to the world because it was conducted by Germany who was satisfied with the political situation in Europe. The new grouping menaces peace because it consists of powers that desire a revision of the status quo.'

"'The Minister of Belgium at Berlin on July 18, 1906, declares that the British Ambassador in Berlin, Sir Frank Lascelles, was recalled because "he tried to eliminate the misunderstanding between the two countries which he considered as stupid and highly obnoxious for both, but his zeal did not correspond to the political ideas of his sovereign."'

"The Belgian Minister at Paris, on Oct. 8, 1908, declared that Russia wanted to tear to pieces the Berlin treaty.

King Edward's Efforts.

"The Belgian Minister at Berlin, who was anti-German, characterized on Feb. 18, 1909, the political rôle of the King of England as follows: 'The King of England gives assurance that peace is the aim of all his endeavors. This he has said always since the beginning of his successful diplomatic campaign. The leading intention of this campaign is to isolate Germany, but every one is aware that the peace of the world never has been more seriously threatened than since the King of England tried to secure it.'

"This same minister, on March 31, 1909, characterized the state of public opinion in England as follows: 'The state of mind which prevailed in England reminds one of that in France from 1866 to 1870. France then believed it was her privilege to hinder Germany in the reconstruction of her unity for the reason she considered this as a menace to the continental hegemony which France had enjoyed until that time. In the same manner England today regards it as an unfriendly act and a menace to peace if Germany refuses to enter, by contract, into an obligation to depend upon the mercy of England.'

"The Belgium Minister at Berlin, on April 17, 1909, thus characterized the treachery of Italy: 'For a long time past no one in either Berlin nor Vienna has indulged in illusions as to the probable assistance of Italy. The Italian Government is entering into engagements concerning its course toward France and England, and at the same time is flirting uninterruptedly with London and Paris. Italy, nevertheless, clings to the Triple Alliance and is using this as a guarantee for the fidelity of her new friends, who inspire her with limited confidence only. Italy reserves the right to side with the stronger party as she did at Algeciras, where she assisted France and England, and as she did more recently in the Oriental problem, where she finally joined Germany and Austria-Hungary after having played an uncertain part until it became aparent which side would be successful.'

"Under date of June 21, 1909, the Belgian Minister at Berlin said: 'The Triple Alliance always has been considered in this spirit in Berlin because it was concluded with a purely defensive purpose.'

Attempts to Win Spain.

"The Belgian Chargé d'Affaires in London on April 12, 1907, wrote:

"'King Edward's visit, made to his royal nephew in Carthagena, had as its main object to try to strengthen the bonds that unite Spain with Great Britain and to diminish as much as possible German influence in Madrid.'

"The Minister of Belgium at Berlin confirmed this idea, writing on April 18, 1907:

"'The King of England's visit to the King of Spain is one manoeuvre in the campaign for Germany's isolation which His Majesty, Edward VII., conducts personally and with equal tenacity and success.'

"The main weapon in the campaign of the English press, the newspaper says, is thus arraigned by the Belgian Minister at London, Count Lalaing, on is largely responsible for the hostile feeling between the two nations, but what could be expected of newspapermen like Mr. Harmsworth (now Lord Northcliffe,) the editor of the Daily Graphic, the Daily Express, the Evening News, and the Weekly Dispatch, who said in an interview to the Matin: 'Yes, we detest the Germans cordially. They make themselves odious in the whole of Europe. I shall not admit that my paper prints the slightest thing that may hurt France, but I should not like to see anything published that might be pleasant to the Germans.'

"'This same editor in 1899 attacked with equal violence the Frenchmen who intended to boycott the Paris Fair and wrote: "The French have succeeded in convincing John Bull that they are his bitter enemies. England has hesitated a long time between Germany and France, but it always has valued the German character, while it finally feels contempt for France. A cordiale May 24, 1907:

"'A certain kind of press, known here under the name of Yellow Press, entente with her next neighbor cannot exist. Enough of France, which has neither courage nor political sense."'

Thought Germany Peaceful.

"The Belgian Ministers," the Overseas News Agency says, "state in the documents found that Germany's intentions were peaceful. The Belgian Minister at Berlin on May 30, 1907, said:

"'England ought to know that a German attack, even in the very remote future, is actually impossible. On the contrary, Germany has everything to fear, since, for centuries, England has accustomed to destroy the naval forces of foreign nations as soon as they arrived at a certain important position. After Hoiland, France has known this. Then it was the turn of Denmark, whose ships were destroyed without the least provocation by Admiral Nelson after having entered the port of Copenhagen as a friend.'

"Baron Greindl, the Belgian Minister at Berlin, criticising under date of June 8, 1907, the English press campaign, wrote:

"'The Times leads in the campaign of calumny and defamation. Its Berlin correspondent, who has every opportunity for obtaining better information, stirs up English hatred against the Germans by pretending that the Imperial Government has ambitious plans, whose silliness is manifest, and by attributing to Germany's Government dark intrigues, of which it never has had a thought.'"

The Overseas News Agency says: "France in the meantime was thrown into the English campaign. Count Lalaing, the Belgian Minister at London, on June 17, 1907, writing:

"'In order to prepare for the moment against dangers that probably exist only in her imagination or perhaps in order to strengthen her position as one of the leaders of inner politics, France accepts the debt of gratitude which will appear heavy if one day England unveils the ambitions for which she intends to use the forces that she now has assembled around herself.'

"The Belgian Minister at Berlin on June 22, 1907, wrote:

"These measures of precaution taken against imaginary dangers are of a character to cause and stimulate in nations the idea that Germany is the aggressive power against whose enterprises other nations must unite. The harm would not be so very great if these treaties of alliances would be merely superfluous, but they compromise the cause of peace."

BELGIANS ACCUSE GERMANS.

Hague Convention Broken by Forced Labor in Conquered Territory.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—A report of the Belgian committee investigating violations of international law, issued here today by the Belgian Legation, is devoted to instances of alleged violations by the Germans of Article 52 of the Fourth Hague Convention governing the laws and customs of land warfare.

Examples cited cover alleged German attempts, first, by offering wages as high as 20 marks (about $5) a day, and finally by force, to compel Belgian civilians to work in arsenals, on railways used for military purposes, and in wire factories. The report gives details of alleged violations at Luttre, Malines, and Swevedhem, and quotes the text of an order declared to have been signed by Lieut. Gen. Count von Westarf, the German commander at Ghent, dated in that city June 10, in part as follows:

"The attitude of certain factories which, on the pretext of patriotism, relying on The Hague Convention, refuse to work for the German Army, proves that among the population there is an inclination to raise difficulties for the administration of the German Army. In this connection I inform you that I will suppress such manoeuvres by all means in my power."

GERMAN CATHOLICS APPEAL.

Would Protest to Peace Conference Against Arms Traffic.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 9.—Resolutions indorsing the peace conference to be held in Chicago on Sept. 5 and 6, and recommending that the State and local organizations affiliated with the Central Verein send delegates to the meeting to protest against the continued shipment of munitions of war to Europe, were adopted today by the National Federation of German-American Catholic Societies in convention here.

"Every American citizen deplores the war," said President Joseph Frey of New York, "and as American citizens they should protest against any activities by Americans which will have a tendency to prolong the war. This certainly is not a religious, political, or national question."

HANOTAUX THINKS WILSON TOO MEEK

French ex-Foreign Minister Says the President Is Not Firm Enough with Germany.

LOSING CHANCE AS ARBITER

Commenting on Our Protests, He Expresses Surprise at Their Friendly Tone.

Gabriel Hanotaux, the former French Minister of Foreign Affairs, writing in a recent issue of the Figaro, discusses President Wilson's notes to Germany and William J. Bryan's resignation.

"I have thought," writes M. Hanotaux, "that it would be wise to let some time pass before commenting on the last note of President Wilson. This note does not greatly differ from the first two. It seems rather to mark a slight retraction from the notes in the framing of which Secretary Bryan collaborated.

"How did it happen that Secretary Bryan resigned rather than sign the second note? This is one of the mysteries of American politics. It is said that Mr. Bryan hopes to be a Presidential candidate in the next election, and that he believes that he has found a platform in 'peace at any price.'

"Let us consider the third note, and consider it in its international consequences. The principles cited are incontestable, and sufficiently affirmed."

M. Haanotaux then quotes the conclusion of the last note of President Wilson, in which the President so firmly stated the American position in the matter of submarine warfare in so far as that warfare endangered the lives of American citizens traveling on the seas.

"The whole of the third note," continues M. Hanotaux, "has an extremely polite and amicable character, but positive in the demands it makes upon the German Government. If it only had not the fault of being the third note.

"Before the attack on the Lusitania the Government of the United States forewarned Germany. After that attack it notified the German Government that it awaited Germany's explanation. Now they are still waiting. When will they cease waiting?

"We would be lacking in frankness to the great sister republic if we allowed it to think that this series of documents of such a particularly affectionate and friendly tone was not the cause of great surprise. Public opinion on two continents was astonished, and although we do so with respect and confidence, why cannot we say what we think?

Friendly to Germany.

"Up to the present time the Allies, thanks to God, have not endangered or menaced the life of a single American, but they have not received the twentieth part of friendly proposals which the German Government has attracted to itself by its implacable execution. There were treaties. They have been violated. There are, as Mr. Wilson says, 'sacred rights of humanity.' They have been disregarded. There exist international legislation founded on moral laws. They were not considered. These constant, conscious, announced and realized violations brought forth eloquent protestations, it is true, but they have been neither efficacious nor even timely. We will keep quiet, but our American friends have commenced to suffer. Why should we not be astonished?

"We are sufficiently informed on the sentiment of the American people, and they are informed as to ours, so that no illfeeling between them could exist. We know that France has found in the Republic of the United States infinite sympathy and a devotion that is admirable. We know that hearts have been moved in America and that the Lusitania disaster did not leave an American soul indifferent.

"Recently Mr. Whitney Warren, (the New York architect) in an address at the American Club expressed sentiment that found an echo in our own hearts. He spoke as a free man, expressing his own opinion. Being an American he spoke only as an American can. He referred in heated terms of a certain class of pacifists. There was in his discussion a view of justice which expresses in excellent fashion the point of view of Europe.

"Mr. Warren in the course of that address said:

"'We do not seem to realize that we are the most important neutral, and to this we should add the example. The eyes of Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Holland, are fixed on the United States. All the smaller States wait to hear our voice, to make a chorus with it. They call and they await us. They insist that we take the direction of a great concerted protest, without waiting.'

Losing Chance as Arbiter.

"To speak to the neutrals, to give them the tone, the measure, the example, and encouragement is a providential opportunity in these tragic times which afflict humanity. They say that President Wilson is waiting for the hour when he can present himself to the belligerents as arbiter, and that he holds the confidence of both sides. If this is his object I fear that he is turning his back on it. At the end of such a terrible conflict it is scarcely probable that an excess of meekness and vacillation will give to any power whatsoever the authority and prestige to speak loud for right and to bring it about.

"President Wilson is a jurist. He knows the weight of principle. The peace of the future will be the strict application of those principles on which all law rests, or on the other hand the triumph of universal brigandage which a German victory would bring about, and of which America would be the first victim.

"The future arbiter of peace will be the man or the Government, who will speak loudly at the right time for the cause of humanity."

FLIES ARE A PLAGUE IN TURKISH CAMPS

No Screens Available, but Associated Press Correspondent Hears of No Typhoid.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 30, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The health of the Turkish troops at the Gallipoli and Dardanelles fronts is good and the wounded from these theatres of war are well cared for. To this may be added that the Turkish medical staff has shown much resourcefulness and that the occasional paucity of materials and medicaments is met in a spirit one would not expect to find in an organization of which so little good was said during the late Balkan war. The capacity of the hospitals inspected by The Associated Press correspondent is over 3,000.

Camp hygiene is well administered in the Ottoman army. Trenches visited were found to be scrupulously clean. The food of the men is well cooked and care is taken that none but good water is drunk by the men. Every effort is made to keep the clothing of the men free from vermin, and to facilitate this retorts, in which infested clothes may be baked or disinfected, are built wherever they are needed. Great ingenuity has been displayed in this. As a rule, the retort is nothing more than a large hole in some convenient hillside, similar to a bake-oven. Its floor is paved with brick or field stone, and under this two other holes are dug for the fire that is to heat the retort. The construction is extremely simple and not a single piece of iron is used in it. Even the door of the retort is generally a large rock.

In the camps visited all latrines were found in an excellent state. Lime was being used as a disinfectant, because other chemicals cannot be had in Turkey at present. To combat the fly pest messes and kitchens are placed so that air currents can sweep through them. This method is not so effective as screening, but screens are hard to get in Turkey. It may be said in this connection that the experience of the Turkish troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula with flies has been a most trying one, but that so far the fly has not proved as great an agent of disease as has been charged in other parts of the world. It is thought, however, that this is largely due to the fact that the Turkish soldier eats very little uncooked food or cooked food which has been exposed to contamination long. His mess of rice, beans, peas and meat is generally too hot to invite a fly.

All men at the front have been vaccinated against typhoid and typhus. On June 24, when the correspondent visited a hospital for contagious cases, the entire Turkish force on the peninsula had but three cases of mild enteric fever and none of typhoid or typhus.

Ismes Bey, Captain-Surgeon, cares for all the severely wounded of the Turkish Avi Burnou group. His hospital is probably one of the best to be found anywhere. Its booths and tents are located under tall pine trees and are well kept. The beds, though none too comfortable, perhaps, are scrupulously clean and the well-being of the patients is promoted by having men from the "working reserves" keep the flies from them with white cloths fastened to long, thin poles. The construction of the booths does not permit "fly proofing" and good ventilation at the same time, and since the fanning against the flies also tends to keep the men cool, Captain Ismes Bey decided upon the method of fly chasing employed.

In the Ismes Bey hospital only severely wounded are received. The operating room is a large tent with wooden floor, is fly proof, and the dust is guarded against by keeping the ground near by constantly sprinkled. The medical staff of Ismes Bey is probably one of the best in the field. Its members are young men with training and experience gained in Germany and France. Their work is quick and thorough, as watching a number of operations and amputations seemed to indicate. Extracting a large shell splinter from the upper arm of a soldier, an operation which necessitated the spitting of the muscle to the bone, took less than ten minutes, for instance.

When a severely wounded patient has become "transportable," he is shipped to one of the city hospitals. Ismes Bey hospital loses only from 3 to 4 per cent. of cases in which operation has been necessary. The total loss of all cases in from 17 to 18 per cent., many of the severely wounded dying shortly before or during the operation.

The Turkish soldier is not very susceptible to pain. He gives little trouble when wounded, and his extraordinary frugality makes him a patient who is easily cared for. Medical men are of the opinion that the total abstinence of most Turkish soldiers reduces the possibility of wound infections, lessens the shock susceptibility and aids in the recovery of the patient.

Ultimately all severely wounded are brought to Constantinople, where about a score of well-appointed hospitals are being maintained. Those visited by The Associated Press correspondent left little to be desired. These hospitals have every modern accessory of surgery, such as X-ray department, plants for the sterilization of dressing materials and laboratories. Patients in whom the wound has caused a temporary paralyzation of motor nerves and muscles are sent to one of the many mineral baths in Turkey, and recently an institution for electro-therapeutical treatment has been opened for the benefit of invalided soldiers.

COTTON SUBSTITUTE FOUND BY GERMANS

Ordinary Wood Pulp Employed as a Basis for High Explosives.

THREE PLANTS KEPT BUSY

The Substitute Already Used Successfully—Large Reserves of Timber Accumulated.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—A citizen of a neutral State who has just made a tour through Germany and acquired a large amount of information about the industrial and economic conditions of the country, gives to The Daily Chronicle an account of the work of German chemists in discovering a substitute for cotton as a basis for high explosives. This was found in the shape of ordinary wood pulp. He says:

"Experiments are still being carried on, but sufficient progress has already been made to enable the substitute to be used freely and successfully. The great difficulty in the way of using wood pulp as a substitute for cotton is the presence of many impurities which are not found in the latter commodity. The most important of these impurities are resin and oxycellulose. Unless these are completely removed the resulting explosives would be uncertain in action, and highly dangerous to those manufacturing them.

"I was not able to discover the whole secret of the process, but in its early stages it is the same as that which is followed in turning wood into pulp for the manufacture of paper. The wood is ground, cooked, and changed into liquid form. Then it is cleansed by new processes and then pressed into sheets. It is then ready for the nitration process, and the addition of other necessary chemicals.

"Germany is under no difficulty so far as the supply of the raw material is concerned. At one time she was dependent upon Scandinavia for supplies of wood pulp, but some years ago she set herself the task of making her own, since when she has become largely self-supporting in this direction.

"Three of the largest factories are now engaged in turning out the new basis for explosives, as well as the seasoned wood required for making wood pulp. Large reserves of timber have been accumulated from my own country and from Russia, so there is no fear of any shortage.

"I was assured that if the supply of raw cotton to Germany were entirely stopped she might be able to tide over the difficulties."

WARNS AGAINST COTTON BAN.

Daily Standard Fears It Would Antagonize 25,000,000 Americans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LODON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—The Daily Chronicle, in an editorial on the public meeting which is to be held in London tomorrow to urge the Government to declare raw cotton contraband, warns those who advocate such a measure that it will not solve the difficulties that have arisen between Great Britain and the United States, nor prevent cotton entering neutral countries like Sweden, Denmark, and Holland.

"Even now," says the newspaper, "we can and do stop cotton consigned to neutral ports when there is a presumption of its hostile designation. What, then, is the advantage of making cotton contraband? It seems to us to consist in the fact that it will regularize one position in American eyes and stamp cotton cargoes with a taint of illegality from the outset.

"There is one large American interest which is adversely affected by the war, and which ought to be protected as far as we can protect it from injury. We refer to the cotton growers. It has been suggested that we ought to buy the cotton that would normally have gone to Germany and Austria. This is quite a manageable financial proposition, for it would not involve the expenditure of more than £30,000,000 ($150,000,000.) It would be necessary to buy up the cotton that would but for the war go to Holland and the Scandinavian countries, and then to allot to these their normal supplies. In short, we would need to buy up practically the whole of America's cotton exports and then stabilize prices.

"This would be a very big financial deal, but it ought not to be beyond the capacity of statesmanship, informed and helped by expert advice. Anyhow, we are strongly of the opinion that the British Government ought to do everything in its power to allay American irritation, so far as that irritation has a legitimate cause. It would be little short of a calamity if 25,000,00 American people who are dependent on cotton, got it rooted in their minds that their interests were being sacrificed to British sea power."

RECALLS 1804 SINKING TO JUSTIFY LUSITANIA

German Professor Goes Back 111 Years and Tells What He Found.

Ferdinand Tonnies, who is described by the German Information Service as "Professor of Political Economy in the University of Kiel," has discovered, according to that organization, a British precedent for the sinking of the Lusitania in the destruction by the British fleet 111 years ago of a Spanish marine ship in which nine noncombatants lost their lives.

A letter written by the professor to The New Statesman of London, which is quoted by the Information Service, bitterly assails England, and quotes this precedent as follows:

"'The British Government issued instructions to seize four of these ships (treasure ships from South America) which were due at Cadiz. On Oct. 5, 1804, the ships were encountered off Cadiz by four British frigates. The Spanish commander was summoned to surrender and disregarded the summons, the forces being equal on either side, though he was quite unprepared to resist. A short but furious action followed, in which one of the Spanish vessels, with a number of noncombatants on board, blew up. The other three were captured, with treasure valued at $5,000,000.' (H. W. Wilson, Cambridge Modern History, Volume IX., Pages 217-218.)

"In an older work the following is narrated with regard to the noncombatants who met such a dreadful death:

"'A man, with his wife, four daughters and five sons, on his way home to Spain, was, with one of the sons, on board another frigate, and they had the horrible fate to be spectators of the awful catastrophe which in a moment deprived them of their relations and robbed them of their property, which had been acquired during a twenty-five years' residence in South America.'

"'It was sad,' you will say, 'but there were after all only nine persons. Compare this with the Lusitania. The deaths of the nine persons who were on a war vessel was one of the normal horrors of war.'

"Horrors of war! Pardon! The attack on the Spanish treasure fleet by four English frigates at the command of the British Government took place in time of peace! The British Ambassador was in Madrid. He had all kinds of 'complaints' to bring forward, which he discussed with the Spanish Minister. In time of peace the English Admiral surprised ships laden with silver belonging to a neutral State. In time of peace he blew up a ship in which five women and four young men or boys were passengers and stole $5,000,000. In time of peace the British Admiralty gave the order to attack the Spanish flag in all seas and to send to the bottom ships of any tonnage, even those of less than a hundred tons."

In the case of the Lusitania, of course, no demand to surrender was made. She was torpedoed without any warning whatever.

LUSITANIA IN 10 VOLUMES.

Mrs. A. G. Vanderbilt Has Record of Press Clippings Compiled.

An unusual record of the destruction of the Lusitania and the subsequent developments in the case has been prepared at the request of Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt by Walter Hyams & Co. of this city. The record consists of ten volumes of newspaper clippings concerning the sinking of the ship by a German submarine. Each volume contains 100 pages of clippings, and is an inch and a half thick.

The books are bound in Russian levant and bear the inscription "S. S. Lusitania, May 7, 1915." Many of the clippings tell of the heroic last moments of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, during which he assisted women and children on the sinking ship.

Mrs. Vanderbilt intends ultimately to present the volumes to the library of Yale University, it was said yesterday. Clippings from THE NEW YORK TIMES figure prominently in the collection.

FIRST SHIPMENT OF ENGLISH GOLD

ish Government. Canada has floated $40,000,000 in notes here.

Other Nations' Loans Here.

France, early in the war, floated $50,000,000 notes here, and recently got a loan of $45,000,000, secured by American railroad securities. Russia got $25,000,000 credit here, this having been paid off only recently. Italy has established no credits here. Germany sold $10,000,000 of notes about three months ago and has attempted no further financing here.

The last shipment of gold to New York was received on July 7 from Ottawa. Up to that time shipments in $5,000,000 lots were common and they helped to bolster the exchange on sterling. The sudden stopping of gold shipments since then has been the principal topic of discussion in Wall Street. In all quarters it was expected that a British credit must be established very soon, even if on unfavorable terms for England.

While it was realized generally that a direct shipment of gold from England would ease the exchange situation it was not considered likely that such a course would be adopted because of the danger involved. The German espionage system, it was thought, would be very quick to learn of the shipment and give opportunity to the German submarines to waylay such a shipment.

It was regarded as significant last night that the gold should have been sent to Halifax and thence by rail to this city. It would have been a more direct route to ship straight to this port. The indirect route being the shorter on the water, it was suggested, was the safer.

KOLYNOS

Has a Business-Like Taste

THE toilet of civilized man is a time-absorbing ritual, in which the minute or two devoted to dental hygiene—BRUSHING THE TEETH—is generally grudged. Few people are disposed to make a HOBBY of their teeth.

To tempt people to the daily use of dental preparations, in former years many dentifrices depended upon the same FLAVOR TACTICS practiced by chewing gum manufacturers and the dispensers of Summer drinks.

In France, where feminine fancies run riot, the manufacturers of most dental creams have found it necessary to give them a cherry red color, the suggestion being that their use will make the gums cherry red, like the lips.

KOLYNOS IS NEITHER A FLAVOR NOR A COSMETIC. IT IS THE EMBODIMENT, IN A PURE WHITE DENTAL CREAM, OF THE PRINCIPLE OF SCIENTIFIC MOUTH CLEANLINESS.

It has a characteristic taste — a BUSINESS-LIKE TASTE — which tells you from the moment it enters your mouth that a beneficial action is taking place. It is an EXTREMELY REFRESHING AND PLEASANT TASTE.

Most people like the taste of KOLYNOS, which is in reality a fine, fresh feeling of unusual cleanliness. Children especially like it.

"HOW CLEAN MY MOUTH FEELS!" is the most frequent description of that taste by the users of KOLYNOS. Yet not an atom of anything is added to this ideal dental cream to produce either flavor or color.

Both are entirely due to the ingredients which in their combination make this a preparation of high disinfectant and germicidal power and the smoothest of tooth-cleansing agents—without grit or any other substance which might injure the priceless enamel.

KOLYNOS is more than a mere dental cream. It cleanses your whole mouth of DANGEROUS DISEASE GERMS and LIMITS THEIR REPRODUCTION FOR SEVERAL HOURS. It CLEANSES YOUR TOOTH-BRUSH OF COUNTLESS DISEASE GERMS, which otherwise would multiply amongst the soggy, sodden bristles, to re-enter your mouth when again you brushed your teeth.

The business-like taste of KOLYNOS is an index to its character. Ask YOUR DENTIST about it. It is as economical as it is useful—sold by your druggist at the matter-of-fact price of twenty-five cents.

LOCOMOBILE STRIKE PROBABLY AVERTED

Bridgeport Employes Submit Demands and Agree to Await Directors' Reply.

BOTH SIDES ARE HOPEFUL

Labor Leaders Turn Attention to Lake Torpedo Boat and British-American Plants.

Special to The New York Times.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 9.—It is believed here tonight that the threatened strike of the 2,500 machinists and other employes of the Locomobile Company of America has been averted. S. T. Davis, Jr., the President of the Board of Directors of the company, heard the demands of the employes today and succeeded in inducing them to wait for their answer and remain at work until the Directors meet next Thursday. The men agreed to this in the belief that the answer would be favorable when it came.

A sub-committee of five men, representing the machinists, called upon Mr. Davis this morning to present the demands of the union. They were pleasantly received, being ushered into Mr. Davis's private office as soon as they appeared at the outer door. They told him the union had declined to accept the company's bonus offer, and had voted to insist upon the original demands. The demands are these:

An eight-hour day with the same pay that the men are now receiving on the basis of a ten-hour day. Time and one-half for overtime work, with double time for work on Sundays and holidays. Fifteen per cent. more for night work than the day men receive.

The Locomobile Company now pays time and one-quarter for overtime work, with time and one-half for work on Sunday. The company also allowed the 15 per cent. increase for night work recently.

Mr. Davis told the committee that he was not authorized to give a positive answer, but that he would gladly place the union's stipulations before the Directors at their meeting next Thursday. The committee agreed to this.

At noon nearly every employe of the Locomobile plant left the grounds to learn from the committee what the result of its visit to Mr. Davis had been, and, according to union leaders, had the committee reported discourteous treatment or an unfavorable answer, they would not have gone to work. But the members of the committee, who met the employes in an open field adjacent to the plant, gave their favorable report and all of the workmen returned to their places after their noon hour. The employes were also notified when they left work this evening that a meeting scheduled for this evening for final consideration of the company's answer had been adjourned until Thursday evening, so that the Directors of the company might act. No one in Bridgeport, so far as can be learned, now believes that there will be a strike at the Locomobile works.

No Trouble, Says Davis.

After the interview with the union committee, Mr. Davis gave out this statement:

"I don't see any reason for any one to get excited or to lose his temper, for there is no issue to quarrel about. The company several days ago voluntarily increased the wages of the employes through a profit-sharing plan. Immediately after, upon learning that there was a division of opinion among the employes as to whether they preferred the increased pay or shorter hours, the company put the matter entirely up to the employes, stating that business conditions warranted it in granting them advantages that had been impossible in the past, and that they could have their choice. I don't see how the company could go much further, and the employes seem to feel the same about it. So far as I can discern every one in the plant is satisfied and happy."

The Locomobile plant is now running twenty-two hours a day, a large part of its output being in motor trucks for the European allies.

J. J. Keppler, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists, was here today and said the Locomobile situation was in the hands of the local committee and he had nothing to do with it.

"It is up to Mr. Davis whether the men strike or continue to work," said Mr. Keppler. "I have made no suggestions. Mr. Davis may wait till it is too late and run up against the same kind of a snag that some of the manufacturers did in Plainfield, N. J. As soon as the Locomobile matter is settled the leaders will direct their attention to other manufacturers in the city.

Unions Assail Mayor.

The cases of George J. Bowen, business manager of the local union, and Frederick Cederholm and Louis Nelson, members of the union, who were arrested while making speeches near the Locomobile plant last Thursday, will come up before City Court Judge Frank L. Wilder tomorrow. In the meantime they were released in $100 bail. But the Central Labor Union of Bridgeport, composed of all of the labor organizations of the city, tonight sent a letter of protest to the Common Council, in which Mayor Wilson was criticised for causing the arrest of the men, and his impeachment was suggested. The letter was signed by Carl Lang, President of the Central Labor Union; James Dunn, President of the Building Trades; Charles Motiram, President of the Metal Trades; Henry Webster, President of the Machinists' Union; Jasper McLevy, Vice President of the State Federation of Labor, and George Smith.

After it had rehearsed the version of the arrests attested by the unions, it said:

Gentlemen of the Common Council: The members of organized labor in this city demand that your honorable body take immediate steps to determine by what right the Mayor of this city set aside the civil and constitutional law of the community and substituted that of force. Without question this was the most flagrant and despotic outbreak of official anarchy that has taken place anywhere in this country.

As the responsible legislative body of the city we demand that you take the necessary steps to restore to every citizen of this city the civil and constitutional rights that are guaranteed to him and to remove from office any officer that sets himself above the law of the land and substitutes the anarchistic principles of brute force in his or their ambition to serve some special interest.

This letter was handed to the Clerk of the Council by Alderman John H. Casey, who as a Democrat is not of the Mayor's political affiliations. The letter was read by the Clerk and as soon as he had finished, Malcolm Macfayden, a Republican, the President of the Council, who presides in the absence of the Mayor, moved that the letter be referred to the Miscellaneous Committee. The motion was seconded and passed without comment from the Mayor or anyone else.

Those present at this proceeding gained the impression that the letter had been effectively and permanently pigeon-holed. The members of the union took this view, and consequently were much dissatisfied tonight. Several leaders said that the matter would not be allowed to drop.

With the promising outlook for peace between the Locomobile Company and the machinists, interest here is now centring in the demands that the union has made and will make upon other firms. The chief employers in Bridgeport whose dispute with the machinists is still pending are the Lake Torpedo Boat Company and the American and British Manufacturing Company, both of which are said to have large United States Government orders.

Because of the requirements of the Government, these two plants are on an eight-hour basis, but, according to the union, their scales of wages are not up to union standards, so they have received demands for a generl increase in pay, to an average of 20 per cent. J. J. Keppler presented the demands, but they did not fix a time limit for an answer, nor was there any threat of a strike.

H. M. S. Robinson, General Manager of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, said tonight that he had received the demands, but he declined to comment upon them. William H. Johnston, President of the International Association of Machinists, will arrive here tomorrow and conduct the negotiations with the two companies.

The latest development in the labor situation was the arrival here tonight of Miss Mary Scully and Miss Margaret Ryan of New York, organizers of the American Federation of Labor, who will begin an effort to organize the women workers in the manufacturing plants of this vicinity.

MACHINISTS AWAIT KEPPLER.

Some Local Officials Talk of Demanding 50 Per Cent. Increase.

Local officials of the Machinists' Union yesterday threatened to call on machinists of this city to demand a 50 per cent. increase in their present wages if the Metal Trades Association forces a general strike as the result of the demand of the workers in two shops for a 15 per cent. wage increase.

"We consider the demand for a 15 per cent. increase which the machinists of the Garvin shop are striking for to be very moderate," said J. Deering, business agent for District No. 1 of the International Association of Machinists yesterday. "We visited some of the shops doing work for the Garvin Company today, and we will visit all of the shops working for the company and ask that they stop work. If they refuse to quit working for the Garvin people we will order strikes in these subsidiary shops. There are about sixteen or eighteen shops working for the concern and they employ from 25 to 250 men each. And if a general strike is forced through refusal to meet the union's present demands we will stick out for a 50 per cent. wage increase."

Secretary James Wilson of District 15 of the Machinists' Union said the granting of an eight-hour day and an increase in wages for some of their men by the E. W. Bliss Company had prevented immediate strike of the 4,000 men in the Bliss and subsidiary shops, and that the strike would be held in abeyance until the company had opportunity to grant further wage increases. If the company declines to grant any further increase, however, Secretary Wilson said a strike will be called.

"We are awaiting the return to the city of J. J. Keppler, with whom we will arrange a general conference of the local officials next Monday night," Secretary Wilson said.

PROVIDENCE PLANT GUARDED.

Brown & Sharpe Employ Burns Men to Protect Tool Factory.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 9.—William A. Viall of the Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Company said today that the company had employed guards, through the Burns Detective Agency, to protect the plant and employes. This measure was taken, he said, as a precaution in view of many outrages that had been going on in various parts of the country. The plant is one of the biggest tool factories in the United States.

William J. Burns, head of the detective organization, said:

"We have undertaken the work of guarding the Brown & Sharpe plant in conjunction with our work of the same character in other large plants throughout the United States. We have also decided to establish a branch office in Providence at once, as the city has become a very important centre for our organization. We feel that with the rapid growth of Providence it offers the same field as do Boston, New York and other large cities.

"Our organization, before beginning the work of guarding plants, went into the subject very carefully, and it was not until we decided that the protection afforded was equally for the men as for the employers that we decide to undertake this character of supervision."

STURTEVANT MEN ACT.

Machinists in Readville Plant to Demand a New Scale.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 9.—Machinists employed at the B. F. Sturtevant plant tonight formulated demands for an eight-hour day without loss of wages, pay at the rate of 50 cents an hour, and time and one-half rates for overtime. They voted to send a committee to the company tomorrow, and to take action on its report tomorrow night or Wednesday.

The company, like the Becker Milling Machine Company of the Hyde Park District, where a strike among 600 workers has been in effect for ten days, is controlled by ex-Governor Eugene N. Foss, its Treasurer. Its plant in Readville employs about 1,500 men.

Wireworkers End Strike.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 9.—Officials of the W. A. Clark Wire Company this afternoon posted a notice that unless the 500 men who went out on strike two weeks ago returned to work tomorrow morning the factory would close down indefinitely and the work would be done elsewhere. The company offers the men an increase of 10 per cent. in their wages. At a meeting tonight, seventy-five of the strikers declared they would accept the offer of the company.

PRINTERS URGE PEACE.

Typographical Convention Also Praises the President's Course.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 9.—Resolutions urging the warring nations of Europe to conclude an honorable and lasting peace and praising the course of President Wilson in handling foreign complications were adopted today at the sixty-first annual convention of the International Typographical Union.

The resolutions were presented by James M. Lynch, State Labor Commissioner of New York and former President of the union. Copies were forwarded to Washington.

ALL HAITI'S AFFAIRS NOW IN OUR HANDS

We Take Over Administrative Control—Naval Officers Collect Revenues.

ONE REBEL LEADER DEFIANT

General Cacos Refuses to Disarm His Men and Tries to Starve Cape Haitien—Ultimatum Sent.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The United States Government has taken over control of the administration of Haitian affairs, civil and military. Rear Admiral William B. Caperton of the United States Navy is in complete charge of the republic. Naval officers have been designated to collect the revenues of the republic, and the process of disarming loyal and revolutionary troops is going on rapidly.

The most encouraging feature of the situation is that Dr. Rosolvo Bobo, candidate for President on a platform providing that Haiti should not permit the United States to collect and distribute Haitian revenues for the benefit of the republic's foreign creditors, has called off his revolutionary movement and notified the United States that he will have his men lay down their arms. He announced also, according to advices received at the State Department today from Mr. Davis, the American Chargé d'Affaires at Port au Prince, that he would be a candidate for President in the elections to be held as soon as the country has been pacified by the American forces.

As matters stand now, danger of serious revolutionary disturbances seems to have passed. It is probable, however, according to information obtained in official quarters here today, that the Washington Government will continue to send marines to Haiti and will keep a large force of them there until after arrangements have been entered into between the United States and a new Government to be established in Haiti as to the future relationship of the two countries.

The view prevails here that American forces will not be withdrawn from Haiti until after an agreement has been negotiated which will give control of the collection and distribution of Haitian customs to the United States and will enable this Government to intervene for the purpose of suppressing disturbances and to guarantee the political and territorial integrity of the Haitian Republic at all times.

It was announced at the Navy Department today that Assistant Paymaster Delos P. Heath, U. S. N., had been placed in charge of the Custom House at Port au Prince, and that Paymaster Charles Morris, U. S. N., had been placed in charge of the Custom House at Cape Haitien. Officials explained that, as there was no native Government in Haiti, it was necessary for the representatives of the United States to assume charge of fiscal and other functions in the country. The revenues collected by United States officers, it was said, would be held for the benefit of the Haitian Government which the United States hopes to establish.

The Navy Department announced today that it received a telegram last night from Caperton saying that Sunday passed quietly at Port au Prince. Admiral Caperton said that 736 Haitian soldiers had been landed at Port au Prince from the Haitian gunboat Nord Alexis. These soldiers, the Admiral said, had been sent to their homes, each with ten gourds. A gourd is about forty cents in American currency.

In one telegram received today Admiral Caperton said that business conditions throughout the island were improving owing to renewed confidence on the part of the native officials as to the intentions of the United States toward the country.

Admiral Caperton also reported the postponement of the Presidential election because the time was deemed inopportune for political excitement. The election was to be held yesterday.

CAPE HAITIEN, Aug. 9.—General Cacos, one of the leaders of the recent revolutionary movement, has refused to the demand of the American Consul that he disarm his men, in spite of the request to the same end forwarded to Cacos by telegraph from Dr. Bobo, the leader of the revolution.

Cacos and his men are outside Cape Haitien, and they are preventing the coming of supplies from the countryside to the city. Their purpose is to starve the population.

The officer in command of the American marines on shore has sent an ultimatum to all revolutionary chiefs insisting that the people of Cape Haitien be permitted to pass freely wherever they desire.

The Custom House at Cape Haitien is open, but it is under the administration of American officers.

NATIONS AGREED ON MEXICO PLAN

leave the country for reasons unknown to me and him."

Last Minister Leaving Mexico.

The Brazilian Minister is also leaving Mexico City for the United States, and there seems to be considerable doubt as to the reasons for his departure. It was said authoritatively at the State Department today that he had not been ordered away by his Government, and was in perfect accord with General Gonzales, who is in charge of Mexico City in behalf of the Carranza Government. The State Department, it was said, knew of no trouble between Senhor Cardosa and the Carranzista authorities. Senhor da Gama, the Brazilian Ambassador to the United States, was likewise uninformed. The understanding at the State Department was that Senhor Cardosa felt that his health required him to leave Mexico City. It was declared by the department that he was not coming to the United States at the request of this Government.

The departure of the Brazilian Minister from Mexico City at this critical time has caused considerable comment here, mainly in view of the fact that it leaves the United States without diplomatic representation in the Mexican capital. The archives of the American Embassy will be in charge of Mr. Proctor, who was private secretary to Henry Lane Wilson when the latter was the American Ambassador to Mexico. Mr. Proctor, however, is not in the United States Diplomatic Service, and has no diplomatic status. The departure of the Brazilian and the Guatemalan Ministers leaves Mexico City without a foreign diplomatic representative of Ministerial rank, according to the understanding here.

The Navy Department, at the request of the State Department, has cabled instructions to Commander McNamee of the cruiser Sacramento, the senior American naval officer at Vera Cruz, to place a war vessel at the disposal of the Brazilian Minister and make a special effort to extend every courtesy and to enable him to have a pleasant and agreeable voyage from Vera Cruz to New Orleans. The gunboats Machias and Wheeling are at Vera Cruz, and it is supposed that Commander McNamee will assign one of these to the Brazilian Minister.

Reports that Carranza had dismissed the Brazilian Minister were not borne out by information obtainable here, but the understanding prevails among Carranza representatives in Washington that General Carranza and Señor Cardoso were on very bad terms.

Sure People Want Peace.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The confidence expressed by officials generally here that the conferees representing the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Guatemala, and Uruguay will be able to shape a course likely to bring peace and restore constitutional government in Mexico, is due to the fact that all are agreed that most of the people of the revolution-torn republic are thoroughly sick of war, and with encouragement from friendly powers will promptly join in a movement to clean house. A large section of the country and a vast majority of the people have not been involved in the fighting which followed the overthrow of Huerta. Moreover, it has been reported to President Wilson and Secretary Lansing that only the fear of reprisals by the military chieftains has kept the people in subjection while the country has been impoverished by the battles of relatively small forces of armed men.

Reaching their conclusion on these reports, the Pan-American conferees are understood to have determined to present the situation to all of the various elements of Mexico, addressing directly not only Generals Carranza, Villa, and Zapata, but the Governors of States, all military leaders with any considerable followings, and other influential men, urging them to come tgether for a conference at which a substantial Provisional Government might be framed.

There has been talk of joint armed intervention by the powers represented in the conference to quiet any leader who insists upon remaining in the field with military forces. Some of the conferees, however, are said to believe that the moral support of the powers behind such elements as join in the conference for a new Provisional Government, together with a strict embargo against the shipment of war munitions to any one in Mexico except the Government so formed, would quickly accomplish the desired result.

GEN. SCOTT MEETS VILLA.

Conferences Begin Today—Talks with Mining Men.

EL PASO, Texas, Aug. 9.—Major Gen. Scott, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, bearing a special commission from the State Department to General Villa, arrived here today.

He conferred with a committee of mining men at the home of J. F. Williams, whose guest he is to be while here, and made a brief visit to General Francisco Villa at Jarez. He was accompanied by his aid, Lieut. Col. Michie and George C. Carothers, special agent of the State Department.

After his return from Juarez, Lieut. Col. Michie explained that the visit to Villa was merely an exchange of greetings and was no part of the official conferences which will begin tomorrow.

General Scott on his arrival was met by Colonel Bundy, acting Brigade Commander, Mr. Carothers, Felix Summerfeldt, New York representative of the Villa Government, and a committee of officers sent by General Villa. He declined to discuss his mission.

The conference at the Williams home lasted about two hours. In addition to a committee of mining men, Zach Cobb, Collector of the Port, and representatives of merchants whose property is under seizure at Chihuahua attended the conference.

At the close of the conference General Scott took an automobile across the international bridge to Juarez. On the Mexican side a line of cavalry was drawn up as his escort. Back of the line General Villa and his aids were waiting in an automobile.

After an exchange of greetings General Villa escorted General Scott to the Villa quarters, where General Scott spent about twenty minutes.

CARRANZA MEN UNYIELDING.

Manifesto to American People to State Their Case.

The following unofficial telegram has been received by F. S. Elias, Consul General of the Constitutionalist Government in New York, from Vera Cruz:

"Constitutionalist leaders here express only one opinion regarding conferences held at Washington for the purpose of regulating Mexican internal affairs. They say they have all along placed implicit faith in President Wilson's public, unequivocal, and solemn statement that Mexico had the inherent right to settle her own troubles, and nothing could persuade him to interfere. They point out that at the time the statement was made the American people had been misled by persistent misrepresentation. When victory and peace are in sight, they are puzzled to understand the complete revolution evidenced by the present action. They still, however, put faith in President Wilson, and believe that when the facts are laid before the conference, as they will be, it will be conceded that whatever cause there might have been for action in the past, that cause no longer exists, since the prospect for peace was never so promising as now, coupled with the rapid occupation of the greater portion of the republic by Constitutionalists, and accompanying restoration of law and order, as has been the case in Mexico City and other large cities recently captured.

"It is understood that the First Chief is preparing a manifesto to the American people, setting forth the truth of the present situation, as well as the correspondence between the State Department and the Constitutionalist Government, in order to enable the public to understand matters for themselves."

INTEREST IN MEXICO LOAN.

McAdoo Confers with H. P. Davison —Guarantee Might Be Asked.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo appeared to be greatly surprised yesterday when he learned that his visit to New York had been linked with the matter of arranging for financing a Mexican Government. Mr. McAdoo spent the afternoon yesterday at the United States Sub-Treasury, and when seen there at 3 o'clock said that he had not discussed Mexico's finances with any one. He said that if any inquiries were being made they must have come from the State Department.

Later in the afternoon the Secretary had a conference with Henry P. Davison of J. P. Morgan & Co., which revived interest in the report that efforts were being made to form some plan for clearing up the Mexican difficulty, for the Morgan firm would in all likelihood be asked to head any syndicate formed for the purpose of financing a Mexican reorganization. Mr. Davison said after the meeting that he could not discuss the loan story, or the purpose of his conference with the Secretary.

From a banker whose firm has been active in past years in handling the finances of the National Railways of Mexico it was learned that an informal inquiry had come from Washington asking for a statement as to Mexico's credit, and her ability to get money if a loan should be attempted here. Several other bankers who were supposed to have been considered in making the inquiry, through their familiarity with Mexican financial matters, had not heard from Washington either directly or indirectly, and thought it extremely improbable that Secretary McAdoo or Secretary Lansing should be making inquiries as to Mexico's credit. The attitude of the leading banks in New York, as stated by a bank President whose institution had received no inquiry, but which would have to be considered in any group financing attempted, is this:

"It would not be possible for Mexico to get a single dollar in this country at any rate of interest, or on any kind of paper, except on one condition. That is the unconditional guarantee of any loan by the United States of America. It would be a waste of time to propose an advance to any faction, even if it should be recognized from Washington as the head of the Mexican Government. Intervention, which would make this country responsible for debts subsequently contracted, or a direct guarantee in connection with whatever understanding may be reached by the Administration with the various groups must be decided upon before loan negotiations are opened."

Secretary McAdoo said that he was chiefly interested, and had been for some time, in fostering trade with the countries of Central and South America.

INFANTRY GUARDS RANCHES.

Four Companies to Prevent Raids by Mexicans—Six Killed at Norias.

BROWNSVILLE, Texas, Aug. 9.—Four companies of United States Infantry arrived in Cameron County, Texas, today from Fort McIntosh and were immediately sent to stations at Sebastian, Raymondville, San Benito, and Harlingen.

No reports had been received late tonight of further trouble at Norias Ranch, north of Brownsville, where five Mexican bandits and one Mexican woman were killed and five Americans wounded in a battle last night. Soldiers, State and county officers, and armed citizens still are searching for the bandits.

The United States Army border patrol tonight kept in close touch with the situation. Several cavalrymen were sent to guard ranches in the disturbed district, where raids were feared by ranch owners.

LAREDO, Texas, Aug. 9.—Passengers from Monterey, Mexico, arriving here today reported continued fighting between Villa and Carranza forces in the vicinity of Saltillo. Villa troops were said to be still in possession of Saltillo.

STODDARD ASSAILS OLD FRIENDS HERE

Veteran Lecturer, Now Living in Germany, Denounces American Attitude to Allies

IN VIGOROUS OPEN LETTER

Speaks of Britain as Our "Master" and Calls Us "Cowards" and Objects of "Unmitigated Scorn."

"An open letter by John L. Stoddard, the veteran American lecturer," writing from Germany to his old friends in America, whom he assails with great severity for not being pro-German, has been received in New York. The letter, which is republished from The Continental Times of June 7 (a pro-German publication of Europe) is composed of the common arguments of the German point of view, but these are presented with all of Mr. Stoddard's characteristic vigor.

After stating that in this war Germany is fighting against a ruthless conspiracy of nations, Mr. Stoddard brings the progress of the eastern campaign up to the expulsion of the Russians from Eastern Galicia, and then continues in part:

"Why do we hear from you no word of joy, or message of congratulation? Does not your British master let you know the news? I fear, however, that, having cast in your lot with the Allies, you must regret that the appalling Slavic inroad has been checked, and would have actually rejoiced had it succeeded!

"In the trenches of Flanders stand today—unless American bombs or bullets have killed them—many young men whom we admire and love. They include musicians, artists, scientists, students, and professors. Opposed to them, at a distance of a few meters, are Senegal negroes, Indians, Turcos, and Algerians—fighting for civilization, of course—against whom the refined and rarely gifted youths must frequently contend in hand-to-hand bayonet fights! If these young Germans are spitted and stabbed to death by those savages, some of whom are apparently first cousins to gorillas, you must logically rejoice.

"Would that you understood the German spirit! These men, inspired by their love of country, need no cheap appeals such as are placarded on English walls and tramcars, imploring citizens to enlist in Kitchener's army. Besides the soldiers liable to service, millions of young Germans have volunteered to drive the advancing foes from their loved Fatherland.

"And England! We are simply dumfounded at your attitude toward that arch-hypocrite among the nations, whose monster empire is based on ruthless conquest, and whose record in opium-cursed China, in starving India, in the concentration camps of the Boer republics, in ruined Ireland, and even in America, is an everlasting disgrace. You know that she is trying to starve our two beleaguered empires and to deprive our millions of noncombatants of the necessities of life. Yet you wonder that we retaliate and warn all merchant ships, under penalty of destruction, not to bring munitions to her!

"You know that England rides roughshod over the rights of neutral nations, that she even dares to hold up and to confiscate United States mail, and, if she likes, suppresses cablegrams from America to neutral lands like Switzerland! Moreover, the English censor regulates your news!

"What cowards you are to submit to this! Do not say that we, who are temporarily residing here and have not hurried home through fear, are 'un-American.' We are infinitely more American than those of you who have not still enough of the old spirit of your fathers to resent such action from that unchanged tyrant of the seas, whom they twice fought victoriously. You have, and you deserve to have, the contempt of the world. Think of it—through fear of England the Boston Post Office has refused to forward to me, even at the sender's risk, a little package of tea, although whole shiploads of guns and ammunition are meanwhile on their way to France and England!

"More than 86 per cent. of the wounds and deaths now caused in the ranks of German, Austrian and Hungarian troops are the result of bombs and bullets sent from the United States! You know in your hearts that this makes your assertions of neutrality a mockery, and exposes the President and the nation to unmitigated scorn. The United States by its continual enormous shipments of arms, horses and ammunition to the Allies has made itself one of the principal participants in this hideous war, and only for the advantage of one side. You are in fact the silent partners of the Cossacks and the Fiji Islanders. The wrecked excuse that 'business is business' is a pitiful confession of the lowest of ideals. But even on that level America, as a whole, is losing millions steadily, that only a few may become rich.

"To you will fall the baneful influence of England's policy in the Far East, and you will live to see the arrogant, though decadent, Britons put into the place he would long since have been compelled to occupy, but for the mass of gold which he had ravished from a subject world."

SERBIANS VERY GRATEFUL.

Editorial in a Bitolj Paper Thanks America for Its Aid.

An editorial article, which appeared in the Daily Journal, printed at Bitolj (Monastir) on July 6, reads as follows:

"Among the many benefits which the present war has brought to Serbia, one of the chief is the sympathy and friendship of the cultured nations, great and small. This sympathy and this friendship, together with the very manifest friendship of the glorious French nation and the traditional protection and support of great and powerful Russia, form the surest guarantees of the future of that Greater Serbia whose furmation is only a question of time.

"Never before has Serbia experienced such great manifestations of sympathy among the allied powers as today, such praise of the unexampled bravery of her armies, the wise policy of her politicians, and the justice of her administration. The numerous offers of moral and material support tendered to Serbia from the beginning of the war to the present time by both her allies and the ever-ready neutral powers are the best evidence of this.

"Among the neutral nations, which during the later part of last year, beginning immediately after the defeat of the Austrian Army, hastened at once to the aid of our heroes and refugees, among the first was—we acknowledge this with especial satisfaction—the great and renowned American nation.

"It is known to every one how many and how great have been the services rendered by the first American mission to our wounded, and how Americans served us with financial aid as well as with sanitary materials and field supplies even up to the present time.

"As we write this there are found in Serbia several American units which are working as earnestly and conscientiously for the improvement of health conditions as though for their own native land.

"One of these units came to Bitolj some six weeks ago under the leadership of Dr. Caldwell. The remaining members of the unit are Dr. Schmidt, Colonel Gayle, and the engineer Hazelhurst. Immediately upon the arrival of which unit they opened a dispensary where the poor of the city are examined and treated free of cost, which is an inestimable boon to the people of Bitolj.

"At the same time the capable and energetic Dr. Caldwell has undertaken the cleaning of the city, so that for the first time Bitolj is without typhus and malaria. The devotion and energy which Dr. Caldwell and his colleagues have brought to bear upon this work is marvelous, and we deem it a duty and a privilege to make public acknowledgment of these facts and to express to Dr. Caldwell and his colleagues our gratitude for their conscientious and beneficial work and at the same time beg that these our feelings may be communicated to their noble countrymen."

WIN FIGHT TO SAVE STATE FOREST LAND

Constitutional Convention Advances Article Prohibiting the Destruction of Timber.

LUMBER INTERESTS LOSE

Louis Marshall Assails "Scientific Forestry"—Revocable Permits to be Issued to Adirondack Squatters.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 9.—After a heated debate which occupied all of the morning and afternoon sessions of the Constitutional Convention, the lumber interests, which had planned to cut out of the proposed new article on Conservation the protection for the State's forest lands embodied therein were routed. The convention, sitting as a committee of the whole, then advanced the article to the order of third reading.

The amendments which, it was charged, would have menaced the Adirondacks forest preserve, were offered by Edward M. Angell, a Republican from Warren County. They were seconded by Ferris J. Meigs of Franklin County. Louis Marshall, who led the opposition, charged that they represented the lumber interests.

Mr. Marshall's speech created a sensation. Up to the time he took the floor the advocates of the amendments had been conducting a strong and apparently winning battle, despite the attacks of a number of delegates, among them James S. Whipple, former Forest, Fish, and Game Commissioner.

The conservation article finally was advanced with every vital feature provided for by the Committee on Conservation left unchanged. Aside from the amendments proposed by Messrs. Angell and Meigs in the interest of "scientific forestry," the chief fight occurred over the proposal to permit the continued occupation under revocable licenses and in return for fair compensation of State lands by squatters who live the year round in the forests. Many of them have occupied the sites of their present homes for so long as sixty years. There are just 220 such forest plots, none of which exceeds ten acres. The provision only affects squatters who were in possession prior to the time when the State obtained a clear title to the lands they live on. The proposal was adopted as part of the conservation article.

An amendment offered by ex-Senator George A. Blauvelt, which would give the State the right to build a highway from Saranac Lake, in Franklin County, to Long Lake, in Hamilton County, and then to Old Forge, in Herkimer County, by way of Blue Mountain Lake and Raquette Lake, also was adopted. This would provide a road thirty miles in length from the lowlands through the most picturesque part of the forest preserve to the very heart of the Adirondacks.

The amendments offered by Mr. Angell affected Section 2 of the article. In its original form and the form in which it was advanced this section provides that the present forest preserve shall remain wild forest lands forever, but that the Conservation Department is empowered to construct fire trails and to remove dead trees and dead timber for purposes of reforestation, but the dead timber must not be sold. This latter provision, of course, was inserted to discourage commercial lumbering.

Mr. Angell wanted the section amended to read as follows:

"The lands of the State, now owned or hereafter acquired, constituting the forest preserve as now fixed by law, shall be forever kept as wild forest lands. They shall not be leased, sold, or exchanged, or be taken by any corporation, public or private, nor shall the timber thereon be sold, removed, or destroyed. But the Conservation Department shall provide for the survey and classification of all the lands in the forest preserve into the following areas:

First—The lands upon the mountain tops, and the lands in and contiguous to the lakes and major streams, and such other lands as for any reason the department shall determine should be so classified.

Second—All the other lands of the State within the forest preserve.

The classification shall be made after such public advertisement and hearing as the department may prescribe, and it may, after like notice and hearing, transfer lands from the second into the first area. The department may provide for the sale and removal of timber, or any part thereof, that is mature or detrimental to forest growth upon the land, or any part thereof, in the second area, under such conditions as it shall prescribe in accordance with the principles of scientific forestry, but such lands shall remain as forest lands and the forest cover thereon shall be maintained and perpetuated.

The department may authorize, in its discretion, the use of lands belonging to the State in the forest preserve for highway purposes.

The department may lease camp sites of limited area for limited periods, on restricted portions of the second area of the forest preserve, upon conditions to be determined by it.

The department may sell lands outside the limits of the Adirondack and Catskill Parks as now established by law, except lands contiguous thereto, and the islands in and lands adjacent to Lake George. The proceeds of such sales shall be kept in a separate fund to be used only for the purchase of lands within the limits of said Adirondacks and Catskill Parks.

Marshall Assails the Plan.

"I don't want to be personal," said Louis Marshall, "in debating the Angell amendments, "but it is important that we should observe who the men are who ask for a change of the entire policy of the State toward its forest lands. Mr. Angell is the counsel of one of the biggest syndicates owning lumber lands. Mr. Meigs, who seconded the motion of Mr. Angell, is President of the Santa Clara Lumber Company.

"These gentlemen have spoken about preservation and about cutting mature timber, and yet we find in the records of a recent action against the Santa Clara Lumber Company in which Mr. Angell was counsel for the defendant, and the defendant, not only the Santa Clara Lumber Company, but Messrs. Finch and Ostrander, well known in our lumber interests, were instrumental in making an arrangement which was set aside by the Court of Appeals, between the State and these defendants, and these defendants reserved unto themselves the right at any time within eight years from Oct. 1, 1904, to cut and remove from all the land involved, the available timber down to eight inches in diameter on the stump at the time of cutting.

"Conservation, preservation, scientific forestry is what they say when they talk. Yet their contract called for the cutting of soft wood timber eight inches in diameter."

Referring to the case of the people against the Brooklyn Cooperage Company, Mr. Marshall said that "scientific forestry" had been invoked to enable that company to cut down flat from one end to the other 13,000 acres of forest land.

"Perhaps that was in order that the scientific foresters might start a new forest which might mature in a hundred years from the time that that contract was entered into," Mr. Marshall asserted. "That is scientific forestry.

"Should we let the Conservation Department go into the business of forestry? Will the State of New York encourage lumbering operations? I trust not. We have not yet come to the point where the State is to engage in that business. If the State is not to do it, who will do it? Who is to remove this timber? Will it not mean that the department would have to enter into contracts with private companies who are equipped to do such things? And who could do it better than the gentlemen represented by Mr. Angell and Mr. Meigs and the others who are engaged in lumbering in the State?

"I ask is the State of New York so poor that it has to take any chances with respect to practical forestry in its forest preserve? Here in New York State one who has intelligently observed the operations in the Adirondack forests is grieved to see how mountain top after mountain top is being denuded, how the bare rock begins to glisten through the forest cover."

Defends Lumber Companies.

Delegates from the forest preserve counties fought bitterly for the amendments. After Messrs. Angell and Meigs had spoken, Patrick J. Tierney of Clinton, who has been associated with lumber companies, asserted hotly that the private lumber companies took better care of the forests than the State. He accused the advocates of protection for the forests of being actuated by prejudice and ignorance. This brought ex-Commissioner Whipple to his feet.

"Let me tell the gentleman that my opposition is not due to either ignorance or prejudice," he shouted. "I know of what I am talking, and I am not interested in any way except as the State is interested. The term 'scientific forestry' is a misnomer. It should be 'practical forestry.' Let a lumber man take an axe into the forests and there is no holding him."

Again Mr. Tierney asserted that the executive policy advocated by the conservation committee with no camp sites and no roads through the forest lands, would make these the recreation ground of the rich to the exclusion of the poor.

"The leasing of camp sites would mean graft beyond anything that we have yet heard of in this State," said H. Le Roy Austin, who was the Forest, Fish and Game Commissioner during the latter part of the second Hughes administration. "The removal of timber, other than dead timber, would be wasteful. If we cut every stick of timber in the Adirondacks it would not be enough to supply the country for two months, and it would not be enough to meet the needs in this State for thirteen months. It would be fatal to our water supply. In the last sixty years of timber cutting in the Adirondacks, the mean flow of the Hudson has decreased four feet."

The new section drafted to meet the squatter situation aroused much opposition. Ex-Commissioner Austin said that if the policy advocated by Commissioner Whipple was enforced it would mean that aged men and women would be dispossessed from their homes of a lifetime, and schools and churches would be wiped out.

"I assure you if the ouster policy was carried out," he said, "there would be the greatest danger of violent outbreaks resulting in devastating forest fires."

After the section had been amended so as to narrow its application to actual residents of the Adirondacks, to the exclusion of mere Summer visitors, it was accepted by the convention, and the servation article advanced.

URGES LIVING WAGE TO BE FIXED BY LAW

Committee Favors Constitutional Amendment Even if Inefficients Are Driven Out.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 9.—The Constitutional Convention Committee on Industrial Relations, of which Herbert Parsons is Chairman, in a report today recommended an amendment to the constitution which would permit the Legislature to enact a "Living Wage Act" for women and minors. The recommendation was an outcome of the proposal introduced by Alfred E. Smith which would authorize a law to establish a minimum wage for women and children.

In advocating the amendment the committee got facts from the report of the Factory Investigating Commission, which asserted that a living wage for a woman living independently in New York City should be $9 a week. In its report the committee says:

"Out of the 45,000 department store employes receiving $50 a week or less, there were 15,000 women 18 years of age or over who earned less than $5 a week. Fifty-three per cent. of all female employes of 18 years of age or over in stock and sales received less than $9. Four thousand women of 18 years and over employed in industrial lines were getting less than $8 a week, and averaged $5.79 a week. In half of the wage-earners families that were investigated there was no male wage earner. One-half of the people discovered in the investigation received less than enough to live properly and independently.

"The following is a budget of the average expenditures for a girl who received $8 a week:

Average for clothes	$1.50
Room rent	2.00
Seven breakfasts and seven dinners	2.00
Six lunches	.90
Car fares for six days	.60
Allowance for insurance and medical care	.25
Dues, reading and amusement	.50
Savings	.25
Total	$8.00

"Department store women are required to be neat in their appearance, so that the item of clothes is an important one. It will be noticed that the lunches average 15 cents, and that if each breakfast averages 10 cents there is no quite 20 cents for dinner.

"Insufficient food means a weakened body, a less efficient worker, and a greater predisposition to illness. Workers receiving such small wages have nothing to spend by way of preventing illness, and, when it comes, nothing to spend to cure it. Less than living wages are, therefore, breeders of illness and dependency.

Wages and Morality.

"It cannot be definitely said that low wages lead to immorality. It is obvious, however, and investigation has confirmed it, that the temptations are less easily resisted when wages are insufficient.

"The Factory Investigation Commission's investigation also showed that to raise 5,000 in the large department stores who were receiving less than $9 a week to the nine-dollar standard would mean an addition of only one-third of 1 per cent. to the selling price, and that to raise the mature women in the neighborhood stores to a wage of $9 a week and girls under 18 to a wage of $6 a week would only necessitate pricing articles at a full dollar instead of 99 cents.

"Wages vary greatly. One department store paid 86 per cent. of its saleswomen $10 or more, and another paid 86 per cent. less than $10. There is a lack of standard of women's wages.

"In principle, the living wage is not new. We apply it in Government. Neither the nation, the State, nor any subdivision of the State offers employment to persons at the lowest wages they will take, at wages insufficient for healthy subsistence. On the contrary, they fix wages which they believe will be fair.

"It would seem a stupid as well as inhumane policy for the State to employ labor at less than living wages, as it would mean that the laborers were likely later to become dependent upon the State. The living wage is applied by many of our largest corporations. They do not seek to obtain labor at the lowest wages possible. They fix a not less than living wage for all employes. The more enlightened employers find that higher wages mean greater production. One effect of the policy of allowing only living wages to be paid would be to compel the employer in his competition to strive to get the more efficient help and to employ only that which is efficient.

Reason for Legislation.

"Most employers desire to pay a living wage. No living wage legislation would be necessary to bring the small employer to pay living wages to the few people whom he employes and therefore well knows. His human interest in them assures them of living wages. In large industries, however, the employer knows little about his employes. His relation is not human; it is impersonal.

"When it is brought to his attention that he is not paying a living wage, in most cases he proceeds to pay it. Many employers have welcomed the suggestions of the Factory Investigations Commission in this respect. There are, however, some employers who will pay the lowest wages they can. They must be dealt with by law, just as in connection with sanitary and accident-preventing regulations in factories they have had to be dealt with by law."

The report asserts that the "living wage" is an Anglo-Saxon development, first noted in New Zealand in 1894. In Great Britain it was enacted in 1899 and applied to certain industries. In this country "living wage" laws have been enacted in California, Colorado, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wisconsin. In all these Commonwealths with the exception of Utah, where the statute fixes the amount of wages, a commission or board establishes the minimum wage standards.

The reports assails the argument made against the minimum wage that it drives men and women out of employment. It asserts that it would not be an unmixed evil if the inefficient were driven out and that this class of workers would be cared for under a system of special licenses. The report then says:

"From the point of view of the taxpayers, it is cheaper that these few inefficients be driven out of employment, if the many other, who because of inefficient wages would be in danger of becoming dependents, are, through the payment to them of living wages, prevented from becoming dependents."

The committee reported in favor of a plan to include occupational diseases in the constitutional provision under which the compensation law was enacted. The clause holding that the money paid by employers in compensation "shall be held to be a proper charge in the cost" of operating his business has been changed to read "shall be deemed a part of the cost" of operating his business. This may affect the policy pursued by some employers in including in their bills to customers for work done a charge for compensation.

The committe also reported in favor of taking out of Section 8, Article V, of the Constitution the clause prohibiting the creation of any office or offices for the purpose of weighing, gauging or inspecting merchandise. This was inserted by the Constitutional Convention of 1846 for the purpose of checking the growth of offices to administer a statute providing for the compulsory weighing and grading of all articles exported from this State.

Delegate John C. Leggett of Allegany tonight presented a minority report in which he declared that the adoption of the "living wage" proposal would make the Constitution of this State unique among American constitutions.

LIGHTNING BLOCKS LONG ISLAND ROAD

Bolt Hits Feed Wire, Stops All Electric Trains and Halts the Commuters Homeward Bound.

During the severe thunderstorm at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon lightning struck the main feed wire of the power station of the Long Island Railroad in Long Island City, opposite Thirty-fourth Street, Manhattan, which supplies most of the power to the lines operated by electricity. The power house was crippled for two and one-half hours, and, although large gangs of men were put at work and sub-stations set in operation, all trains on 155 miles of road were delayed from twenty-five to forty minutes.

The trouble came when there was a rush of commuters to catch their trains at the Pennsylvania Station in Manhattan and the Flatbush Terminal at Flatbush and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn. Thousands were delayed in getting to their homes. The temporary tie-up affected the lines from Manhattan and Brooklyn to Jamaica, Far Rockaway, Hempstead, Port Washington, Whitestone Landing and other points on the electric divisions. Officials of the railroad said that no one was injured.

In New Jersey the storm interrupted the telephone service in Hackensack and the Park Ridge section for some time. Lightning destroyed the barn of Dr. Oscar Nelson at Hackensack and damaged the homes of John C. Storms and Arthur Blauvelt. Dr. Nelson put his loss at $2,000.

The storm was severe in upper Manhattan and the Bronx. At 144th Street and Mott Avenue, the Bronx, lightning struck the high retaining wall of Public School 31, making a big crack from top to bottom. The school house was not damaged.

These heat prostrations were reported yesterday to the police:

REILLY, JOHN, 60 years old, 80 West Seventy-eighth Street; overcome in front of 348 Grand Street; sent home.

STEIN, ABRAHAM, 65 years old, 851 West 149th Street; overcome at Bowery and Delancey Street; sent home.

The average temperature yesterday was 74 degrees, eight degrees below the average for the corresponding date last year and one degree above the average for the last thirty-three years. The maximum temperature was 81 at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It had dropped to 75 at 11 o'clock last night. Partly cloudy weather, with moderate north winds, is promised for today.

Weather Forecaster Scarr said yesterday that the long period of rain was the result of a disturbance from the Middle West which traveled over the great lakes. He had been asked by many, he said, if he thought the use of explosives in the war zone had anything to do with weather conditions.

"I don't," he said, with a smile. "There is nothing in that theory."

It was announced yesterday that James H. Kimball, first assistant in the Richmond (Va.) Weather Bureau, had been promoted to the superintendency of the marine work in the New York bureau. Gustave S. Lindgren will leave that position to take charge of the recently established bureau at Sandy Hook.

TUMULTY RESENTS INSULT TO WILSON

Congressman Buchanan Rebuked for "Unwarrantable Inferences" as to President.

FAILED TO GET INTERVIEW

Anti-Munitions Advocate Concluded Mr. Wilson Preferred Big Business to Labor Advice.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Correspondence made public at the White House today shows that Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the President, resented a statement made by Congressman Frank Buchanan, of Chicago, as President of "Labor's National Peace Council," that the failure of President Wilson to make an engagement to receive a committee of that organization "was tantamount to a declaration that the President is more concerned about the desires of Big Business than he is to discover the heartfelt sentiment of the common people."

"Labor's National Peace Council" is the mysterious organization formed in Washington in June, immediately following the so-called peace meeting at Carnegie Hall, in New York, which was held under the auspices of the labor organizations but in which pro-German sentiment predominated. William J. Bryan, who had just resigned as Secretary of State, spoke at this meeting.

Recently, a meeting was held in Washington by members of Labor's National Peace Council, German societies and organizations of farmers at which an effort was made to adopt resolutions calling on the Government to stop the shipment of munitions of war to Europe and criticizing President Wilson. Representatives of the farmers' organizations present said that they did not understand that the object of the meeting was to pass on resolutions of that character and as a result of their protests the resolutions were modified.

The charge was made at the time of the meeting that "Labor's National Peace Council" was financed from German sources in this country. This allegation was denied by ex-Congressman H. Robert Fowler of Illinois, who is general counsel of the organization and who recently wrote a letter to the Federal Reserve Board contending that the United States was guilty of unneutral conduct in permitting Federal Reserve notes to be issued on the basis of securities furnished by American munition manufacturers.

The correspondence given out at the White House today shows that Congressman Buchanan had requested a meeting with President Wilson and that Secretary Tumulty had replied that during his recent visit to Washington from Cornish the President was so rushed with work that no opportunity had been afforded for Mr. Tumulty to take up with him Mr. Buchanan's request. Mr. Tumulty said that Mr. Buchanan doubtless would realize that the President had been so completely absorbed in the consideration of matters of pressing importance that he literally had no time for anything else.

Anti-Munitions Propaganda.

The purpose of Congressman Buchanan in seeking the appointment was to furnish advice against permitting munitions of war to be shipped to Europe and "to demonstrate that the subsidized press, representing organized dollars in America, was misrepresenting labor's attitude in the present crisis." The quotation is from Mr. Buchanan's subsequent letter to Mr. Tumulty.

The correspondence between Mr. Tumulty and Mr. Buchanan follows. Here is the first letter:

The White House,
Washington, July 24, 1915.

Mr. Dear Mr. Buchanan: I am genuinely sorry to say that the President was so rushed during his brief stay in Washington that there was no opportunity to take up with him your request for an appointment for a committee from your organization. As you doubtless will realize, the President has been so completely absorbed during the past few weeks in the consideration of matters of pressing importance that he literally has had no time for anything else. I know you will understand and will bear with me. Sincerely yours,

J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

Resorts to Inference.

Mr. Buchanan replied to this letter four days later, as follows:

Labor's National Peace Council,
Chicago, Ill., July 28, 1915.

Hon. J. P. Tumulty, the White House, Washington, D. C.:

My Dear Mr. Tumulty—Your favor of the 24th inst. duly received, and, to put the situation mildly, was decidedly disappointing in character. The information it contained, though courteously phrased, could not, and did not, alter the inference forced by the statement made.

Your intimation that the President's time was so fully taken up with matters of pressing importance that he could not grant an audience to representatives of labor, that has made the United States of America the proud nation that it is, in order to permit them in person to demonstrate that the subsidized press, representing organized dollars in America, which is seeking to serve as the volunteer adviser of the President was misrepresenting labor's attitude in the present crisis, is tantamount to a declaration that the President is more concerned about the desires of big business than he is to discover the heartfelt sentiment of the common people.

As is well known, I, by the vote of the people, was taken from the ranks of America's toilers to serve them in the Hall of Congress, and as their representative to voice their opinion on national questions. As a trade unionist I found that the first lesson taught by organized labor was to implant in the hearts and minds of its members the ethics of humanity and the sacredness of human life.

War is generally regarded by the common people, who are its only victims, as legalized murder on a wholesale plane, which all the sophistry of questionable patriots and demagogues can never invest, and yet, the President cannot find time to listen to the people who desire peace, because his time is completely occupied by those who apparently desire war.

I thank you, Mr. Tumulty, for your candor. My duty to those I serve leaves me no alternative but to say that so long as they, the people whom I serve, continue to be united in their belief that progress and prosperity is dependent upon religious observance of the scriptural admonition, "And they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more," just so long shall I continue to rap at the door of the President's private chambers to secure admittance for a delegation of workers, who not only decide peace at home but peace abroad as well.

I again urge upon you to kindly present to the President my desire for a conference and inform him that, if I am to be denied the courtesy so liberally extended to Congressmen speaking for Big Business, I shall be reluctantly forced to advise the public of my position in the premises through the medium of an open letter.

Awaiting your reply, I have the honor to be, very truly yours,

FRANK BUCHANAN.

Resented by Tumulty.

It was more than a week later when Mr. Tumulty replied to this letter, as follows:

The White House, Washington,
Avon, N. J., Aug. 6, 1915.

My Dear Mr. Buchanan: I received your letter of the 28th of July, and beg to say that I resent the tone of it and the unwarrantable inferences you have drawn by reason of the President's inability to confer with you at the time you requested.

As far as I am concerned, there is no objection to any statement you may desire to make to the public in this matter.

Very truly yours,
J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

To the Hon. Frank Buchanan, Labor's National Peace Council, 2,502 North Central Park Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

There for the present the matter rests.

FINDS CADY GUILTY.

Coroner's Jury Holds Inspector Killed Boy in Bayonne Strike.

A jury before Coroner John V. Burke in Jersey City, at the inquest on the death of John Stovanchik, who was killed during the fight between the strikers and police at the Standard Oil Company's plant at Bayonne on July 21, found last night that he had been killed by shots fired by Police Inspector Daniel Cady of the Bayonne Police Department.

Several of the witnesses, including one of the striking strikers, testified they had seen Inspector Cady fire several shots from behind Engine House 4, in East Twenty-second Street, Bayonne. A boy, Stephen Summack, of 211 East Twenty-second Street, testified that immediately after he had seen the policeman fire a revolver Stovanchik dropped.

Cady denied that he had fired at any of the rioting strikers, but had fired in the air. Firemen and policemen corroborated him. It is not expected that the police official will be prosecuted, as he was engaged at the time in directing the police to end the rioting.

AMERICA GETTING THE TRADE

Gains What Germany, Austria, France, and Belgium Lose.

LONDON, Tuesday, Aug. 10.—The Morning Post calls attention to the fact that the report of the Board of Trade for the half year ended July 30 shows that the decrease in the value of imports to Great Britain from Germany, Austria, France, and Belgium is almost exactly counterbalanced by the increase in imports from the United States.

"It would appear, therefore, in spite of everything that has happened," says The Post, "that the United States is doing remarkably well as a result of this war."

The Post points out also that an improvement in ocean trade began in February, the month the German submarine blockade was initiated, and has recovered steadily ever since.

AMERICANS MUST REGISTER.

Great Britain Tightens Regulation Governing Aliens.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—The British Foreign Office today notified the American Embassy here that Americans resident in the United Kingdom as well as all aliens would be subject to registration under the British National Registration act. New arrivals henceforth will have twenty-eight days in which to report themselves.

This does not mean that Americans can be pressed into the national service in any capacity, but bespeaks a Government desire to check all persons in the United Kingdom. Forms are being distributed this week, and they are to be returned Sunday.

SOAP FAMINE IN BUDAPEST.

Public Now Eats Fats That Formerly Were Used to Make It.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—There is a dearth of soap in Budapest. The fact is undeniable, and the explanation curious.

The price of soap has risen 130 per cent. Soap manufacturers lay the blame on the public. "The public eat soap," they say. The explanation is that the public now consumes the raw materials of soap.

There was a time when no one thought of eating suet in the Hungarian capital. Now it is in such demand that the price has quintupled. There is sharp competition for all the odds and ends that usually go to make up sausage and for the brown grease which is skimmed off the water in which ham has been boiled. This fat, despised of the public before the war, was sold to soap manufacturers at 3 cents per pound. The price at present is 25 cents per pound.

Vegetable fats are out of the question as a substitute. Cocoanut oil, for instance, has quadrupled in price and is scarcely to be had at that. Budapest soap manufacturers have now turned to the oil of Scandinavian fish, which can be transformed into white and solid fat, but it is feared the public will now discover this also.

NEW CABINET IN TODAY.

Japanese Emperor Authorizes Okuma to Withdraw His Resignation.

TOKIO, Aug. 9.—Emperor Yoshihito today authorized Premier Okuma to withdraw his resignation, and the reconstructed Japanese Cabinet will be installed tomorrow. The newspapers report that Count Okuma is having difficulty in finding a Foreign Minister to take the place of Takaaki Kato, Baron Motono, the Ambassador at Petrograd; Viscount Chinda, at Washington, and Count Inouye, at London, have declined the portfolio.

It is officially announced that the Cabinet formed Sunday, with Count Okuma as Premier, will remain unchanged, except that Katsundo Minoura has been definitely decided upon as the Minister of Communications.

George E. Downey Appointed Judge.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—George E. Downey of Indiana, Controller of the Treasury, was appointed by President Wilson today to be an Associate Judge of the Court of Claims, and James W. McCarter of Bowdle, S. D., was appointed Assistant Register of the Treasury.

PROVES BELGIAN GOODS.

Washington Forwards Papers to Free Detained Shipments.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Documents to be used in seeking the release of Belgian goods held up at Rotterdam because of the British Orders in Council, were forwarded to Ambassador Page in London today for presentation to the British Government. The papers included invoices, bills of sale, and proof that the shipments were of bona fide Belgian production, and that their exportation would in no way benefit German interests.

Under the latest British regulations, Belgian exports via Rotterdam will be released only upon such proof and financial settlement through London. The Belgian Minister here has agreed to cooperate in releasing goods under this plan, and many applications for shipments already have been forwarded by American merchants. Much of the material involved is nursery stock and florists' supplies of Belgian growth, greatly needed by dealers in this country.

Miss Laura Lee Rogers of 145 West Sixth Street, this city, a friend of Lady Hadfield, has sent out a request for contributions of magazines and newspaper supplements for the patients of Lady Hadfield's hospital! Miss Rogers will make shipments to France once a week.

A Raid; 33 Arrests; No Evidence.

After complaints made by shopkeepers and property owners in East Eighteenth Street, between Third Avenue and Irving Place, Detectives Butler and O'Connor of Inspector Morris's staff, raided an alleged "floating" poolroom last night on the fourth floor of a building in the block, where they found thirty-three men. Butler and O'Connor were unable to find any evidence of wagers being made on the races, and they arraigned the prisoners before Magistrate Appleton on technical charges of disorderly conduct. All were discharged for lack of evidence.

BUSINESS MEN OFF TO TRY ARMY LIFE

More Than 700, Many in Khaki, Take Special Train for Plattsburg Camp.

ALL WALKS REPRESENTED

Financiers, Athletes, Politicians, and Policemen Included—Mayor Mitchel in Tent.

Men in the olive drab khaki of the army thronged the Grand Central Terminal last evening. The corridors, the waiting rooms, the big concourse, were filled with soldierly figures, around which were groups of admiring women relatives. At 9:30 o'clock the "Business Men's Camp Special" pulled out for Plattsburg, with a second section following a few moments later. On the special went between 700 and 800 business men for training in army life and work by regular army officers and men.

The camp is to last a month, though not all of the recruits can spare so much time from business. All were eager last night to stay as long as possible. An army officer or two, waiting to travel to the camp by a later and regular train, smiled at the eagerness. They knew just what sort of routine regular army life was, and some of the recruits had reached the station in motor cars!

Not all the throng were in uniform, but probably half of them wore khaki. Some wore their knapsacks strapped over their shoulders and but for the two facts that they carried no weapons—these will be supplied at the camp—and that every one was joking and laughing, the crowd might have been a detachment of volunteers hurrying to a real battle front.

Of course every man was a private. A few will be promoted to warrant and commissioned officers after the regular army men have looked them over and picked out the most likely appearing, and a few probably will be homeward bound presently in citizen's mufti, for where the nominal payments were made, the army men promised that the camp would furnish the very hardest kind of work, and what started like an excursion last night may prove no play for some.

Men in all lines of work and from all stations were represented in the throng, and there were athletes, former college stars, polo players, and men whose names have always been connected with outdoor life and adventure. There were several policemen, too. Nearly 100 men came from Philadelphia in time to catch the special.

Among the citizen soldiers were "Jimmy" Park, the steeplechase rider; W. D. Straight of J. P. Morgan & Co., Collector of the Port Malone, Martin J. Keogh, Jr., son of the Supreme Court Justice; Hamilton Fish, Jr., Crawford Blagden, the ex-football star; Richard Derby, Colonel Roosevelt's son-in-law, and Theodore, Jr., the Colonel's oldest son. Oliver Iselin, O'Donnell Iselin, and Adrian Iselin, Jr., were among the number, and there were also Elihu Root, Jr., ex-Lieut. Gov. Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, Bradley Martin, Alexander Stewart, John D. Crimmins, Jr., Clarance Crimmins, Charles C. Rumsey, Alexander Smith Cochrane, F. M. Carnegie, William Van Rensselaer, Nelson O'Shaughnessey, G. B. Kip, Edwin De T. Bechtel, R. S. Pierrepont, ex-Police Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo, Frank Butterworth, the former Yale athlete, and from Philadelphia George Wharton Pepper of the National Security League, W. J. Clothier, the tennis player; Victor C. Mather, and P. N. LeRoy.

Among the policemen to go, who will sacrifice part of their vacations for military training, were Inspector E. P. Hughes, Captain John J. Falconer, Lieutenant Joseph A. Howard, and Sergeants James A. McNally, John W. McCoy, Charles Henley, and Charles Stilson.

MAYOR MITCHEL IN TENT.

Reaches Plattsburg Camp, Which Is Drenched with Rain.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Mayor Mitchel of New York led the advance guard of business and professional men who, beginning tomorrow, will take a four-week course in military preparedness at the camp of instruction in this city. The Mayor arrived here on a sleeper this morning, accompanied by W. B. Meloney and Alderman H. H. Curran. Among the fifty other recruits who drifted into the camp today was Theodore Roosevelt, Jr.

After a visit to the Treasurer's tent, where the nominal payments were made, the Mitchel party was assigned to A Company, the living tent being at the head of the company street nearest the Lake Road. Mr. Mitchel before donning his army uniform took a plunge in Lake Champlain. After familiarizing themselves with the camp, he and his companions visited the Catholic Summer School at Cliff Haven and the Hotel Champlain at Bluff Point.

Rain put a damper on the first day in camp. The sun, which shone in the morning, disappeared about noon, and a heavy downpour lasted all afternoon. The men who were on the ground did not seem to mind the rain, and instead of staying shut up in their tents they gave the army uniforms a thorough test of waterproof qualities.

About noon Captain Halstead Dory, camp commander, met the army officers assigned to camp duty and gave them instructions concerning the plan and conduct of the camp. The officers who will act as assistants to Captain Dory number thirty, including Captains and First and Second Lieutenants from every branch of the service. Tomorrow morning the New York special will reach here. The Chicago contingent and the Boston candidates are expected at the same time. After these men are assigned to companies the real work will begin.

During the stay of the business men the Third Brigade will mobilize in this city. General Frank F. McCoy, brigade commander, is here to take active command of the field operations of the regulars. The Third Infantry, the Thirtieth Infantry, and the Second Cavalry make up this brigade.

Major Gen. Leonard Wood and his staff will spend the greater part of August with the business men, and Secretary of War Garrison, it is expected, will visit the camp for several days. Former Presidents Taft and Roosevelt are also expected.

250 Start from Boston.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 9.—A party of 250 young men, including many leaders in the athletic, business, and social activities of the city, left here tonight on a special train for Plattsburg, N. Y., to join the military training camp there.

GOETHALS ARRIVES; TO QUIT CANAL ZONE

Wants Active Service or Retirement After He Resigns Next November.

INQUIRES ABOUT MEXICO

General Asks If Republic Needs a Dictator—May Visit San Francisco's Fair.

Brig. Gen. George W. Goethals, who arrived here yesterday from Panama on the United Fruit steamship Pastores, accompanied by Mrs. Goethals and his son Thomas, confirmed the rumors of his early retirement from the Governorship of the Canal Zone.

"I shall send in my resignation," he said, "about Sept. 25, when I return to the Isthmus to get ready for the next session of Congress, the Panama appropriations, which I expect will be the last I shall prepare. My resignation will go into effect in November, unless the Government at Washington wishes me to remain longer.

"At present I am on leave of absence and am going to Washington to discuss the appointment of a successor to Major Park, head of the Panama Bureau at the Capitol, who wishes to be relieved."

When asked for his reason for resigning the General said that he had been in Panama seven years, which he thought was quite long enough. The canal was completed and is now in full operation, so there was no further need for his services.

"I have not resigned from the army," he continued, "and if the War Department can give me active duty I should prefer to remain, but if not I shall ask to be retired."

General Goethals seemed very much interested in the Mexican situation and the conference of the seven republics to discuss the situation.

"Do you think they need a dictator in Mexico?" he queried with a somewhat satirical smile. "I have been one for the last seven years, you know."

The General looked very alert and youthful for his age as he stepped ashore, wearing a blue serge and a Panama hat, to face the small battery of camera and moving picture men. He said he had been invited to attend the Panama Day ceremonies at the International Exposition in San Francisco, and would accept if he could be assured that there would not be too much fuss made about his visit by the officials there.

While he was talking with the reporters on the pier at Wall Street a cablegram was handed to him containing news of the last slide in the newly named Gaillard Cut. He said the slides were becoming less frequent and soon would be finally overcome.

Mrs. Goethals seemed to be very much pleased at the prospect of her husband's coming retirement from the Governorship of the Canal Zone and said she hoped that she never would have to go back there.

Another passenger on the Pastores was Rear Admiral Henry Rousseau, who has been in charge of the Canal Zone terminals at Cristobal and Balboa since 1907. He was accompanied by his wife and two children and will spend his leave of absence visiting relatives and friends.

With regard to the work at the Atlantic and Pacific entrances to the Panama Canal, the Admiral said the new drydock at Balboa would be opened in April, 1916. It will be 1,000 feet long and 110 feet beam which is large enough to take any vessel so far constructed for the naval or mercantile marine of the world. The coal sheds and piers at Cristobal would be finished next January and those at Balboa by July, 1916, he said.

OSBORNE NOTIFIES WHITMAN OF PLOT

Charges That Riley's Aids Are in a Conspiracy to Trump Up a Case Against Him.

CITES FAKE SALOON ORGY

Says He Has Telegrams from Superintendent Granting Leave of Absence to Convicts.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Warden Thomas Mott Osborne of Sing Sing has sent to Governor Whitman what virtually amounts to the charge that certain confidential employes in the office of State Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley have conspired to force him from his present position and put an end to the era of reform at Sing Sing. Mr. Osborne, it is understood, expects to present his evidence to the jury sitting in the forthcoming trial of Patrick H. McDonald, confidential agent of the prison department, for assault committed on the person of Mr. Osborne on the day of Charles Becker's execution.

Governor Whitman received the charges this morning before he left for Plattsburg, where he met Mr. Riley this afternoon. Osborne in his statement declares that Mr. McDonald tried to induce an Ossining saloon keeper to aid in staging an orgy, with women and convicts participating, in the back room of his saloon, so that photographs might be taken and presented to the Governor as proof of mismanagement at the prison of which Mr. Osborne is the Warden. An affidavit from the saloon keeper, it was said, accompanied Mr. Osborne's charges.

Mr. Osborne makes the additional charge that among the papers McDonald took from the prison were copies of telegrams from Supt. Riley authorizing "leave of absence" to convicts. Mr. Osborne declares that he recaptured these telegrams and that they are now in his possession.

The charges presented by Mr. Osborne were sent up by a special messenger in order that Governor Whitman should have them before his talk with Supt. Riley. One man close to Governor Whitman ventured the opinion that one result would be a demand by the Governor for the immediate removal of Confidential Agent McDonald.

With the charges and counter-charges and with the renewed talk of the "prison ring," it was intimated here today that while the Governor was anxious to avoid any open scandal affecting the prison department or the local conduct of the prisons, he might be compelled to order an investigation under the Sherman-Moreland act for the purpose of arriving at the truth. It is known the Governor Whitman would be glad if, as a result of such an investigation, he could get rid of both Superintendent Riley and Mr. Osborne. The latter's administration of Sing Sing, it may be stated with the utmost degree of positiveness, is not in accordance with the Governor's views of prison management.

OSBORNE UNEARTHS PLOTS.

Gets Evidence of False Case Prepared Against Him.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, Aug. 9.—Warden Thomas Mott Osborne of Sing Sing has been gathering evidence for several weeks to show that the enemies of his reform administration have gone to extremes in their effort to discredit him in the eyes of State Superintendent of Prisons John B. Riley and of Governor Whitman. This fact was brought out today as a result of what Mr. Osborne's counsel, Joseph A. Greene, termed the "premature" publication of a rumor that certain politicians had tried to have some prisoners pose in an Ossining saloon with women, so that "actual photographs" might be submitted to Mr. Riley and the Governor to show that the convicts enjoyed remarkable liberties.

"The rumor was true," Mr. Greene said today, "but its publication was premature."

He would say nothing more for publication, explaining that Mr. Osborne thought it best to keep quiet until his case against Patrick H. McDonald, Mr. Riley's confidential agent, had been settled. It was McDonald who removed prison records without Mr. Osborne's knowledge. The Warden recovered the records on the platform of the Ossining railroad station and charged McDonald with assaulting him. When his case came before a Magistrate last Friday McDonald demanded a jury trial, and it was set for next Thursday.

Warden Osborne commenced gathering evidence that underhand methods had been adopted to discredit him when the reports were first published that Superintendent Riley was anxious to oust him, and it was not until he had considerable of this evidence in hand that he made the open assertion, in a speech in New York, that efforts were on foot to work up a false case against him.

The most serious charge which was to be brought against him, the Warden learned, is one of which no inkling has been published, and if made public, it would be in the nature of a serious reflection on the Warden's personal character. The effort to convince the Governor and Mr. Riley that convicts had been permitted to go into the town of Ossining to meet immoral women, it was learned today, followed the discovery on the part of the Warden that a prisoner who escaped from Sing Sing recently, one Louis Pfeilods, had actually met a woman outside of the prison walls after he had been permitted to go out by a principal keeper, who has since been discharged by Warden Osborne. Some of the evidence in the Warden's hands is said to show that outside assistance was given this prisoner and another who escaped, as part of the plot to discredit the Osborne rule.

Some of the Warden's evidence is in the form of statements from prisoners who said they were approached by certain outsiders and urged to assist them in "showing Osborne up." Promises of special favors under a régime to follow Osborne's were made to these prisoners, it was said.

The Warden also has information to the effect that affidavits telling of his "loose management" have been obtained by outsiders from some of the prisoners. One of the officials here laughed today when questioned on this point.

"I can get you affidavits from men in there swearing to anything you want," he said. "For a couple of dollars apiece I can bring you sworn affidavits attacking anybody from the Warden's cook to President Wilson. These affidavits can't have a great deal of weight with anybody in the least familiar with prison conditions."

Warden Osborne, who is at present at his home in Auburn, N. Y., does not include Superintendent Riley himself among those who have sought to discredit him, it is said, but thinks the Superintendent has been made a catspaw.

A number of the Sing Sing guards this evening denied indignantly a published story to the effect that a guard had been severely beaten by prisoners because he was suspected of smuggling in drugs, and that the guard did not dare make a complaint to the Warden because the prisoners had found a bottle of whiskey on his person. Assistant Warden Johnson would make no comment on the report.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Governor Whitman arrived at Hotel Champlain late this afternoon. He was met at the hotel by Superintendent of Prisons Riley, who stated before the arrival of the Governor that there would be no conference on the Osborne controversy during the visit of the Governor, but that he would have a talk with Governor Whitman on Wednesday, when both will be in Albany. Riley said he had nothing to say regarding stories in today's papers, but that he would have something to say regarding prison matters soon after his return to Albany. He will accompany the Governor on his visit to Dannemora tomorrow.

OSBORNE IS MANDAMUSED.

Ordered to Reinstate Kelly, Sing Sing Printing Foreman.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Justice Morschauser has granted an alternate writ of mandmus to Dennis J. Kelly, of Yonkers, directing Thomas Mott Osborne, Warden of Sing Sing Prison, to re-instate Kelly or show cause within twenty days.

Kelly was a foreman of printing at the prison under the civil service classification. On July 28 he was dismissed on the ground of inefficiency. He maintains that the charges were untrue and trumped up and that no record was made of the real reasons for his dismissal, "as the said Osborne well knew."

Kelly also alleges that the Warden desired to appoint some person "more satisfactory to said Osborne, personally, socially or politically." He charges that "the said Osborne, as agent or Warden of Sing Sing Prison, possesses many weird, fantastical and fine spun theories relating to the Government of and discipline of penal institutions; and that in puruance of such theories, ideas and notions, he has created 'Mutual Welfare Leagues' or other quasi social organizations among the prisoners at Sing Sing Prison."

The papers recite that these organizations control many vital matters affecting the discipline of the prison, that the officers of the organizations are in many instances "desperate criminals," and that the authority of the convicts is regarded by themselves and Osborne as superior to the keepers.

The writ recites that on one occasion "Jimmie" Green, a member of the "print shop company," was elected "Sergeant at Arms" of the "Mutual Welfare League," and the next morning there was no one to run the press that Green formerly operated because "Jimmie's" new duties were held by Warden Osborne to be more important than the presswork.

Kelly says his print shop force was reduced from fifty to nineteen by reason of drafts and other causes, and that his cylinder pressman was changed three times in five months, that there was no one to run the linotype machine, and The Star of Hope, the prison paper, was often delayed by lack of "copy," because of "the disorganized condition of the prison organization." In spite of the handicaps, Kelly says he turned out more and better work than was done in the same period in the previous ten years.

RAILROAD TRAINMEN IN ASSEMBLY FIGHT

John Fitzgibbons Starts a Campaign to Keep Full Crew Law Alive.

TO LIMIT TRAINS' LENGTH

Man Who Pledged Sulzer in 1912 Tells the Brotherhood to Beat Enemies and Elect Friends.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, one of the four big labor organizations among railroad employes in this country, has begun an organized campaign in this State to defeat every candidate for the Assembly in the November election who will not pledge himself to support the union trainmen in matters of legislation affecting them. The trainmen want a law to limit the length of freight trains to one-half mile, and they want to keep the full crew law on the statute books.

The Spring bill last Winter provided that the regulation of train crews be placed in the hands of the Public Service Commission. It was a Republican bill, but the defection of nineteen Republican Assemblymen beat it.

John Fitzgibbons, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen at Albany, has sent a letter to all of the officers and members of the brotherhood in the State which calls upon them to "beat your enemies and elect your friends." It is proposed that union men be nominated and supported wherever there is a chance to elect such candidates. The letter says in part:

> Last Winter we had a hard fight to keep the Full Crew law on the statute books of this State, a fight that cost our organization considerable time, effort and money. Let each lodge of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen take a copy of my report and turn to the page which contains the list of names of the Assemblymen who voted against our Full Crew law at the last session of the legislature. If you find that the Assemblyman from your district voted against your interest last Winter, don't stop pounding him until you are successful in defeating him for re-election, no matter what his politics may be, whether Democrat or Republican.
> The best way to handle a matter of this kind is to have each lodge appoint a committee of three or five members and have them go to the leader of the party of which the anti-labor Assemblyman is a member and request that he be denied a renomination. If he is nominated, I would suggest that every effort be made to defeat him for election.
>
> Brothers, hove your committee call upon each candidate for Assembly and request that he answer the following questions, (in writing,) and send one of the answers. Will you, if elected, vote for a bill limiting the length of trains to one-half mile? Will you, if elected, vote to amend or repeal the Full Crew law?
> There is only one way, brothers, and that is to beat your enemies and elect your friends.

John Fitzgibbons is the man who said he had pledged William Sulzer to the signing of the full-crew bill when Sulzer ran for Governor. Sulzer had just signed the bill when the newspapers published a letter which had been sent by Fitzgibbons some months previous to the officers and members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. Fitzgibbons specifically stated that it was not for publication. When it was published it got Governor Sulzer into deep water, for in the latter Fitzgibbons had written:

> "Mr. Sulzer said to me: 'If I am elected I will sign the full-crew bill, and I will aid you in securing its passage.'"

Sulzer, according to the letter, also requested that Fitzgibbons notify the various lodges of his organization what his position was, adding that he could not come out into the open lest the railroads "spend a berrel of money" to defeat him. This letter added greatly to Sulzer's embarrassment. He denied that he had been pledged to sign the bill.

Fitzgibbons, with Francis Cullen, a Watertown lawyer, controls the Cullen-Fitzgibbons faction in the Democratic organizations of Oswego and Jefferson Counties. The Fitzgibbons campaign to have a full-crew law passed succeeded where similar campaigns in the administrations of Governors Hughes and Dix had failed.

SUIT OVER VAN NESS ESTATE

Lawyers Deny Alimony Claim Has Been Settled by Court.

The law firm of O'Gorman, Battle & Vandeveer yesterday denied that the temporary administrators of the estate of Cornelius H. Van Ness had been directed by the Court of Appeals to pay $28,000 alimony to the estate of Mrs. Deborah B. Van Ness, who died in January at the age of 91. Mrs. Van Ness obtained a decree of divorce in 1867 from Mr. Van Ness, with alimony at the rate of $600 a year.

On the following day, it was alleged by the administrators of Mr. Van Ness's estate, the husband and wife signed an agreement liberating Mr. Van Ness from any alimony payments by his turning over to her a large sum of money. Van Ness made no claim to alimony, the law firm points out, until she was over 90 years of age, when she maintained that she never signed any agreement.

This question was tried before Supreme Court Justice Bendict, who found in favor of Mr. Van Ness's estate, and this judgment was affirmed by the Appellate Division, the law firm asserts. Then Mrs. Van Ness died and her executors tried to prosecute an appeal from the decision of the Appellate Division.

The administrators of Mr. Van Ness's estate opposed this on the ground that since Mrs. Van Ness had died her right to the suit died too. The Court of Appeals, the law firm says, has decided against them on this point, the decision declaring that the executors of Mrs. Van Ness's estate have the right to sue.

It had been erroneously stated that the decision of the Court of Appeals made the collection of the $28,000 an immediate possibility.

MRS. MORSE STILL MISSING.

Friends Give No News of Woman Who Says She Is Bigamist.

The District Attorney's office yesterday was unable to get any information regarding Mrs. Gurney T. Morse's self-advertised matrimonial mixup. Mrs. Morse wrote letters to the newspapers Saturday saying that she had "committed bigamy" by remarrying in spite of a court order handed down when she obtained a divorce, and challenged the District Attorney to prosecute her. Then she disappeared.

Search of the records in Manhattan and Westchester County where, it was intimated, the second marriage took place, failed to reveal any trace of either a divorce or a second marriage in which she was involved. The one person among all of New York's lawyers who seemed to answer the description of the man she had married professed absolute ignorance of her actions. He is married and lives with his family.

Mrs. Nellie Bell returned to the apartment house at 547 Riverside Drive, where Mrs. Morse lived with her. She said she knew nothing of Mrs. Morse's movements. At 5:45 o'clock in the afternoon Mrs. L. H. Porter, who occupies the apartment through which Mrs. Morse escaped to the roof to avoid reporters on Saturday night, called Bell apartment and left shortly after with Mrs. Morse's suitcase, in which most of the missing woman's clothes had been packed. She hurried along Riverside Drive to 127th Street, half a block away, and thence to Broadway. Here on recognizing a reporter who had been making inquiries about Mrs. Morse, she hurried back to her apartment with the suitcase, and said she would receive no calls.

Mrs. Morse's statement that she had taken a prominent part in suffrage work was denied by the Empire State Campaign Committee, and a statement was given out which denounced the "efforts of Mrs. Morse to involve the suffragists in New York in her defense of bigamy."

MOOSE TO FUSE IN KINGS.

To Join Republicans in Fall Election, Dividing the Offices.

According to a Brooklyn report yesterday there is to be a meeting sometime this week between William Hamlin Childs, the Kings County Moose leader, and ex-Congressman William M. Calder, who guides the destinies of the Republican Party in that county, to arrange for fusion between the Progressives and the G. O. P. men this Fall. Both organizations, it was said, are to make common cause against the Democrats.

The Republicans, according to the report, want to give the Progressives as little as possible in the way of offices in return for their support, while the followers of Roosevelt will hold out for a fair division of nominations for Aldermen and Assemblymen. When Mr. Childs was asked about the proposed meeting he said:

> "I didn't know that any meeting was contemplated, but of course if Mr. Calder wishes to see me I will be glad to receive him."

MAYOR COMMENDS MISS DAVIS'S RULE

He Charges Politics Was Behind Inquiry by State Prison Commission.

JUSTICE CRITICISES HER

Court Holds Randall's Island Employe Was Dismissed Without Fair Trial.

Mayor Mitchel issued a statement yesterday, defending Commissioner of Correction Katharine B. Davis because of the attack upon her in the report of the State Prison Commission. The Mayor said:

"The State Prison Commission is disingenuous in its conclusions, as it was disingenuous in instituting its investigation. The secretly avowed and admitted purpose among the members of the commission was to oust Warden Hayes of the penitentiary. In other words, like other attacks that have been made on various departments of this Administration, this has been a political investigation with a purpose.

"Miss Davis has recognized from the first that the penitentiary is physically unfit and unsanitary. Her program, if carried out by the Board of Estimate, will wipe out that institution on Blackwell's Island and transfer the prisoners to new and sanitary quarters where the modern principles of corrective penology can be applied. Miss Davis has done the best she could with the funds allowed her under the fixed limiting physical conditions, and is pushing her program of reorganization and reconstruction as fast as the Board of Estimate is able to furnish the financial resources. In the meantime she has been bending her utmost efforts to the correction of long-standing abuses and the improvement of administrative methods.

"The penitentiary is an inheritance of earlier and less enlightened days. For its physical defects and inadequacy Miss Davis and this Administration are not responsible. Responsibility for that rests on earlier administrations of the department and on the fact that the credit resources of the city have been so heavily taxed for subways and other imperative necessities that preceding Boards of Estimate have been unable to furnish funds for new quarters and workshops for the prisoners.

"Warden Hayes, it is true, belongs to the old and more stringent school of penologists, to which Miss Davis does not belong, but she informs me that no ground for charges or action against Warden Hayes has even been brought to her knowledge. We do not remove civil service employes of long standing without substantial cause.

"Miss Davis informs me, and I am aware myself, that many of the recommendations of the commission have long since been put in process of adoption by Miss Davis—this the commission must have known when it attempted to give the impression that these are its own recommendations—while many others cannot be carried into effect without additional appropriations and additional employes.

"We are attempting to carry out prison reform in New York City just as fast and just as vigorously as the resources which the Board of Estimate provides will permit. It is a problem of finances and additional taxes rather than one of administration."

COURT CRITICISES DR. DAVIS.

Says She Did Not Give Discharged Employe Fair Trial.

Supreme Court Justice Brady of the Bronx yesterday criticised Commissioner of Correction Katharine B. Davis for the manner in which she ousted Martin J. Moore from his position as Overseer of the Hart's Island Reformatory, but the Justice at the same time refused Moore's application for a peremptory mandamus to regain his position in spite of Dr. Davis. This refusal, he explained, was based on the ground that Dr. Davis had the authority to dismiss Moore without granting him any sort of a trial.

The trial which Dr. Davis did grant Moore, however, Justice Brady characterized as a "waste of time," and a considerable expense to the city. He pointed to the fact that the two men she appointed to assist her in judging Moore were of her own selection, and said that a scrutiny of the 632 pages of stenographer's minutes showed that Moore did not have a fair trial.

When the Commissioner was asked last night to comment upon the criticism of Supreme Court Justice Brady of the Bronx, he said:

"The fact is I didn't have to give Mr. Moore a trial at all. I could have simply had him before me, questioned him, and dismissed him, and he could have had no redress at all, but because he went to the Mayor and charged that I persecuted him because of his religion and other things, I wanted to have the proceedings absolutely open.

"I suggested a hearing before three men—one to be selected by himself, one to be selected by the Service Commission, and one by me—and I told him that if two out of the three sustained him he would not be dismissed. Moore would not name a man, so I named Orlando F. Lewis, secretary of the Prison Reform Association, and Robert W. Belcher, secretary of the Civil Service Commission. Mr. Moore wanted to have counsel, but I refused it, because he had no such right under the law."

STUDIES SEAMEN'S LAW.

Safety Rules for Foreign Ships Pondered by President.

CORNISH, N. H., Aug. 9.—President Wilson disclosed today that he had been studying questions raised regarding the Seamen's law passed at the late session of Congress, but that he would reach no decision as to whether any further action was necessary until after his return to Washington. An opinion rendered by the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce that certain safety requirements under the law would not apply to foreign ships coming to American ports, has caused officials some concern. The Attorney General has been investigating the situation for several weeks.

The President was up early today and played eighteen holes of golf with Dr. Cary T. Grayson, his naval aid and physician. Afterward he returned to the "Summer White House" and began working on correspondence.

President Wilson received today a special delivery letter from Secretary McAdoo which was understood to relate to the conference between Mr. McAdoo and Secretary Lansing in New York yesterday. The President is preparing to leave Cornish for Washington this week, but the definite date of his departure had not been set.

STARVING BOY HELD AS THIEF

Accused of Grabbing Woman's Purse and Faints Through Hunger.

Miss Freda Spiro of 39 Meserole Street, Williamsburg, was walking along Rutledge Street yesterday when, she alleges, Arthur Mitson, 16 years old, who ran away from his home in Providence a few days ago, grabbed her pocketbook containing $10. The boy was chased by Miss Spiro, and a crowd joined her. When the lad was captured he was taken to the Clymer Street Police Station, where he fainted.

When revived young Mitson declared he came to this city in an effort to find employment. His family is in straitened circumstances, and he did not want to be an additional burden. He reached here by riding on freight trains.

The Lieutenant in charge of the desk promptly sent out for food, but before the doorman returned with it the boy again collapsed. An ambulance surgeon, who took him to Kings County Hospital, said he was suffering from exhaustion, exposure and starvation.

REARREST PRETTIEST ROGUE

Kitty Klein, Whose Picture Adorns Police Gallery, in Toils Again.

Kitty Klein, who is said to be the original of the prettiest picture in the Rogues' Gallery, was discharged yesterday from Hart's Island, where she had served a term of one year for petty larceny. She was rearrested the moment she set foot on the Manhattan shore by Detectives Gegan and Haskins, upon a complaint from the police of Newark, N. J., where she is under an indictment for grand larceny.

The prisoner is less than five feet in height and once took advantage of her size to escape from detectives by squeezing through a window in the women's waiting room in the elevated station at Eighth Avenue and Fifty-third Street while they stayed outside.

CHARGES TEACHERS WERE DEFRAUDED

Government Accuses H. N. Barcel of Offering to Get Them Jobs for a $2 Fee.

MONEY SENT IN LETTERS

Postal Authorities Hold Them Until Head of the Scheme Arrives from Porto Rico.

H. N. Barcel's dream of arriving here from Porto Rico late this month to find that he had between $15,000 and $20,000 waiting for him was rudely shattered when the postal authorities issued a fraud order against him, according to the story made public yesterday.

The order was issued on Aug. 6, but was kept quiet in order that the Federal authorities in Porto Rico might have a chance to act before Barcel knew that he was wanted for using the mails to defraud through his company, which he calls "The Great Agency," and which had office room until recently at 141-5 West Thirty-sixth Street.

According to the Federal authorities, Barcel planned to obtain money from the people of the United States, and while this was taking place to remain safe out of the public eye in Porto Rico. They think that Barcel is or was a teacher, and they are not sure that he is using his right name. Three months ago, through confederates in Chicago, he started sending out circulars in Spanish to a large mailing list. These letters were mailed in Chicago, and bore the letter-head of The Great Agency, with its New York address. In them, he promised the recipients, through the agency, positions as teachers in Spanish-speaking countries, and in the nine States of the Union in which teachers were obliged to have a knowledge of that language. He informed them that they would soon be placed. It is understood that The Great Agency sent out more than 9,000 letters. The fee for its services was $2, which was to be sent with the application. As Barcel figured it, the Government alleges, he stood a chance to make about $18,000 with only the cost of postage and rent of desk room as his investment.

The scheme worked quite well for a time, but the mailing lists were not as up-to-date as Barcel had hoped. Large quantities of mail began to arrive at the New York office, and the other occupants of the large room became interested and wondered who H. N. Barcel and The Great Agency were and what they would look like when they arrived.

Before long many letters began to arrive stamped with the Post Office announcement that they could not be delivered as the persons to whom they were addressed could not be found. All these letters had been mailed from Chicago, and bore the New York address. Finally, the Post Office authorities became interested in the mail of The Great Agency, and opened one or two of the returned letters. They found the damaging circular, and after further quiet investigation the fraud order was issued.

In the meantime, one of the tenants of the big room where Barcel had rented desk room became tired of the litter of The Great Agency's mail and gathered up a small bale of it and expressed it to Chicago. The postal authorities wired and intercepted it, and are holding it as additional evidence against the time when "H. N. Barcel," or whatever his name may be, is in the hands of the Federal authorities.

The postal officials do not know how many two-dollar bills had been sent to The Great Agency, but all will be returned to their owners as soon as the mail ceases arriving.

"FRAMERS OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE U.S.A." NO.10

Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Md.
"Father of Religious Liberty in America"

HISTORY proves, to their eternal honor, that the Catholics were the first in America to advocate the Freedom of all sects to worship at any shrine they chose to bend a knee. Of all the cavaliers of Maryland, none were more noble, and none adored Liberty more than Charles Carroll, who, with his kinsman, Archbishop John Carroll, strove for the hereditary rights of mankind to practice Civil and Religious Liberty. Carroll was one of the richest and most learned men in the Colonies, and when he proudly affixed his name to our immortal Declaration of Independence he courted the confiscation of his vast estates. A bystander facetiously remarked, as he did so, "There goes a few millions." He was elected to the National Convention which adopted the Constitution of the United States, but illness forbade his attendance. His cousin, though, Daniel Carroll, signed our National Law, which forever guarantees to Americans Civil, Religious and Personal Liberty. Carroll's manners were easy, affable and graceful; in all the elegancies of polite society few men were his superiors. His hospitality was nothing short of royal, and he was a lifetime user of light wines and barley brews. He died in his 95th year, the last survivor of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and was looked upon with reverential regard by rich and poor alike. Fifty-eight years ago Anheuser-Busch launched their great institution, and have always brewed honest beers—the kind the illustrious Carroll loved to quaff. Day by day their famous brews have grown in popular favor until 7500 people are constantly employed to keep pace with the public demand. Their great brand—BUDWEISER—because of its quality, purity, mildness and exquisite flavor, exceeds the sale of all other beers by millions of bottles.

McLOUGHLIN IN SEABRIGHT TENNIS TOURNAMENT BEATS MAHAN EASILY—OTHER SPORTING NEWS

M'LOUGHLIN WANTS THE ACHELIS CUP

Californian Tennis Star Defeats Lyle E. Mahan in First Round at Seabright.

SEABRIGHT, N. J., Aug. 9.—Maurice McLoughlin, with his shock of auburn hair, his happy grin, and his bullet serve, flashed into the Eastern tennis world today in quest of the Achelis Cup. The Californian has come East this trip to vindicate himself for last year's defeat in the "national" by R. Norris Williams. His start today was more in the way of a tuning up for the big tournament at Forest Hills the last of this month. The scarlet tanager from the Coast doesn't need much tuning. He's fit right now.

The Achelis Cup is just at present in the possession of R. Norris Williams and "Maurie" wants it, and wants it badly before the end of the week. In fact, "Mac" would like to get every cup that Williams has.

McLoughlin warmed up in the first round today by defeating 6 feet 3 inches of Lyle E. Mahan. He won without overexerting himself a great deal, 6—4, 6—1. Mahan made McLoughlin play in the first set, and twice broke through his service. The towering Mahan was by no means a cinch for the Californian, and many times he outwitted his nimble opponent in such a way as to leave McLoughlin grinning with a slight embarrassment.

McLoughlin was seemingly ill at ease at times on the left side of the court, and in the fifth game of the first set Mahan's service was puzzling to the Westerner, so that Mahan went through to a smashing victory at 9—7. In the second set, the sixth game dallied from deuce to Mahan's advantage many times before he finally pulled the game out of the fire, 11—9. It was here, also, that he played for all he was worth at McLoughlin's disadvantage in the left side of the court. "Mac's" back hand strokes here were seemingly half hearted compared with the uncanny intuition of his snappy returns later in the match.

Once or twice McLoughlin let himself out and he was the same fascinating, picturesque smasher and player, the most interesting figure in the tennis world. There he goes, poised gracefully on his left toe, his eyes turned skyward riveted on the white ball. He neither jumps nor reaches; he fairly bounds upward. There is the sharp twang of the racquet and the ball whizzes down over the net. It would seem that it would fairly tear up the smooth, green tuft, but it doesn't. It hardly touches the grass before it bounds a low, tantalizing bound, barely high enough for Mahan to pry his racquet under it. There is a commendable effort on Mahan's part to get it back, but it smashes disastrously into the net. Then McLoughlin grins, goes back to his service and bounds up at it again.

You'd think that Mahan would be tall enough to stretch up for anything within the court, but time and again McLoughlin lobbed the ball just high enough over his head to thwart his best intentions. He had Mahan covering a lot of ground chasing the ball in futile effort. He made him run himself into defeat.

McLoughlin has brought a new youngster from the coast with him this trip. He is Ward Dawson, who will play with him in the doubles. Dawson is 24 years old, but doesn't like to be called a boy any more. He is brimful of confidence, and today beat the Philadelphia schoolboy, Sidney Thayer, Jr., 6—1, 6—4. S. Howard Voshell defeated D. Morgan easily, 6—0, 6—1, and will go against McLoughlin tomorrow. Dawson will play B. S. Prentice, who won from B. C. Law today by default.

H. A. Throckmorton, the metropolitan junior champion, won impressively from A. H. Man, Jr., 6—2, 6—1, and will engage F. C. Inman tomorrow. Inman went through the first round today by defeating L. B. Durham.

The opening of the tournament brought out a large gallery to the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club's attractive home, where additional stands have been erected for the big crowd which is expected to witness the matches during the week.

In the first game of the first set of the Mahan-McLoughlin match, Mahan won on his service, 4—1. McLoughlin took the next one the same way. In the third game McLoughlin broke through Mahan's service and won 4—love. In the fourth game Mahan rallied and returned McLoughlin's service so handily that he won, 6—4. He also won the next game, 9—7, and although McLoughlin took the seventh game at love, Mahan smashed through to a victory in the eighth game and made it 4—all. McLoughlin settled down then, however, and won the next two games and set.

McLoughlin didn't have so much trouble with Mahan in the second set. "Mac" broke through his service and won the first game and ran away with the second, Mahan being unable to handle the vicious smashes which McLoughlin whanged over the net. It was not until the fifth game that Mahan was able to interrupt McLoughlin's rush, and then he carried the game to deuce several times before he finally won it, 11—9. Mac took the next two games easily.

One match was played in the invitation doubles, T. R. Pell and B. S. Prentice defeating A. H. Man, Jr., and C. L. Johnston, Jr. The summary:

Two McTeagues Box; One Wins.

Two McTeagues, Young Mike and the original Mike, both of Ireland, were contestants in two of the bouts at the Olympic Athletic Club in Harlem last night, but only one was successful. Mike McTeague, the middleweight champion of Ireland, easily outpointed Johnny Baker of Harlem in the main ten-round bout. The Irishman had the better of his opponent throughout and was the aggressor from the start. He had Baker bleeding from the nose and mouth from the sixth round until the finish as a result of his stinging blows.

Two six-round bouts served as the other feature events. The first brought together Young Mike McTeague, a lightweight, and Charles Warner of the west side, and the latter was entitled to the honors at the final bell.

In the other six-round bout, which served as a semi-final, Young Larry, the paperweight champion of the west side, and Dummy Mason of the east side were the principals, and it was the best bout of the evening. Both boxers fought fast and hard for the full six rounds. Larry landed the most clean blows, and in the sixth session he sent his opponent to the floor with a hard right hand blow to the jaw. The west side boxer was entitled to the honors.

WOMEN PLAY FOR TITLE.

Thirty Entrants in Tennis Tournament for Long Island Championship.

With thirty of the best players in the metropolitan district in competition the women's tennis championship of Long Island started yesterday on the courts of the Woodmere Club at Woodmere, L. I.

Miss Lucile Weil had her net gains tested by Miss Sachs, who succeeded in forcing the match to an extra set. It was not until the end of the third and deciding set that Miss Weil assumed a commanding position and smothered her opponent's returns. The winner was steadier than Miss Sachs and showed superior speed and skill in picking the opening for passes. Miss Weil followed service to the net and placed her shots with unusual skill. Miss Sachs put up a plucky contest and after carrying the second set to deuce broke through her opponent's service, and equalized matters, only to drop the third set by a close score.

Miss Clare Cassel, the playing through champion was at her best and won from Miss A. Sidenberg at 6—4, 6—0. Miss Cassel did not appear at her best in the first set, but once she had the measure of her opponent, she played with a dash and skill that carried everything before it. In the second set Miss Cassel did not allow her opponent a game.

The defeat of Mrs. R. A. Pope was one of the surprises of the tournament. Miss Edith Handy won the match in straight sets without being forced to show her best form. Mrs. Robert Le Josephy in two love sets, and Miss Gertrude Della Torre also captured a straight set match from Miss Blum. The summary:

Long Island Championship.—Women's Singles—First Round—Miss Margaret Grove defeated Mrs. Fox by default; Miss Sheldon defeated Miss Garson, 6—1, 6—0; Mrs. Carlsbach defeated Mrs. Strauss by default; Mrs. Robert Le Roy defeated Mrs. Josephy, 6—0, 6—0; Miss Clare Cassel defeated Miss A. Sidenberg, 6—4, 6—0; Miss Lucille Weil defeated Miss Sachs, 6—3, 3—7, 6—4; Mrs. S. F. Weaver defeated Mrs. Theodore C. Cassebeer by default; Mrs. Rosenthal defeated Miss Abbie Morrison, 6—2, 7—5; Miss Gertrude Della Torre defeated Miss Blum, 6—3, 6—3; Miss Edith Handy defeated Mrs. R. A. Pope, 6—3, 6—2.

WESTERN TENNIS NEAR END.

Walter T. Haynes and Ralph Burdick Win Doubles Title.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Walter T. Hayes and Ralph Burdick won the Western championship tennis doubles at Lake Forest today, and will represent the West in the national elimination tournament, which starts on the courts of the Onwentsia Club tomorrow. They defeated Alexander Squair and Heath Byford, 4—6, 6—1, 6—3, 9—7.

Teamwork was the deciding factor in the match, the winners covering the court well all the time. Squair was rather uncertain on his overhead shots, and several of his lobs hit the net.

In the singles G. M. Church of Princeton University and Heath Byford won in the semi-final round. Church defeated Hayes, 6—1, 6—3, 6—1, mainly because the Chicago player could not handle the Easterner's cross court shots. Byford won from C. G. Hill of Chicago 6—4, 6—4, 6—1.

In the woman's singles Miss Carrie B. Neely of Chicago and Miss Louise Pound of Lincoln, Neb., won their way into the finals, which will be held tomorrow.

Several matches were also decided in the women's doubles. Summary:

Men's Doubles, Championship Round.—Walter T. Hayes and Ralph Burdick of Chicago defeated Heath Byford and Alex. Squair of Chicago, 4—6, 6—1, 6—3, 8—7.

Men's Singles.—Fifth Round—C. G. Hill, Chicago, defeated H. Raeder, Chicago, 6—0, 6—4.

Semi-Finals.—G. M. Church, Princeton, N. J., defeated Walter T. Hayes, Chicago, 6—1, 6—3, 6—1; Heath Byford, Chicago, defeated C. G. Hill, Chicago, 6—4, 6—4, 6—1.

Women's Singles—Semi-Final Round—Miss Carrie B. Neely, Chicago, defeated Mrs. C. V. Adams, Evanston, 3—6, 7—3, 6—1; Miss Louise Pound, Lincoln, Neb., defeated Miss Marion Steever, Highland Park, Ill., 6—3, 7—5.

HUMPHREYS FOR A. A. U. PRESIDENCY

Rubien and Other Delegates Favor Olympic Club Man —Surprises of Meet.

By FREDERICK W. RUBIEN.
Secretary-Treasurer A. A. U.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 9.—"Track and field athletics were immeasureably benefited when the Olympic Club of this city won the senior championship of the Amateur Athletic Union on Saturday, following their triumph in the juniors on the previous day. For a long time the East has reigned supreme, and with this continued supremacy became overconfident. Now it is a different story. The West is out for more glory, and from what I have observed in my short stay here the material is at hand to gain it. I was surprised indeed when upon totaling the points it was found that the Irish-American A. C. had lost the team championship. There is no use offering excuses for the Eastern boys. They lost and accepted their defeat manfully. The loss of McDonald and McGrath counted heavily against the Winged Fistites.

"If there ever was any feeling in the West against the Amateur Athletic Union—and at times there have been petty squabbles—there is absolutely none now, and in 1916 a California man may be found at the head of the governing amateur athletic organization. William Humphreys, President of the Olympic Club, is the man proposed to succeed Alfred J. Lill, Jr., of Boston, who will retire from the cabinet of the Amateur Athletic Union, after serving two terms. Humphreys's boom was launched at a dinner given to the visitors at the Olympic Club on Saturday night, and the announcement was greeted with long rounds of applause. All of the members of the National Championship Committee here are in favor of his candidacy.

There were so many surprises in the championships on Saturday that it would take too long to relate them all. Perhaps the most interesting of them was the downfall of Norman Taber, but the spectacular feature to me was Oliver Millard's finish within a yard of Kolehmainen in the five-mile run. He is thirty-seven years old, and one of the wonders of the track. Millard started competition only five years ago, and today he is without doubt second only to Kolehmainen in distance running. He is the only man who has twice won the steep climb up Mt. Tamalpais.

It was in training for this event that Maillard developed his wonderful stamina. There is no more dangerous contestant for the modified marathon which will be run through the streets tomorrow than this same Millard and it would not be surprising if he triumphed over Kolehmainen. Other Eastern boys who will start in this event are Glanakopulos, Kyronen, and Pores of the Millrose A. A. and Hugh Honohan of the New York A. C.

Altogether the senior and junior championships were the greatest in history. Fifteen thousand persons saw the events.

Abel Kiviat of the Irish club ran one of the most disappointing races of the meet. He finished fourth in the mile, lacking the fighting spirit which we of the East have often admired in him. Kiviat may announce his retirement from athletics upon his return to New York.

Joey Ray, the sturdy little Chicago boy had four yards to spare in the mile. Taber made the pace to within 125 yards of the finish when Ray came along with a rush and relieved him of the lead.

Another big surprise in the seniors was Sloman of the Olympic Club, an eighteen-year-old schoolboy, who finished a yard behind Ted Meredith when the University of Pennsylvania wonder ran the 440 straightaway in 47 seconds flat, equalling Long's world record. There was a lull in the wind at the time Meredith competed, but the Championship Committee decided before the games to accept no records.

Morse of New York will bear watching. I think he will be one of the country's best sprinters before long. He displayed remarkable form here Saturday in the 220-yard dash.

In the century Loomis triumphed only by inches. At ninety yards Meyer of the Irish-American A. C. was the leader. Muchs and Talbott were the factors in the big weight-throwing upsets.

Two big features are on the program for tomorrow, the fifteen-mile "modified marathon" and an intersectional medley relay in which picked teams from the East, Middle West, and West will start. The distances will be 220, 440, 880 yards, and one mile. We have picked Morse, Salem Crescent A. C., New York; Meredith, Meadowbrook A. C., Philadelphia; Caldwell, Boston A. A., and Taber, Boston A. A., to carry our colors.

All the athletes here are wearing buttons boosting Newark for the 1916 championships.

AFTER DECATHLON HONORS.

A. N. Richards, Illinois A. C., Leading in A. A. U. Event at Fair.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 9.—Sixteen athletes struggled today for four and one-half hours in the first five events of the Decathlon, which is being decided at the Panama-Pacific Exposition stadium, while scores were endeavoring to keep up with the intricate system of point recording.

The five events contested were the 100-meter dash, high jump, broad jump, putting 16-pound shot, and 400-meter flat race.

According to unofficial figures the following is the standing of the first eight men:

A. N. Richards, Illinois A. C., 4005.23; C. A. Brundage, Chicago A. A., 3588.78; John Jacobs, Oklahoma University, 3541.36; H. Goelitz, Chicago A. A., 3425.40; A. H. Hutyhinlon, Illinois A. C., 3317.79; Fred Tompson, Los Angeles A. C., 3243.48; D. F. Ahearn, Illinois A. C., 2923.45; Chester Fee, Multnomah A. C., Portland, 2906.

With the exception of Fred Stormer of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce and E. Knourek of the Illinois Athletic Association, who dropped out after competing in three events, the remainder of the competitors are following closely on the heels of the leaders. None of the Decathlon Olympic records was approached.

The University of Chicago had no trouble in winning the open mile championship relay of the Amateur Athletic Union with a team composed of Leroy Campbell, John B. Eathed, B. Desmond, and H. A. Stegeman. The Boston A. A., the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, and Los Angeles A. C. teams finished in the order named.

The 400-meter flat relay race went to the team of the Chicago A. A., which defeated the only other entrant, the Los Angles A. A., in 41 3-5 seconds, a new world's figure. Owing to the brisk wind that was blowing down the straightaway the record will not be allowed. The winning team was made up of Harold Smith, J. Loomis, A. Booth, and Andrew Ward.

The final events, in the Decathlon, which will be decided tomorrow, are the 110-meter high hurdles, pole vault, javelin throw, discus throw, and 1,500-meter race.

Decatur Players Strike for Salary.

DECATUR, Ill., Aug. 9.—The players on the Decatur Three "I" Baseball Club, with the exception of Manager Duggan and Pitcher McCabe, went on a strike today and refused to play Bloomington, when they did not receive their salaries in full from the club. One player, it was said, got his check in full and other members of the team took exception to this. Manager Lindsay of Bloomington consented to playing two games tomorrow and today's game was not forfeited.

American Speed Boat Races.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Twenty of the speediest boats in the country have been entered to compete for the American championship speed boat races to be held here Aug. 28 to Sept. 4, it was announced today. Included in the entries is the Disturber IV, of Chicago which has made close to 60 miles an hour in trial spins, and the Black Demon of Terre Haute, Ind., a mile-a-minute craft. Peter Pan VII, flying the flag of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club of Toronto, is expected to be among the starters.

KRAMER MAY RETIRE FROM CYCLE RACING

Opposed by Riders' Combine, Champion Believes He Has Lost Form.

After holding the professional cycling title for fourteen years, Frank L. Kramer of East Orange, N. J., may retire from active competition at the end of the season. He admits that he has apparently reached the end of his racing career. Kramer is not riding in his old form. Alfred Goullet, the Australian cyclist, leads him in the championship percentage column, with the remaining races for the national title to be decided before Sept. 1.

The passing of Kramer takes from cycling the best known rider since Major Taylor. Kramer has about $200,000 invested in first mortgage bonds, all earned by his cycling. The champion was born at Evansville, Ind., Nov. 21, 1880. He developed tubercular symptoms at the age of 15, and to give Frank outdoor exercise his father bought a bicycle. The boy soon became an expert rider and within two years was a contender for the amateur championship. He captured the title in 1898 and held it two years.

Kramer competed in professional races in 1900, finishing second to Major Taylor for the American professional championship. He became champion in 1901, holding the title fourteen consecutive years. In 1912 he won the world's championship. That was the only time he competed in a world's title race, although during twelve of the fourteen years he held the championship against all-comers he was considered the world's greatest rider.

During the racing seasons of 1906, 1907, 1913, and 1914 Kramer defeated all his rivals in Europe. In 1906 and 1907 he won the Grand Prix of Paris, worth $2,500 to the winner. His appearance in European races attracted record crowds at the tracks in Paris, Berlin, Brussels, Copenhagen, and other capitals. He was second to Georges Carpentier, the French boxer, in the athletes' popularity contest in 1913. In the same year he was a guest of honor, with the French Premier and other Cabinet officers, after his victory in the Grand Prix.

Every season he receives a bonus of $7,500 for riding exclusively on the tracks of the Cycle Racing Association at Newark, Boston, Philadelphia, Sheepshead Bay, Chicago, and Toronto. All prize money won by the champion, never less than $5,000 a season, makes his income about $12,500. Kramer's season on European tracks netted him $5,000, his contracts stipulating that sum with all expenses. His European managers gambled with the track promoters, making more money than Kramer, who would never ride on a percentage basis. In 1905 he refused an offer of $15,000 to race in Australia.
